PERENNIALS FOR CUT FLOWERS.

Address by Prof. H. B. Dorner, of the Department of Floriculture, University of Illinois, Before the Illinois State Florists' Association at Urbana, March 14, 1922.

Wide Range of Useful Plants.

Among the plants producing flowers suitable for cutting, the herbaceous perennials have not received the attention they deserve. They should be more commonly grown, as they add variety at a time when good flowers are scarce.

One should not advocate growing them on the basis on which they are often advertised. An advertisement recently received states "that these plants cost you nothing after they are once planted, and that they give you an abundance of cut flowers every year." This statement is not true, for the garden of herbaceous perennials is one of the most expensive to maintain. What may be said about the perennial garden may also be said about these same plants when grown for cut-flowers. The peony is perhaps the perennial which requires the least attention after planting, but even it cannot be neglected if it is to be a paying crop.

If one goes into the growing of herbaceous perennials he should do so with the intention of giving them the same attention he would his roses or carnations.

For convenience, herbaceous perennials may be placed in two groups: (a) those which do not want to be disturbed for a number of years, and (b), those which must be divided and replanted every two to four years. The former group includes those forms having large fleshy roots, such as the peony and poppy. The latter group includes those forming large heavy crowns of which multiply rapidly, forming dense masses or mats. The achilleas and sunflowers represent this group.

The second group of plants is, without doubt, the most costly to maintain because they must be lifted, divided, and replanted every two to four years. If this is not done the crop will deteriorate.

It is also a known fact that in this group the best crop of flowers is produced the second year. Before the second year the plants have not sufficiently recovered, and after it they begin to deteriorate.

Even though the first planting was all that was necessary, the up-keep must be considered. Under up-keep will come fertilizing, cultivating, weeding, and mulching. Herbaceous perennials that remain in one place for any length of time deplete the soil, so fertilizer must be added. Cultivating is just as necessary as for an annual crop. Weeding is more difficult because the perennial weeds get mixed up with the clumps and are hard to remove. In some parts of the country where there is much thawing and freezing the plants must be mulched for protection.

Success in the growing of perennials demands a soil as well prepared as for the growing of a good crop of vegetables.
The soil should be prepared deeply and manure and other fertilizer added as required, for the plants are not to be moved for two or three years.

The plantation should also be so situated that it may be watered when necessary.
Water is just as important for a crop of herbaceous perennials as for annuals.
Planting is best done in rows sufficiently far apart for full development of the plant and for ease in cultivating. The distance between the plants in the rows will be from one to three feet, depending upon the variety.
Keeping the soil cultivated will keep the weeds in check and will conserve the moisture.

The majority of herbaceous perennials are easily propagated by division. The plants are lifted, split into the desired number of parts, all grass and weeds removed, and then planted. Perennials may be divided either in the fall or spring. If done in the fall it should be early enough so that the plants may become established before cold weather sets in. Spring planting should be done before much growth has taken place.

Some varieties are grown from top or root cuttings. Oriental poppies, Phlox paniculata, anchusas, and gaillardias are good examples.

Where the plant is a true species or a variety has been fixed, it may be grown from seed. Some varieties, as the hybrid larkspurs and columbines, are grown from seed even though not fixed, because practically all the seedlings are better than the true species.

Seeds may be sown out of doors any time from spring until late summer. The seedlings should have time to become well established before cold weather. Seeds may also be sown in flats in March or April and pricked off into flats or pots and planted out later.

Very few of the herbaceous perennials force readily during the winter months. They may, however, be brought into flower in the spring. In growing perennials for cut-flowers, plant only those that will thrive under ordinary conditions. Those forms requiring special care are usually neglected, due to the press of other work at the time.

Best Kinds for Florists' Use.

An attempt will be made to discuss briefly some of the best varieties of herbaceous perennials for florists' use.

Achillea ptarmica fl. pl.—There are two varieties of this white flower that are of especial interest, the Pearl and Perry's White. The latter is the newer variety and differs from the former in its larger and whiter flowers. Boul de Neige is a dwarfier form. These achilleas are invaluable, both for vase and funeral work. Continues in bloom about six weeks during midsummer. Easily propagated by division. New plantings should be made each year as they deteriorate rapidly after the second season.

Achillea filipendulina.—A yellow form with tansy-like foliage, about four feet high and with large flat clusters of yellow flowers, is also very decorative. The flowers, if cut when mature, may be dried for winter bouquets. This species does not mat like A. ptarmica so the clumps need not be disturbed for five or six years. Easily propagated by division. Flowers in June and July.

Anemone japonica and its varieties make good cut-flowers for late summer as they do not begin flowering until in August. Growing from two to three feet high, they may be cut with good stems. The colors vary from white through the light to dark pinks. Propagation is usually by root cuttings.

Aquilegias.—While the columbines have a tendency to shatter after a day or two, the odd shape of the flowers and the beautiful colors make them useful as cut flowers. When well grown the flower stalks are from two to three feet in height. When well established the plants should be left undisturbed until they begin to deteriorate, when they should be replaced by seedling stock. The Rocky Mountain columbine, A. caerulea, in its blue and white colors, is the finest of all. A. chrysantha, yellow, is a good long-spurred form. Outside these two, select the long-spurred hybrids which will give a range of color through white, blue, yellow, red, and pink.

Artemesia lactiflora.—It is the only artemesia grown for its flowers. This plant, coming to us from China, produces large panicles of creamy white spiraea-like flowers. Its light and graceful appearance makes it valuable to use among larger and heavier flowers. Blooms from August to September.

Astilbe.—The herbaceous spiraeas or astilbes may easily be grown out of doors if planted in a partly shaded situation and given plenty of water. Both the pink and white forms used for forcing are valuable for cutting. Out of doors they flower in June and July. Propagated by division of the clumps.

Campanula glomerata is one of the few campanulas that makes good cut flowers. This species has the advantage over the other forms of the genus in having the dark blue or purple flowers in a large terminal cluster. Flowers in early May and June. It and its varieties are easily grown from seed. Forms large compact clumps requiring division every three or four years.

H. B. Dorner.

Professor of Floriculture University of Illinois.

Chrysanthemum maximum.—Both the Shasta daisy and the maximum varieties with their large long-stemmed flowers are far superior to the field daisy. All the forms are best grown from seed. Of the maximum kinds, King Edward VII and Mrs. Lothian Bell are good. Some new stock should be grown each year to replace any loss through disease or freezing. It blooms in June and July.

Chrysanthemum leucanthemum.—If this form of daisy is grown, select the newer varieties. The disadvantage of this species is its tendency to spread, but this may be overcome by not allowing it go to seed. The variety White Lady has double flowers somewhat resembling an anemone chrysanthemum. Propagated from seed.

Clematis recta mandshurica.—A few years ago the Department of Agriculture, through its bureau of foreign plant and seed introduction, sent out a large-flowering form of Clematis recta. The plant grows from two to three feet high and produces large masses of white flowers of the size and appearance of C. paniculata. These clusters make a beautiful combination with larger flowers for baskets and wedding bouquets. Probably propagated by seeds which are freely produced. Flowers in June and July.

Coreopsis lanceolata grandiflora.—It is perhaps the best yellow of the summer cut flowers. It is best grown as a biennial as it has a tendency to die out after it produces a heavy crop of flowers. Easily grown from seed.

Delphiniums.—The perennial larkspurs should be more commonly grown as cut flowers. The pure blue flowers make beautiful combinations with pink carnations and roses and also with yellow. The open clusters of belladonna, light blue, and bellamosum, dark blue, are the most easily worked up. While D. formosum is a good dark variety with compact spikes, many of the hybrids are far superior. These hybrids also give a considerable range of color and may be single or double. If not allowed to go to seed, will produce a second crop of flowers late in the season. Easily propagated from seed.

Dianthus plumarius fl. pl.—The double grass pinks are valuable, especially on account of their fragrance. The named varieties may be grown from cuttings or by layers. When grown from seed there is always a certain percentage of singles.

Euphorbia corollata.—A native spurge, produces a wealth of white bloom in late summer. The gypsophila-like flowers last well and may be used in the same way as the annual baby's breath. Propagated by seed or division.

Eryngium amethystinum is mentioned here because its amethyst tinted silvery heads may be dried for winter bouquets, grown from seed.

Gaillardia aristata.—It is similar to the annual blanket flower but is much larger and brighter. Its red and yellow flowers last well in water and are good for cemetery use. This is one of the few herbaceous perennials that flowers throughout the summer. Easily propagated by seed, division, or root cuttings.

Gypsophila paniculata fl. pl.—The double form of baby's breath is so superior to the single that the latter will not be included. This airy, graceful flower works in beautifully with other flowers in bouquets, vases, or designs. It is perhaps one of the best of the herbaceous perennials. It dries beautifully and may be used with the straw flowers. It is propagated by division, cuttings, or grafting. May also be grown from seed but only a small portion come double.

Helianthus multiflorus fl. pl.—It is a double hardy sunflower with a flower like a large zinnia. It needs some protection to prevent it freezing out. Propagated by division. Several of the single forms may be used but the annual form, cucumerifolia and its varieties is superior for cutting. Blooms in July and August.

Helopsis scabra zinniaflora.—Should be grown for its bright orange-yellow zinnia-like flowers. It is not so stiff looking as the double sunflower and is perfectly hardy. It should be propagated by division. H. Pitcheriana semiplena is a semi-double variety. Flowers in July and August.

Heuchera sanguinea.—Varieties may well be grown for their graceful clusters of small bell-like flowers. The varieties vary from white to deep crimson. The named varieties are best propagated by division. Flowers in July and August.

Iris.—Where they can be used locally, many varieties may be grown. Those most common are of the so-called Germanica group which includes the Pallida and Florentina kinds. Propagated by division and should be replanted every four or five years. If transplanted three or four weeks after blooming, they will flower the next year.

Lychnis chaledonica.—Is perhaps the brightest of the few scarlet perennials. Its small, brilliant dianthus-like flowers are arranged in flat compact heads. It grows from two to three feet high. Easily produced from seed.

THE HERBACEOUS GARDEN.

Paeonia albiflora varieties give one of the most valuable outdoor cut flower crops. This plant is so commonly grown that it will be passed over here with the mere statement that it is propagated by division and should be transplanted in the fall. Peonies should not be disturbed until the plants get too large and crowd one another.

Phlox paniculata (decussata).—Gives many beautiful varieties that may be useful, but the white and light pinks are in greatest demand. The white forms were formerly much used in funeral work. These form the largest of all the phlox. Propagated by division or by stem or root cuttings.

Phlox suffruticosa precedes the paniculata type and differs from it mainly in the shape of the inflorescence. Miss Lingard, a white with a pink eye, is the favorite. There are also several pink forms. Propagated like the paniculatas.

Physostegia Virginica.—Another native plant, that is also often used for cutting. The flowers are of a delicate soft pink. There is also a white variety, grows four to five feet high. Propagated easily by division.

Pyrethrum roseum.—With its aster-like flowers from light pink to crimson, should be more commonly grown. The flowers may be cut with 12 to 18-inch stems. Easily grown from seed.

Rudbeckia laciniata, Golden Glow.—It is too well known to need description. It is so easily propagated and so easily grown that it has spread over the country in a very short time. May be serviceable in large decorative work. It blooms in August.

Rudbeckia Newmanii is one of the Black-eyed Susans. It grows about 24 to 30 inches high. Propagated by seed or division.

Solidago virgaurea or its variety pana is a golden rod that should be in every perennial collection. It is the earliest to flower, coming into bloom in May and June with Delphinium belladonna. It should have a ready use at this time as the native golden rods are not yet in flower. Best propagated by division.

Viola cornuti G. Wermig is one of the tufted violas. The flowers are small and of the size and color of a Princess of Wales violet. In England it is bunched like violets and has a ready sale. Propagated by cuttings and division. Prefers a moist, somewhat shaded situation.

Other herbaceous perennials that may be of use to the florist growing his own stock are the various species of hemerocallis, oriental poppies, Scabiosa caucasica, veronicas, aconitum or monk's hood, Eupatorium urticaefolium, and penstemons.

English Potters.

The most remarkable family in England were recently "discovered" at Farnham. They are a family of potters, and have carried on a private pottery business since 1873. They are very independent work people, and do not seek publicity.

Four generations are at work in this quaint pottery, and the total membership of the family is nine. The oldest member, Absoldom Harris, is 90, but he "clocks in" regularly every morning by climbing with surprising agility to the roof of the pottery and winding an ancient timepiece, the beautifully decorated face of which he made out of clay in his early youth.

West end shops readily sell the products of this unique firm, the clay for which is dug up by hand in the back garden.

Their most famous specialty is a jug known as the "Owl," on the production of which their energies are largely bent, and which when complete bears a really remarkable likeness to the bird itself. —Pearson's Weekly.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

With spring now well advanced the social events should be closely watched in order not to miss the coming May or more numerous June weddings. Much business in connection with these affairs at which flowers play such an important part, may be secured by being early on the ground with well planned decorative effects for house and church. Sextons of churches often get advance information regarding these events, while to have a friend or two connected with the principal stationers who make a specialty of wedding announcements gives an additional source for early news that can be used to good advantage.

Should the groom, who usually places the order for bouquets, live out of town, he can be reached by letter and generally will be glad to have ideas and consider propositions made for these important flowers. Being first on the job, with an intelligent description and bid for the work, will often secure the business, when later other influences would be found working against you. Good photographs of wedding decorations, examples of the firm's work accompanying plans and estimates, are effective and sure to make a favorable impression.

In order to keep the store force busy run a special of any quality flower. Sweet peas are now of fine quality and plentiful and, as they are very popular, will, if well featured, almost sell themselves. Small vase baskets that will make quite a showing with 25 sprays and a little green can be used to present a very attractive window.

which, with the addition of a conspicuous price card, should start them moving at once. Single bunches in cornucopias of wax paper, with flowers showing to advantage, are excellent for the late afternoon, appealing to the crowds on their way home.

Keep after the overdue accounts and never let them get very far behind. This is a frequent admonition, but it is now or never during the next few weeks, before the summer season opens and customers get out of town.

FEATURE WINDOW BOXES.

How is the window box campaign progressing? Many retailers hesitate to feature this line, not having facilities for handling plants or filling the boxes. This is not necessary; all that is required is to be enthusiastic on the subject of "The City Beautiful," a knowledge of the most suitable plants, a sample box or two and illustrated lists showing the full line with prices. When orders are secured turn them over to your grower, with whom you have made arrangements, who will be glad to fill and deliver all the work you can secure.

Not one-tenth of the business in this line that is possible is done in any of the large cities and communities. Every additional box that goes into place helps along the good work in making the custom more general. Florists should embrace every opportunity to connect up with or originate a "City Beautiful" campaign, as it is splendid publicity for plants and flowers and bound to increase their use and popularity.

Make a good use of the outdoor flowers and shrubbery as they become available. The early shipments of dogwood from the south can be used to good effect in store and window decoration and is sure to cause comment as to where it came from so early. It is also useful in church wedding decorations.

Southern gladioli have never been seen in such variety and good quality as shipped from Florida and other southern states for the past three months. With the lapse of a month or so during November and December this very decorative flower is now available the year round, and with greater dissemination of the newer choice varieties it will take its place as one of the leading cut flowers.

The most regular demand which at any time is likely to turn a dull day into one of great activity and tax to the utmost the facilities of the store is that for funerals. In fact, were it not for this beautiful custom of sending flowers as a last tribute of respect to departed friends and relatives, half the stores would go out of business, as they care for and cater to no other line. This is a great mistake and in most cases is due to the lack of knowledge and great possibilities in the other branches.

To be able to handle these mortuary orders with despatch, many of which are for out-of-town points and allow but little time to make trains, there should be a plentiful supply of mossed frames and madeup wreaths and other designs of prepared foliage that can be quickly decorated with fresh flowers and finished in the shortest possible time. A good supply of shipping boxes is also essential, as every minute counts and the necessity of fitting two or more together makes a dangerous delay.

The public fancy is now against set designs, sprays being most favored; even very large arrangements can take this form, with palm leaves as a background, using some long stemmed roses, snapdragons, Easter or calla lilies, gladioli, etc. Several of these sections placed on a large easel and the center filled in shorter stemmed stock, a finished arrangement is presented in which every flower shows to the front. This is suitable to represent a society or other large organization, there being plenty of space for lettered ribbons.

Frequently there is a desire for a casket cover, the cost of which, however, at once dampens the ardor. In such cases the substitution of the double spray of long stemmed flowers on palm leaves that will almost, or can be made to entirely cover the casket, with a festooning of smilax at the sides tied at intervals to the edges of the spray with narrow ribbons, will solve the problem at half the cost of the more elaborate floral blanket.

How about your F. T. D. business? Is it increasing as rapidly as you like? It has great possibilities, but they must all be realized through you. It is the energy you put into the movement, the enthusiastic manner in which you exploit the service, the business you create in your own store, that brings immediate results and builds for the future. Always have this country-wide delivery idea featured in window and store, as well as on all stationery and publicity matter that goes out from time to time.

EASTER TRADE.

Business Generally Satisfactory.

Confirming, in most part, the early accounts of the Easter trade in last week's issue, later reports, some of which are presented herewith, show it was generally satisfactory. Although the gross cash receipts were fully as large as in 1921, a considerably greater quantity of stock had to be disposed of to equal the previous totals.

DALLAS, TEX.—The number of sales showed an increase with the Lang Floral & Nursery Co., and in spite of the lower prices, the volume was above last year. Blooming plants of excellent quality were abundant and sold well. In cut flowers, jonquils and hyacinths were not as popular as in former years, but snapdragons, tulips roses, sweet peas and violets went exceptionally well, lilies alone being on the short side. Bulbous stock was plentiful. The rush started late in the week and the shop was crowded to the doors on Saturday. The telegraph delivery business surpassed all previous records and the messenger boys were absent from the store not longer than five minutes during the entire day.

DES MOINES, IA.—The J. S. Wilson Floral Co. state that the volume of trade was an agreeable surprise to them, the sales equalling last year's total. Values on individual items declined 20 to 25 per cent, except Easter lilies, which were the same. The cash income fell off at least 25 per cent and an increase was noted in charge sales, showing that people will buy even if they do not have the ready money. Bulbous stock went well. Lily plants, as usual, had the lead, followed closely by hydrangeas, marguerites and made up baskets. Corsage bouquets of sweet peas and assorted boxes let in cut flowers, orchids and roses moving slowly.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—The Miller Floral Co. reports the volume of business in its local retail shop was equal to that of a year ago, while the firm's wholesale establishment sold 17 per cent more stock. The price for pot plants remained the same, but the value of cut flowers fell off 20 per cent, in which class tulips, daffodils and snapdragons moved slowly. The call for lily, hydrangea, baby and rambler rose and spiraea plants exhausted the supply. While the wholesalers had the largest business in their history and were short on most items, the retail trade showed no improvement, some of them having stock left, it is said.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—An abundant supply of good stock and plenty of customers made a combination that gave a volume of trade for the Saltford Flower Shop fully equal to 1921. Prices showed no decline. Bulbous stock was severely damaged by the warm wave earlier in the week, but toward the latter part the weather turned cold, which helped the other offerings. In cut flowers, violets led in the call, as corsages were never as widely used as was the case this year. Easter lily and hydrangea plants sold well and some fine azaleas went quickly. Both incoming and outgoing telegraph orders were very heavy.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Avenue Floral Co. reports a gratifying increase of 40 per cent in its cash returns, prices being a little lower than in 1921. A great gain was noted in telegraph delivery business, both outgoing and local. The quality of the offerings was excellent, except bulbous stock, which was passe. In plants, anything with a bloom was disposed of, but palms and ferns were not popular. Lilies, roses, carnations, tulips and snapdragons, in the order named, sold rapidly as cut flowers. Local newspaper advertising, to a large extent, was responsible for the increased trade.

TERRE HAUTE, IND.—In spite of the downpour of rain the five days previous to Saturday, the volume of business showed an increase of 10 per cent, with values on individual items much less than a year ago. All cut flowers sold well, except violets, which were of poor quality. The supply of plants was not nearly equal to the call and at least one-third more could have been sold. The results are highly gratifying, due to the fact that the coal miners are on a strike and the entire business of the week was concentrated into Saturday and Sunday.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—Macnair, Florist, reports that the volume of business showed no falling off from 1921, with values maintaining previous levels. Bulbous stock was in good demand. Rambler and other rose plants were popular, the supply of all offerings being more than equal to the call. Ferns and other plants of this type were hard to move. In cut flowers, corsage stock moved quickly, but carnations were more or less of a drag. Business was very slow the first three days of the week, but became brisk toward the end.

WICHITA, KANS.—Chas. P. Mueller says that although the actual quantity of stock sold was more than last year, the cash returns showed a four per cent decline due to the decreased values on individual items. With the exception of lilies, the supply of plants was fully sufficient for all purposes. In cut flowers all classes of stock were equally in demand and the offerings were of very good quality. The weather was all that could be desired until 11 p. m. Sunday, when a slight downfall of hail was experienced.

TACOMA, WASH.—With a 15 per cent greater cash income S. L. Harper was greatly pleased with the volume of business, at practically the same prices for individual items as a year ago. The supply of plants was sufficient, except Easter lilies, a quantity of choice stock being offered. Narcissi also went well, but callas were hard to move. Nearly all cut flowers were disposed of at satisfactory prices. The weather was ideal and the stores were crowded with customers the latter part of the week.

BOSTON, MASS.—Business in this city proved of good proportions, both as to number of sales and volume, which showed no decline over the previous year. Lily of the valley, sweet peas, orchids and gardenias, in cut flowers were the best stock in the market and the first items to close out. Violets were much used for corsages. Carnations sold only fairly well. Bougainvilleas and heathers were the most popular plant offerings and bulbous stock met with good sales.

GYPSOPHILA PANICULATA.

MONTREAL, QUE.—A considerable reduction in prices on individual items, compared with 1921, greatly increased the volume of the business, with the result that the cash receipts were fully equal to last year. The plant offerings of lilies, hydrangeas, double yellow tulips and pink tulips moved well, spiraeas and ferns finding little sale. In cut flowers, roses, lilies and tulips of good quality sold the best in the order named, while daffodils and carnations scarcely moved.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—With the volume of trade fully maintaining previous levels and no change noted in prices, Gustav Bartholme is greatly pleased with the business. Bulbous stock was on the short side, although well advanced owing to the warm weather. Plant supply was fully equal to the demand, lilies, roses and hydrangeas being in the lead as far as sales were concerned. Sweet peas and roses among the cut flower offerings sold well, as did corsage flowers.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Hoyt Bros. say that the volume of business was about the same as last year, with no advance in prices. In cut flowers, daffodils, carnations, roses and sweet peas, all choice stock, were popular. In plants, cyclamens, cinerarias and primulas were draggy, but Easter lilies, hydrangeas and rose bushes supplied a good demand. The cloudy, rainy weather and poor industrial conditions were factors that worked against a lively business.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—With a 10 per cent increase in the number of sales at slightly lower values, Baum's Home of Flowers is highly gratified with the results. Roses, carnations, lilies, sweet peas, orchids pansies, and lily of the valley were the most popular cut flower offerings, red roses alone being scarce. Lily plants of exceptional quality went well, azaleas moving slowly because of their high price. Medium priced stock was in the best demand.

RACINE, WIS.—The Brux Greenhouses reports that while the cash receipts were about the same as last year, 25 per cent more stock was sold. The cut flower demand was excellent, lilies, carnations, snapdragons and sweet peas going exceptionally well. Roses did not go as well as hoped. All plants were of very fine quality and cleaned up, even geraniums meeting a good demand. The firm sold more stock than any other previous year.

PORTLAND, ORE.—In spite of stormy weather and general business conditions, Clarke Bros. advise that sales were about the same as in 1921, with no reduction in prices. There was an abundance of cut flowers of good quality, which aside from corsage stock, did not clean up as well as hoped for. Plants were numerous and cleaned up well, lilies, hydrangeas, tulips, roses and hyacinths going in about the order named.

BRISTOL, TENN.—Fairmount Gardens advise that the total cash receipts were 25 per cent more than in 1921, with prices generally about the same. In plants, begonias, hydrangeas and Easter lilies were the best sellers. Corsage flowers for use in bouquets were in heavy demand. The quality and supply of all stock was excellent.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The ninth annual garden exhibition for boys and girls will be held in this city, September 29-30.

PORT ANGELES, WASH.—E. Schlager recently opened a range of greenhouses and will grow plants, cut flowers and nursery stock.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—Russel Bros. installed a modern flower shop in the Lyndon building recently. The firm conducts a greenhouse business at Stiles Station, where they specialize in bedding plants.

THE S. A. F.

Fifth National Flower Show.

Matters in relation to the recent Fifth National Flower Show, held in Indianapolis, are gradually being cleared up. The immense amount of detail incident to a show of this character is not easily disposed of, but the committee has little concern as to the ultimate report pleasing everybody interested. Arrangements have been made to clear off the premium list this week, checks for all awards going forward. There will be, perhaps, a short delay in getting out the medals, as these are being struck at the United States mint and no guarantee as to time is obtainable.

Owing to the many contingencies due to the changing of the location of the show, coupled with the secretary's necessary presence in the exhibition city some time ahead of the opening date, and during which the final schedule had to be published, one or two inaccuracies may be pardoned, although, happily, none were of importance. Correction, however, should be made publicly in regard to one. The Ladies' Society of American Florists very kindly offered two premiums, which, unfortunately, through a clerical oversight were classed with a third, offered by a prominent member of that organization, Mrs. J. C. Vaughan, who also wished it to be credited to the Ladies' Society of American Florists, with the result that proper credit was not given them in the schedule. The classes were: No. 515—A prize of $25 for the best table decoration arranged by a member of the Ladies' Society of American Florists, and No. 142, for the best narcissus group covering 25 square feet, which prize was to be apportioned by the management in whatever manner they saw fit, and so were put over into the section for private and amateur exhibitors. The error was made in crediting Mrs. Vaughan with all three prizes, while she should only have been credited with one, and not even with that, because she wanted the Ladies' Society of American Florists to have the credit for her personal donation.

Checks to the guarantors are now going through the regular course. The delay in a complete report is due almost wholly to the adjustment of various expense accounts.

Proceedings for 1921.

The volume of the 1921 proceedings has been delayed in publication through the great activities of the society due to the National Flower Show and other matters. The volume is now on the press and will be mailed in about two weeks to all members. The volume will contain an up-to-date list of all members in good standing, and if any member's dues accounts do not bring them into the good standing list, publication of their names in that list is still possible if they will make immediate remittance to the secretary. It is some time since such a list has been published and surely it is an advantage to have a place in it, so this section of the book is being kept open to the last minute.

Kansas City Convention.

The dates for the Kansas City convention are near at hand, August 15-17. A preliminary plan covering the trade exhibition section has been prepared, but not for reservation purposes. The final plan will be settled as soon after May 1 as possible, and all copies for distribution mailed at one time, so that all prospective exhibitors are treated alike in the matter of choice of location. The exhibition building is well suited to the purposes of our exhibition and all locations are good, but selections will be booked in the order of first come first served.

National Publicity Campaign.

The national publicity campaign continues in active progress and a batch of subscriptions will be reported at the end of the present month. The value of our slogan was well demonstrated in the April 15 issue of the Saturday Evening Post, which used the slogan as a sub-head to one of its most amusing stories. It might be well to remember that a page in this wonderful publication costs in the neighborhood of $6,000.

Proof sheets of the advertisements to be used in the summer months, as authorized by the publicity committee at its Indianapolis meeting, will shortly be mailed to all subscribers.

Carnation Bulletin.

We have just received from the Rhode Island Experiment Station, at Kingston, Bulletin No. 187, entitled, "A Study of the Influence of Physical Soil Factors and of Various Fertilizer Chemicals on the Growth of the Carnation Plant," part one by F. R. Pember and G. E. Adams and part two by F. R. Pember. We hope to have some comment on this important bulletin in a later issue, and in the meantime, present summary of the investigations.

SUMMARY.

Retaining the same soil plus manure for five years reduced the yield of grade 1 and grade 2 flowers by an average of about five per cent below that from fresh soil and manure.

Supplementing soil and manure with fertilizer chemicals slightly increased the production of flowers during the first season, especially where the amount of nitrogen applied was small, but this increase did not persist during the two following seasons.

During the three seasons, 1913 to 1916, when the same soil and manure was supplemented with fertilizer chemicals, the best yields, on the whole, were obtained where the amount of nitrogen added was the smallest.

When used with soil and manure the second year, nitrogen and potassium oxid at the rate of 1,000 pounds of each per acre proved toxic to the plants as was anticipated, whether accompanied by high or low phosphorus. This was especially noticeable in the No. 2 bench sections during the season of 1914-1915.

Where nitrogen was added in large amounts to either soil and manure, or to sand, the percentage of split calyxes of grade 1 and grade 2 flowers was reduced, even when added in such amounts as to depress the growth of the plants and the production of the flowers.

In applying fertilizer chemicals in the various experiments as supplements to soil and manure or as the sole source of plant food, as with sand, the best yields were obtained where the phosphorus was relatively high in comparison with the nitrogen and potassium.

The experiments show the large range in which fertilizer chemicals can be supplied to the carnation plant after it is established in fresh soil and manure, or sand, without causing toxicity; however, large applications have an injurious accumulative effect.

The addition of 5.5 tons of limestone per acre to soil and manure for the season of 1916-1917, had no marked effect on the growth of the plants nor did it promote chlorosis, while the addition at intervals during the season of over 1,300 pounds of ferrous sulphate per acre to the limed soil and manure depressed the production of flowers, without improving the color of the foliage.

Varying the concentration of the soil solution by the addition of large amounts of fertilizer chemicals to certain soil sections early in the growth of the plants compared to adding the same amount from the middle to the last of the season, for a period of three years, had no noticeable effect upon the growth or production of the plants, or the splitting of the calyxes.

Soil sections in which gravel had been mixed with the soil, produced but about three-quarters as many grade 1 and grade 2 flowers during the three years as otherwise similarly treated sections.

With the amount of nitrogen used in the comparison, it made little difference in the total yield for the three years of grade 1 and grade 2 flowers whether the nitrogen was added in nitrate or lime or in sulphate of ammonia.

The addition of sulphate of ammonia at the rate of 800 pounds of nitrogen per acre increased the lime requirement by the Jones method 2,100 pounds over that where nitrate of lime was applied.

Adding finely-cut rye straw to the soil to change the physical condition gave an increase of about ten per cent of grade 1 and grade 2 flowers over the yield where green soy bean plants were added.

A considerable difference in the soil moisture content, or the addition of sodium silicate to the soil had no noticeable influence on the production of flowers or the splitting of the calyxes.

Ordinary sand, to which fertilizer chemicals had been added, in many cases gave as good results as soil and manure or soil and manure plus chemicals.

The beneficial effect of adding commercial peat to certain of the sand sections was most marked in the bed sections where it probably prevented excessive leaching of the added nutrients, as well as water, into the subsoil.

The amount of phosphorus in comparison to the amount of potassium and nitrogen absorbed by the carnation plant was small.

The addition of acid phosphate to sand at the rate of over six tons per acre during the season proved beneficial to the growth of the plants, especially when accompanied by large applications of nitrogen.

Although the plants were able to absorb considerable potassium from the sand, large amounts seemed to be beneficial when accompanied with excessive applications of nitrogen and phosphorus.

The actual nutritional needs of the carnation plant are probably supplied when the dry material contains about two per cent nitrogen, one-half per cent phosphoric acid and 1.5 to two per cent of potassium oxid. The relation of the nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potassium oxid as found in many of the plants was about 4:1:6, showing the potassium to be relatively high.

Owing to the fact that most soils, as well as stable manure, are somewhat deficient in phosphorus, of which, furthermore, there is a very low recovery, the addition of this element to the soil and manure compost in its making or when put into the house would undoubtedly improve the balance of the nutrients for the carnation plant as well as for most plants.

The application of acid phosphate at the rate of one ton per acre (or about five pounds per 100 square feet) would give good returns under most conditions. The addition of much larger amounts of acid phosphate would not prove toxic.

Where the use of a complete commercial fertilizer is considered necessary, one relatively high in phosphorus and medium in nitrogen and potassium, having an analysis of 4:10:4 or thereabouts, would give beneficial results in most cases when applied at the rate of one ton per acre or about five pounds per 100 square feet.

In the trials of house-grown versus field-grown plants, the plants being put in the sections during the second week in July in the former case and during the fourth week in August in the latter, the production on the whole was not markedly different.

San Francisco.

EASTER RUSH CLEANS UP MOST STOCK.

Easter trade fully came up to the expectations of the florists. There was very little business accomplished, April 14, and fears were expressed by the retailers as to the ultimate outcome as most of them were fully stocked. The rush began Saturday and continued without abatement until Sunday noon and it was with great difficulty that the stores were able to handle the business and take care of proper delivery. Owing to the lateness of the holiday there was a heavy cut of all seasonable flowers and plantsmen were kept at their wit's end to keep the rambler roses back. A large lot of Lillium giganteum was offered, mostly pot grown. While there was plenty of cut lilies most of them seemed to be short stemmed and brought $10 to $12 per dozen retail. A number of the stores cleaned up on both the cut and pot stock, it is said. A heavy crop of roses was sent in and prices advanced sharply Friday and Saturday when keen buying commenced. More fancy Mrs. Chas. Russell could have been sold if obtainable. Red roses were exceptionally good, notably Hadley, which sold well. Ophelia, Prima Donna, Columbia and Premier sold up closely. Cecile Brunner was more plentiful than it has been in several months and outdoor Ulrich Brunner was obtainable in limited quantities. Carnations were at their best and went at fairly good prices. Laddie was the most popular and ran short as usual. Sweet peas were plentiful and fine. Outdoor irises were plentiful but did not meet with much favor. Heavy supplies of tulips were offered but they moved slowly. Fancy narcissi was on the short side and freesias were scarce. The season for Dutch hyacinths is about over and there were not nearly enough to go around. A fine business was enjoyed in lily of the valley both the pot and cut material. Cattleyas and gardenias were scarce and high prices ruled. Perennials were in heavy supply at reasonable prices. Quantities of fruit blossoms made their appearance most of them being used for decorative work. Blooming plants were of excellent quality, medium sized pot roses taking the preference over the larger stock. Many stores showed trained plants and some reported clean-ups. Many ericas were sold, the smaller ones going the best. All well flowered azaleas went quickly at satisfactory values. Bougainvilleas in five and six-inch pots were offered as a novelty and proved popular. Greens were numerous.

RETAIL FLORISTS' ASS'N. BANQUET, MAY 6.

Plans for the annual banquet of the Retail Florists' Association May 6, are progressing rapidly and President Albert O. Stein and his energetic committee are hoping to make it the best one the association has ever held. Chairman John Kilroy, of the picnic committee, has visited several beautiful spots in the bay region and a site for the outing will soon be decided.

NOTES.

The entire plant and all the nursery stock of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, Eureka, has been purchased by David S. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens Co., Queens, N. Y., as stated in our issue of April 15, page 646, and will be operated as a branch of the latter concern. W. B. Clarke, San Jose, will act as exclusive sales agent for the entire output of the Eureka plant, who was formerly in charge of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries' branch at San Jose, and is well and favorably known to trade of California.

The regular monthly meeting of the Dahlia Society of California was held at the Palace hotel, April 20. J. S. Munroe presented an address on "Preparing the Soil." H. T. Hevig was recently appointed secretary of the society, succeeding F. C. Burns. San Rafael, who occupied the position for many years.

Podesta & Baldocchi carried a large stock of rhododendrons and specimen rambler roses. V. L. Podesta said the firm was greatly pleased with the holiday business.

The new shop of the Francis Floral Co., was beautifully decorated for Easter and reflects great credit on Miss Louise Schlotz for her artistry.

The Japanese chrysanthemum growers on the peninsula, in San Mateo county, have added outdoor tulips this spring.

The Art Floral Co. reported a fine Easter trade. They received good specimen rambler roses from Eric James.

Eric James, Elmhurst, never grew finer rambler roses for the Easter trade than he did this year.

STOCK IN FAIR DEMAND.

With the passing of Easter the market has once more settled down to ordinary times. Stock is generally in heavy supply and moves slowly. Roses are more than plentiful, the best bringing $20 per 100, while the shorter grades sell at $4 to $6 per 100. Carnations are more numerous than any other flower and there are many left in the wholesalers' refrigerators at the close of the day's business. Sweet peas have now reached the zenith of good quality and it is expected that from now on they will be on the down grade. Quantities of Easter lilies are seen. Cool weather at present is expected to hold them back. Some of the best Darwin tulips seen this season have arrived and cleaned up because of limited supply. Snapdragon is a very welcome flower and liberal arrivals sell well at $12.50 per 100. Miscellaneous seasonable stock, including lily of the valley, white and yellow daisies, stocks, etc., sell fairly well.

NOTES.

Telegraph delivery orders have been brisk at H. W. Sheppard's, both funeral and basket arrangements being called for. H. E. Klunder, of the firm, left for Toledo in his automobile April 24, where he has land devoted to outdoor flowers.

C. J. James, of the Walnut Hills Floral Bazaar, reports an excellent Easter trade and the week after the holiday kept them moving on funeral work. The firm has added a new Reo delivery truck.

A. E. Becker, of the Avondale Floral Co., visited the market in his new Chevrolet touring car, which indicates good business at that establishment.

The William Murphy Co. is receiving some very good snapdragon and roses from C. F. Murphy and sweet peas from C. Bosworth, Loveland.

The Tromey Flower Shop has added another Dodge truck to its fleet, which certainly shows that trade is brisk at this establishment.

OBITUARY.

Andrew C. Benson.

Andrew C. Benson, superintendent of the Bassett & Washburn greenhouses at Westmont, Ill., died at 7:30 a. m., Wednesday, April 26, from an attack of acute indigestion. He was about 60 years old and was in the employ of Bassett & Washburn for 33 years, accepting a position with them shortly after arriving here from his home in Sweden. He received his early training in Germany and was one of the best rose and carnation growers in this country. Mr. Benson was very successful with the American Beauty rose and produced such fine stock that many first prizes were won at the leading flower shows along with other varieties grown at the Bassett & Washburn greenhouses. He did exceptionally well with the Lawson carnation and many of the leading growers in the trade made special trips to inspect his stock, recognized as second to none in this vicinity. He was always on the job and was starting for work when he died. Mr. Benson was a firm believer in feeding his plants and preferred to use cattle manure whenever possible and attributed much of his success to the proper use of it. He was always ready to give whatever information he possessed and took great pleasure in escorting the visitors through the greenhouses, which were always kept in the best possible condition and was one of the points of interest to everyone in the trade.

Mr. Benson was held in high esteem by everyone who knew him and is survived by his wife and daughter Edith, who have the sympathy of the entire trade in their hour of sorrow. The funeral will be held Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the late residence at 98 South Grant street, Hinsdale, Ill.

NILES CENTER, ILL.—Stielow Bros. are increasing their glass area 100,000 square feet, for growing roses, doubling the capacity.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—H. W. Albersma's greenhouses are erecting a large display house and remodeling its flower shop on Benjamin avenue.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The Semler-Leidiger Co., 419 Milwaukee street, is the new name of the firm formerly known as the Edlefsen-Leidiger Co.

ZANESVILLE, O.—Henry Schwab, the well known florist, who died April 4, had been in ill health for some time, although confined to bed only a few days before his death. His aged father and a sister survive.

GALESBURG, ILL.—E. L. Giddings, the enterprising druggist, has added roses, shrubbery, and bedding plants to his already large seed and bulb business. Although the season is backward, he reports heavy sales in all lines.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.—William Hasselman's greenhouses on South Tenth street were inundated by the recent high water in the Missouri river, the stock being a total loss. A few weeks ago one of his houses on North Tenth street was totally destroyed by fire.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.—Chas. M. Vandervoort, chief gardener of the Battle Creek sanitarium for 19 years, recently resigned and will engage in business for himself at 853 West Main street, where he has erected a greenhouse, 36x151 feet. Mr. Vandervoort is planning to add a landscape department in the fall.

PRESIDENT HARDING has approved the wearing of Flanders poppies Memorial Day as the inter-allied flower.

THE Trepel section at Bloomingdale's Department Store, New York, is divided equally into fruit and flower displays, and both are said to be successful.

C. R. HINKLE, new president of the American Gladiolus Society takes a practical and novel method to secure new members, offering a $1 bulb free to each new member.

We are in receipt of a very neat Mothers' Day window card from Daniel B. Long, Williamsville, N. Y. This is well worded and worthy of a place in any florist's window.

John H. Troy, the well known landscape planter of New Rochelle, N. Y., will celebrate another birthday anniversary April 29.

Cottage Gardens Co.

The Cottage Gardens Co., Inc., Queens, N. Y., has purchased the entire stock and plant of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, Eureka, Calif., recently liquidated by court order. The plant will be operated as a branch of the eastern establishment and the principal products will be azaleas and Rhododendron Pink Pearl for forcing purposes. A large production of Ponticum stocks for grafting rhododendrons is also contemplated, as the climate of that part of California is admirably suited to the growing of this plant. It is understood that W. B. Clarke, of San Jose, Calif., at one time sales manager of the defunct concern, will have the sales agency.

D. S. Ward, president of the company, who is now in Eureka, expects to devote a great part of his time to the management of the Eureka plant, while R. T. Brown, vice-president, will continue to look after the interests of the company at Queens.

American Rose Society.

INDIANAPOLIS MEETING, MARCH 27.

The American Rose Society held its annual meeting at Indianapolis, Ind., March 27, President Robt. Pyle in the chair. Only a small number of members were present, but much important business was transacted. In the absence of Secretary John Wister, J. Horace McFarland, Harrisburg, Pa., announced the membership to be 2,007 to date, being several hundred ahead of the same time last year. He spoke at length concerning the membership campaign and emphasized the necessity of more members for the society if it is to be run on a self sustaining basis.

Mr. McFarland told of the proposed Washington D. C., show garden in Potomac Park, for which plans have been drawn by Frederick Law Olmstead and of the proposed distribution of the first of Dr. Van Fleet's new rose, Mary Wallace.

The following persons were unanimously elected to honorary membership for life: Dr. Robert Huey, for a life time spent in advancing rose growing and as a token of our appreciation of his work; Mrs. Aaron Ward, as an appreciation of the esteem in which she is held by the society; W. S. Snyder, as a token of appreciation for legal services gratuitously rendered in the matter of securing the incorporation of the society; Pernet Ducher, as a token of appreciation of his life long work in breeding roses; Charles Sirot, president of the French Rose Society, as a token of friendship between the two societies and Courtney Page, secretary of the National Rose Society of England, as a token of friendship between the two societies.

Dr. Beal spoke of the test gardens, and S. S. Pennock of the proposed Portland, Ore., trip in June, 1923. Many of the members told of the valuable work of the late Dr. Van Fleet which should be commemorated by the society in some substantial way, and the president was directed to appoint a committee to find suitable means of expressing the appreciation of the society for the work of this great man and by this appreciation to encourage other rose breeders to follow in his footsteps.

There was a long discussion over the question of the sale of roses by department stores. Because of their poor condition resulting from ignorance and neglect, it was felt that people purchasing such roses would be discouraged from rose growing. No official action was taken by the society because the occasion seemed to call for educating the amateur to buy good plants instead of bad ones. A number of members spoke very highly about the work of the society in the past few years but there was voiced a desire for larger membership.

The question of co-operation with local flower shows was discussed and it was recommended that the society do everything possible to encourage them. After some discussion it was decided that as the newly elected officers would not assume office until January, 1923, the election should be postponed until a later meeting sometime during the year when a larger number of members might be present. In this connection it was voted that a nominating committee be appointed by the president, to present names for officers and directors but that this should not prevent additional nominations from the floor at the general meeting.

The officers and members of the society desire to thank Mr. Nicholas for his work in securing a booth for the rose society at the Fifth National Flower Show. The meeting adjourned until later in the season, the time and place to be determined by the executive committee.

JOHN C. WISTER, Sec'y.

Mothers' Day Co-Operation

BY AMERICAN LEGION.

The American Legion and Auxiliary and the Society of American Florists have united to give the greatest publicity to the observance of Mothers' Day, May 14, in the history of its celebration. In a recent letter to Geo. Asmus, of Chicago, Jas. E. Darst, of the National Legion Headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind., advises that the Legion as well as the Auxiliary have planned to participate in a national and local observance of the event. With a total of 14,500 posts and a membership of over 1,000,000, its success is assured. The American Legion Auxiliary, composed of mothers, wives, daughters and sisters of Legion men, will have active charge of the celebration of the day and will be supported by the Legion.

The Auxiliary is obtaining or has secured the co-operation of practically every civic organization in the country and intends to make the observance of Mothers' Day complete and successful. Mr. Darst explained that the informal agreement entered into is in no way an alliance nor is it to be construed as an endorsement of the Society of American Florists. He believed that similar co-operation would be effective for other national holidays, such as Memorial Day and Armistice Day.

Mr. Darst submitted several specimens of advertising copy to Mr. Asmus, containing the American Legion emblem, which he believed could be used effectively by the national publicity committee of the society and florists in newspapers, national magazines and as window cards or posters.

The following advertisement was selected by the society for its campaign preceding Mothers' Day: "Men of the American Legion, Women of the American Auxiliary—Mothers' Day, May 14, is your Day. You served home and country and know what home ties mean. Wear a Flower in Honor of Your Mother. Write her if you can't be with her. Send Her Flowers; Go to Church in Remembrance of Her. The American Legion and the American Auxiliary have arranged National and Local programmes for observance of Mothers' Day. See any officer at the local Auxiliary unit or Legion post for information.

The Society of American Florists will furnish free of charge to every florist or florists' club, a two column or three column matrix of the above advertisement and will also supply without charge, one to five large window posters to each florist. One poster will be mailed to each member of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, immediately when printed, without his request, as this organization has the only list of retailers available.

The best method to follow would be for every florist in any city to get together and pay for the space of the American Legion advertisement collectively, in the newspaper or other publication selected. Individual florists could then feature advertisements of their own choice in the same publication.

The above advertisement is for general publicity purposes only and in no way must the generosity or confidence of the American Legion be abused by inserting a name, or group of florists' names at the bottom of, or in connection with, the advertisement.

The florists of the country are urged to unite at once on this proposition. The free matrix of the Legion advertisement and posters may be secured from Hilmer V. Swenson, Directing the Campaign for the S. A. F. Publicity Committee, 225 North Michigan avenue, Chicago.

EXCELLENT EASTER BUSINESS.

The holiday business was a great success. The trade was well prepared and reported more volume than last year, which is saying a great deal. There was a huge supply of Easter lilies which predominated in the sales and almost cleaned up. Cut lilies also went well and brought 50 cents per bloom. On plants they brought 75 cents per bud or bloom. Roses were plentiful, Premier, Columbia, Mrs. Chas. Russell and white and pink Kaiserin leading the call. Values ranged from $4 to $8 per dozen, a few of the fancies reaching $10. Carnations were abundant at $3 per dozen. Innumerable miscellaneous seasonable cut flowers were on the market to satisfy every taste. Among these were sweet peas, calendulas, snapdragons, alyssums, pansies, etc. Decorated baskets had a wonderful sale, cinerarias being much used. Business has continued good since Easter. Several large funerals have kept the trade busy. Social affairs have picked up now that Lent is over and corsage bouquets are proving popular as well as pot bulbous stock for decorative purposes. The florists seem to have an abundance of gladioli which has been shipped in from the south. It is selling well. The weather is fine and balmy which has stimulated the call for bedding plants. The public is purchasing all kinds of bulbous stock such as cannas, tuberoses, dahlias, etc. The country growers are now flooding the market with geraniums, verbenas, perennials, zinnias and the smaller plants for transplanting into summer gardens.

BUSINESS IS BETTER THIS WEEK.

Business is improving at this writing, but the call last week was exceptionally quiet and the returns very disappointing to the growers. Stock was in great oversupply with the exception of a few items and was sold in quantity lots at exceedingly low prices. Monday was a fairly good day, but trade Tuesday and Wednesday was sluggish. The demand improved somewhat Thursday and Friday and there was a noticeable increase in the sales Saturday with a steady improvement ever since. Lily of the valley is holding its own and was scarce at times the past week. Gardenias are popular and orchids are cleaning up nicely. Sweet peas are in heavy supply and considerable pushing and sacrificing is needed to keep the tables clean. Lupines are quite a factor in the market and are in good demand at satisfactory values. Snapdragons are arriving in splendid condition, not to mention choice stocks and candytuft. Daisies are more plentiful. Gladioli from the south are in large supply and fancy local grown Pendleton is attracting the attention of the city buyers. Callas are to be had in quantity and there appears to be an oversupply of lilies. Narcissi and tulips are in good supply, and mignonette, calendulas, forget-me-nots, statice and pansies are included in the shipments. Lilacs and trailing arbutus have been arriving in good sized quantities the past week and the first shipments of peonies are expected at any moment. Carnations are plentiful, and while they are cleaning up fairly well, some good sized shipments have been sold at exceedingly low prices at times the past week. Roses are in good supply and the market has stiffened considerably the past few days. The retailers report business as better and in nearly every instance agree that the sales for last week were very disappointing with practically no life whatever in the demand. All the dealers are devoting their attention to Mothers' Day, the second Sunday in May, and inquiries in regard to stock are already arriving. The supply will be heavy, but the demand promises to be strong and no time should be lost in placing orders so as to protect oneself in regard to a possible shortage.

"Service to Swear BY not AT"

The heavy windstorm of April 19 resulted in quite a little damage to greenhouses in this vicinity. Florian D. Wallace, well-known greenhouse windstorm insurance man with headquarters in the Insurance Exchange building, has had reported and is paying for the repairs of the following places: Pledzien Bros., Norwood Park, 250 lights; Premier Rose Gardens, Melrose Park, 500 lights; Weiss & Meyer Co., Maywood, 500 lights and some structural damage; Amling Bros., Des Plaines, 500 lights. James Psenica, of Gross Pointe, suffered a little damage and so did Kirscht Bros. at Morton Grove. Many other places were also damaged but the proprietors were not as fortunate as those mentioned above who carried insurance. Mr. Wallace is the same gentleman who carried the insurance on the Hoerber place at Des Plaines which was damaged extensively several years ago and was settled to the entire satisfaction of the proprietor.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is busy moving its cut flower department to temporary quarters in the basement next door and is handling its trade as though nothing happened. The large refrigerators are already in use and the ice machine is in operation. The telephones have been connected and so have the lights. Stock is in good supply here, especially roses of choice quality.

Wietor Bros. report a strong demand for young rose and carnation stock and many large sized orders have been filled the past week. N. J. Wietor says the outlook is bright for large crops for Mothers' Day as far as the greenhouses are concerned and inquiries regarding stocks for this occasion have been numerous the past week.

F. Fallon, well-known florist, of Roanoke, Va., and his store manager, H. T. Bryant, were in the city a few days this week on the last lap of a swing through the leading cities in the middle west.

T. E. Waters is busy selling tickets for the big dance and entertainment of the Florists' Club at the Hotel Randolph, next Thursday, May 4. The entire trade is invited to attend.

Mrs. Al. Campiche narrowly escaped injury when the auto in which she was driving was hit by another car. The accident happened April 22.

Andrew Benson, well-known foreman for Bassett & Washburn, died suddenly Wednesday, April 26, an account of whose death appears in the obituary column this week.

Earl Mann, of the E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond, Ind., was here last week with the new rose America, which is meeting with great favor in the eyes of the grower.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is supplying its customers with Narcissus Poeticus from the Buckbee greenhouses at Rockford, where C. W. Johnson so ably presides.

The Louis Moteff Floral Co., 34 West Randolph street, will move to a main floor location almost overhead about May 1.

The Briggs Floral Co. will open another retail store at 1505 East Fifty-third street about June 1.

Adam Kasper, of the E. C. Amling Co., Los Angeles, Calif., is here on a visit.

A. Henderson & Co's. counter trade is running to capacity.

PEONIES HOW MANY CAN YOU USE?
For Mothers' Day? For Memorial Day?

The J. A. Budlong Co. is moving a large supply of gladioli in addition to heavy shipments of roses and carnations. Sweet peas of choice quality are arriving in quantity here.

Tonner's are expecting shipments of peonies regularly, starting with this week. The stock that was scheduled to arrive last week was delayed owing to the cool weather.

D. E. Freres Co. is doing a nice shipping business in addition to its city trade and is featuring fancy snapdragons this week.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is supplying its trade with fancy sweet peas in addition to its usual complete line of stock.

Chas. McCauley's new range at Geneva is well under way and withstood the heavy windstorm of April 19.

Peter Reinberg, Inc., is looking forward to a brisk Mothers' Day trade and is booking orders for same.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are handling a large quantity of jonquils again in addition to its regular supply.

E. C. Amling is expected home from California in the near future.

The West Chicago Park Commissioners wrote all west side business associations last January, inviting co-operation in a flower or rose fete in June, and now state responses have been so discouraging that they have decided to abandon the project this year.

George Wienhoeber is featuring fancy Pendleton gladioli in his window displays.

Victor Bergman and wife called on the trade in Milwaukee, Wis., April 25.

The American Bulb Co. reports good demand for hardy lily bulbs.

TROY, N. Y.—The Zimmerman Greenhouses, near this city, sustained a slight loss by fire recently.

BATAVIA, ILL.—Mr. Wolcott, of the Bellevue Place Co., celebrated the seventy-fifth anniversary of his birthday, recently.

PORTSMOUTH, O.—Orin B. Oakes, Sixth street florist, has rented the greenhouses owned by W. W. Bauer, to be better able to handle his expanding business.

Allied Florists' Association of Chicago.

The Allied Florists' Association of Chicago held a special meeting at the Randolph hotel the evening of April 20. In the absence of President Geo. Asmus, Peter Pearson acted as chairman.

The revision of the constitution and by-laws was the first business taken up, which were acted upon separately, and after considerable discussion all changes were unanimously adopted. The election of the board of nine directors to serve for one, two and three years was then considered. In the selection of candidates each branch of the growers' industry was as far as possible represented. The Wholesale Cut Flower Dealers' Association was allowed three members and it was agreed to elect them at once, the members to be placed on the board when presented by the association. The election of the other six directors resulted as follows: Peter Pearson and August Poehmann, for three years; Otto Amling and E. E. Wehrmann, two years; H. Snyder and Paul Weiss, one year. There are no retailers now in the association, their advertising being personal, to direct trade to each individual store. It is estimated that over $100,000 is spent annually by Chicago retailers in publicity. The growers' assessments have been increased to 1 per cent of sales after commissions have been deducted. Growers who sell direct pay 1 per cent of their total business. These amounts are to be given to the secretary on the 10th of each month, new assessments to commence May 1.

The exhibition tables contained a vase of the new rose, America. These were fine buds on 24 to 36-inch stems. Earl Mann, of the E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., who staged the flowers, said that his firm wanted the Chicago growers to see and get acquainted with this new kind. Mr. Mann spoke of the difficulties of introducing new roses, in which many people looking for defects entirely missed the good qualities. This had been true in the case of every new kind they had placed on the market. The Hill company found America to be fully as free as Columbia and a much better flower. It was, he believed, the best rose they had ever offered to the trade. Mr. Mann told of cut blooms of America being carried this spring to France, where they had arrived in perfect condition, appearing as fresh as if cut the day before.

Geo. J. Ball, Glen Ellyn, showed 18 vases of orchid flowered sweet peas of exceptional quality. Two new kinds, Annette and Seedling No. 56 were given honorable mention, while Grenadier, a fine dark pink variety, received a certificate of merit. Both exhibitors were given a standing vote of thanks.

Secretary Swenson read a letter from the American Legion, which desires to co-operate with the florists in the observance of Mothers' Day, May 14. Each of the 11,000 posts, having a membership of over 1,000,000 members, are to hold meetings on that day with appropriate ceremonies, in which flowers are to play an important part, as each members is to wear one in honoring his mother. President Harding has endorsed the movement and cautioned against profiteering. Officers of the American Legion had also written an ad which they desired the trade to use in its publicity for the occasion.

Secretary Lautenschlager, of the Chicago Florists' Club, announced the meeting and reception of the past presidents would be held at the Randolph hotel the evening of May 4. This is to be ladies' night as well, with refreshments and dancing concluding the programme. A feature will be an exhibition of corsages of flowers for personal wear, and designs or arrangements best suited for Mothers' Day, for which liberal prizes will be awarded.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

ALBANY, N. Y.—Large Easter display advertisements were featured by Eyres, Arkay Florists and the Flowerdale Greenhouses in the local newspapers previous to the holiday.

Milwaukee, Wis.

DEMAND FOR STOCK INCREASING.

As is usually the case after a holiday business is rather quiet, but the last few days has shown a considerable briskness in both the local and shipping trade. On April 24 there was a good call for fancy stock for the funeral of Henry Uihlein, for many years president of the Schlitz Brewing Co.

NOTES.

C. B. Whitnall, secretary of the public land commission, gave an illustrated lecture before the city council, April 19, of his recent trip to California in connection with city planning. Mr. Whitnall told of Los Angeles annexing land for a harbor, 20 miles from the city which, when completed, will accommodate the entire commerce between the United States and the orient. He believed that this city would not benefit from local improvements in the harbor until it is prepared to co-operate in connection with those improvements, through city planning.

The announcement of the engagement of Gertrude Sommers to Arthur J. Beyer was recorded in the local newspapers, April 16. Miss Sommers, better known amongst the local craft as Gertie, who has been working at the florist game for some time, is the right hand bower at Fox's, Inc., where she has charge of the cut flower department.

The Blue Mound Floral Co., Kochanski Bros., proprietors, Fifty-first street and Blue Mound road, is planning to erect a new range of greenhouses on Eighth avenue, South Side, after their lease on the present establishment expires, July 1.

The severe wind storm, April 19, demolished a large plate glass in the window of the East Side Floral Co.'s store. Some growers reported minor losses.

Fox's, Inc., had the order for the casket cover at the funeral of Henry Uihlein, this week, consisting of orchids and lily of the valley.

Otto Sylvester, of Oconomowoc, and wife announce the marriage of their daughter, Alice to Theodore L. Balson, April 20.

The directors of the Florists' Publicity Association held its regular meeting, April 27, at the Blatz hotel.

The exhibit of flowering plants at the Mitchell Park conservatory is attracting a large number of visitors.

Frank Zacharias, Brown Deer, is daily consigning fine snapdragons to this market. E. O.

CLARINDA, IA.—The Clarinda Greenhouses are remodeling a building recently purchased from Swift & Co. for occupancy.

NEOSHO, Mo.—The Neosho Floral Co. has been chartered, capital $75,000. The officers are J. S. Cornish, president; G. E. Dorrance, vice-president and assistant manager; E. E. Dorrance, secretary and business manager, and E. S. Cornish, treasurer.

HOLIDAY CLEANUP IN MANY LINES.

The wholesale market was much more active than the retail for the holiday. Most growers had their stock sold some time in advance of Easter. On account of the shortage of lilies, it was impossible to fill the orders in full. Rambler and baby roses were also apportioned to the trade by the growers. Darwin tulips cleaned up well and hydrangeas were quickly disposed of. There was an exceptionally fine lot of spiraeas and they sold easily at $1.50 and $2. A few pelargoniums and hyacinths were the only plants in evidence at the greenhouses after Easter. Growers reported receipts averaging between 15 and 20 per cent above those of last year. This is without doubt the most prosperous Easter plant growers in this section ever experienced. Prices of plants were practically the same as last year. Due to the cold, stormy weather the supply of cut flowers was a little short of expectations. Prices averaged about 20 per cent lower than the year previous. For the retail trade, part of Saturday was fair, though cold, but the public turned out well. Lilies went well at 75 cents per bloom until about 4 p. m., there being a number on hand, prices dropped to 60 cents. Pelargoniums and hyacinths, the only other plants plentiful, took a drop also. Saturday night saw florists with some plants, but these were mostly disposed of in filling Sunday orders. Some florists did not order heavy and were sold out early. The big call was for Easter lilies. Carnations moved well at $2 per dozen, roses $3 to $7.50. The long varieties were not in much demand. Cut daffodils, tulips and snapdragons were the slowest sellers, but the florists did not have a large supply of these, so it affected them very little. Business has been quiet since Easter. Considerable funeral designs are being made and these, with a few orders for table decorations, constitute the bulk of the sales.

NOTES.

A very unique window decoration was to be seen at the retail shop of the Miller Floral Co., 10 East Broadway. The window was filled with a base of moss, while baskets of flowers, pot lilies, roses, hyacinths and other flowers made it look like a lovely outdoor garden in June. The background was set off by a large cross entwined with rambler roses. Several small rabbits were eating in the garden, much to the consternation of the lilies and the delight of the kiddies. An enthusiastic group of admirers continually crowded around the window. The designer, Mrs. Uhra Huff, received many compliments on her artistic ability. It may not be amiss to state that many orders were taken for rabbits, which were turned over to the firm's rabbit farm. Follow florists take notice—a new side line for your business.

"The best Easter in the history of the business," was the way Robert Miller, manager of the Miller Floral Co.'s wholesale department, expressed himself. This company is the largest grower of pot plants and cut flowers in the intermountain west, supplying the retail florists of Utah, Idaho, Montana, southern Wyoming, western Colorado and a part of Nevada.

Easter morning found the city in the worst snowstorm since 1886. Deliveries were difficult and practically all telephone lines were out of order. Florists probably lost many telephone orders. Practically the only business done this day was filling Sunday orders received the previous day.

That the B. C. Morris Floral Co. received their portion of Easter business is evidenced by the fact that they reported receipts for Friday and Saturday in excess of those of last year.

The Flower Shop found it necessary to canvass the retail trade Sunday morning to get enough lilies to supply their orders.

Al Alt, of the Huddart Floral Co., states that they sold out on practically everything. J. W. W.

Columbus, O.

USUAL POST HOLIDAY SLUMP.

While Easter trade is excellent in every way, there is usually a slump after the busy time. Funeral work, however, is active. There is also some party and reception work, and with the ending of Lent a number of social functions are being scheduled. Roses, such as Premier, Ward, Sunburst and Butterfly, carnations, snapdragons, sweet peas and lilies lead in the cut flower demand. There is a good call for bulbous stock. Garden flowers prove popular. Plants, including hyacinths, primroses and others, meet a good demand. Prices are somewhat reduced from the Easter levels, but they are not especially low. Shrubbery is now in excellent demand and many of the florists are busy in landscape work.

FLOWER GROWERS' AND RETAILERS' ASS'N.

A meeting of the Flower Growers' and Retailers' Association was held April 18 at the greenhouses of the Cottage Rose Gardens with a fair attendance. After inspecting the plant a short business session was held, when arrangements were made for co-operative advertising for Mothers' Day, which plan was used at Christmas and Easter and has proven very satisfactory to members. It was decided to hold the next meeting at the Chittenden hotel Tuesday evening, May 2, when a dinner will be served. It is hoped to get a larger attendance in that way.

NOTES.

Walter Stephens, of S. F. Stephens & Son and president of the Ohio District of the National Flowers Growers' Association, is getting busy on organization work. He addressed a meeting of the Cincinnati growers recently as to what the national association expects in Ohio. He also visited the Dayton Florists' Club some time ago and talked on the necessity for co-operation among florists generally. Mr. Stephens plans to organize local associations in various cities and towns of the Buckeye State at an early date.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. reports a very active Easter trade. This concern is now selling roses, carnations, sweet peas and snapdragons. It is going into the nursery business heavily at its farm on the Olentangy river. Perennial stock and shrubbery will be the specialties, according to Manager Claude Siebert.

The Automobile Club has received a large palm presented by Herman Kropp, proprietor of the Cottage Rose Gardens, who is a member. The palm is a fine specimen and adds materially to the collection of plants at the club rooms.

Two new retail concerns, the Linden Floral Co., 140 South High street, in what is known as Fulton market, and the Mission Inn Flower Shop, at 116 South High street, opened in time to get their share of the Easter business.

BIG DEMAND FEATURES EASTER BUSINESS.

It was not until Saturday and Sunday of Easter week that florists here were certain that the holiday trade would be satisfactory, but with the dawn of a cloudless, balmy week end, the demand took a tremendous jump and kept everybody hustling until late Sunday afternoon. Warm weather in the weeks preceding Easter did some damage to stock, but cooler weather following helped, and on the whole it was in fine condition. Lilies retained their popularity as headliners, were plentiful and retailed at 50 to 75 cents per bloom. Next in the call came hydrangeas, hyacinths, tulips and rose bushes, of which there was an adequate supply. Prices in most cases were the same if not lower than last year, although lilies brought more on the average. Cut flowers represented about 30 per cent of the sales. There was quite a demand for corsages. Roses, carnations, sweet peas and violets led in the selling. An increase in telegraph delivery orders was noted. The first co-operative advertising was employed Easter week and aided in pushing stock and the trade here was well satisfied with the business transacted.

NOTES.

Other florists who enjoyed a large demand were Scottwood Greenhouses, Hellmar Flower Shop, Helen Patten, Feninger's, Spanner Flower Shop, John Barrow, Navarre Flower Shop, Avery Flower Shop and Henry Krueger.

Armine Suder's greenhouses on Cherry street were a mass of color and in his display almost every seasonable plant was represented. Business here was the best ever, according to Mr. Suder.

Metz Bros. were swamped with business Saturday and Sunday and were well satisfied. They also report a big trade for the opening of the new Franklin store last week.

Schramm Bros. had a fine Easter. Hyacinths, tulips, daffodils and hydrangeas were the leading plants.

DEMAND EXTREMELY LIGHT.

The week after Easter found a slow market with plenty of stock and a light demand, until by Saturday there was an accumulation that was hard to move. As usual after a holiday everyone seems to have all the flowers they need for some time and it takes at least a week for things to become normal again. Stock has been good and with the usual demand it is doubtful if there would have been too much. The arrivals include roses of all varieties, carnations, lilies, both Easter and calla, snapdragons, orchids, lily of the valley, daisies, sweet peas and Darwin tulips. Lilies have been the chief offender, and with Easter over and very little funeral work, they have moved slowly. Late reports from the Easter business show that everyone is more than satisfied. Growers, wholesalers and retailers all report it as one of the best. The only complaint is that some of the growers sent out bulbous stock that should have been dumped. Outside of this and the fact that sweet peas were poor, there are no kicks from anyone. With the retailers it was all a last minute business and about the middle of the week some of them got cold feet and predicted dire things for the trade in general, but when they closed their doors Sunday it was with a smile and a different tune. What makes it more wonderful for this town is that there was no advertising done by the associated florists and only a few of the retailers advertised on their own account. What would have been done had the florists here advertised on a scale that other cities did is hard to figure. Plants sold well; rose bushes and hydrangeas were the favorites, with the tulips, hyacinths and jonquils following right along. Cut flowers sold well with the small corsage flowers going first; in fact some of the retailers report that they were forced to quit selling corsages as early as Saturday afternoon.

This city was visited by a snowstorm Friday morning that was the heaviest on record for so late in the season, followed by a freeze Friday night that did a lot of damage to early fruits and vegetation. What damage has been done is hard to tell at this writing, but as everything was well advanced, it will probably be heavy.

SATISFACTORY EASTER TRADE REPORTED.

The Easter season found all stores in the city well stocked with the usual flowers. Lilies were plentiful and excellent in quality. Bougainvilleas, lilacs, laburnums and rhododendrons were also seen in good quantities. Bulbous stock was scarce owing to the lateness of the season and partly to the warm weather about three weeks ago. In the cut flowers, roses, snapdragons and carnations were very prominent. Sweet peas were used extensively as corsages, for violets had almost entirely disappeared from the market. Orchids and lily of the valley were also scarce. The weather was very dull and threatened rain for the week end. This, no doubt, kept more people in the city than it otherwise would have been the case. This was of great benefit to the trade, as flowers were needed to cheer up the home. On Saturday it snowed and rained all day, which did not deter people from going to the shops, and by early afternoon some cut flower stocks were entirely depleted.

NOTES.

Campbell, McKenna, Ltd., and Ley & McAllen had quite a rush of funeral work during the holiday season, which kept the entire staffs on the jump. Monday morning found all on the job again, tired but satisfied.

McKenna, Ltd., had a large church and house decoration for the Mampson-Cowhill wedding, April 18.

The Retail Florists' Club held its first annual reception and dance in the West Town hall April 25.

Lancaster County Florists' Association.

The Lancaster County Florists' Association held its regular monthly meeting at the Hotel Brunswick, Lancaster, Pa., April 20, President Rohrer in the chair. Five dollars worth of flower seeds were given to the Playground Association for use in the children's gardens. A cup was offered to the local Iris Society to be awarded in their back yard contest. Chas. Newbold and Miss M. S. Miller were elected to membership in the association.

President Rohrer called for reports on the Easter trade and Elmer Weaver, speaking from the cut flower growers' point of view, stated that the growers who compared this year's prices to those of the past few years would be disappointed when they got their returns from the commission houses, for on account of the extreme heat the early part of the week immediately preceding Easter, the wholesalers were stacked to the roof with stock, much of which was too ripe for a satisfactory business. He also said that the volume of sales was unprecedented, but even with that, much of the material was in evidence after the bulk of the business was accomplished.

Rudolph Nagle reporting for the plant growers, informed that everything salable had been sold and at fair prices, that bulbous stock especially was called for in excess of any preceding Easter.

As far as the flower shops were concerned, J. Moore, of the Rosary, believed the retailers were more than satisfied with the business and that while they had to handle more stock than in former years to secure the same cash receipts, the call was unusually heavy and everything salable, in both cut flowers and plants, moved to good advantage.

A trip was planned to visit Reading, Pa., some time in June when peonies and irises could be inspected, the date and arrangements being left to the programme and automobile committees. It was also decided that we would make our annual pilgrimage to our dear friend, R. Vincent, Jr., some time next autumn.

The business meeting then adjourned and President Rohrer introduced Prof. H. H. Beck, of Franklin and Marshall college, who entertained us with his wonderful talk on birds, illustrated by specimens and his inimitable rendering of their various songs and calls. This lecture was highly educational and delightfully entertaining.

The May 18 meeting will be held at the B. F. Barr homestead and Mrs. A.

Be sure that the name MEYER is on every spool of green Florists thread that you are buying, and you will get the original and best green Florists thread on the market. A great many of the salesmen on the road and the Florists' supply houses are substituting a cheap and inferior green Florists thread to take the place of the Meyer Green Silkline and Florists' thread.

Therefore, if you cannot get the real article, send the goods back and order direct from the manufacturer and you will get the best. Guaranteed two ounces of actual thread to the spool, 16 ounces to the pound.

HOLIDAY TRADE PASSES EXPECTATIONS.

Easter trade was beyond all expectations. Never in the history of the business was there as much stock sold in this city as the Saturday before the holiday. Lily plants sold fully as well as a year ago. Roses, violets, sweet peas, lily of the valley and snapdragons went exceptionally well. Although carnations were of the best they were hard to move. Tulips and jonquils, because of the warm weather, were of very poor quality. The number of corsages disposed of was greater than in some previous years. The call for American Beauty roses was limited. Columbia, Premier and Francis Scott Key went the best, at reasonable prices. Wedding work has kept the volume up since Easter with funerals the other prop. Many handsome bouquets are being sold. Plant baskets are also popular.

The windows of W. J. Palmer & Son, Felton's Shop of Flowers and S. A. Anderson were handsomely decorated for the holiday.

QUALITY OF STOCK IMPROVING.

With the great Easter holiday an event of the past many of the trade are still talking of the unusual conditions and wondering if they will ever occur again. Such bursts of heat are particularly hard on lilies and bulbous stock, which in cool weather can be held for quite a while, but soften quickly when the temperature nears 70 degrees. With 80 degrees and over for three days in succession, as was the case this year, all forward stock was rendered useless and proved almost a total loss to the growers. The sweet pea men had to face a similar situation, where hoping for cool weather they had not picked closely and found their crops almost entirely ruined, when for the three days the temperature in the houses ranged from 90 to 100 degrees. While shipments are lighter than last week there is quite sufficient for the demand. Premier, Columbia, Butterfly and Double White Killarney are being freely offered in all grades. There are enough carnations, plenty of snapdragons, Easter and calla lilies. Sweet peas are in better condition than for Easter, but still in their shortened stems show the effects of the hot spell.

COMING EXHIBITIONS.

The schedule of prizes for the coming exhibitions of the Pennsylvania State Horticultural Society is just off the press. The spring exhibition of perennials, columbines, iris, etc., will be held May 24 at Masonic hall, Ardmore. The rose and peony exhibition, June 6, will be staged in the same place. The sweet pea display, June 20, will be held at the Chestnut Hill branch of the free library of this city, 8711 Germantown avenue. The date and place of exhibition for the dahlia display is still unannounced on the schedule but will be furnished later. The autumn flower

NOTES.

The Leo Niessen Co. reported having handled more flowers during the week preceding Easter than had ever passed through their hands before in the same space of time. Their large force was equal to it, however, and considering the great handicap of the extremely hot weather they managed to fill nearly all orders as booked with the exception of sweet peas, which in the early part of the week were too soft to ship. Choice Russell and Hadley roses, snapdragon and lily of the valley are features at this time.

A number of fashionable wedding decorations kept the leading retailers busy and created a demand for Easter lilies, long stemmed roses, lily of the valley and other flowers, as well as flowering plants for church and house decorations. H. H. Battles, the S. S. Pennock Co., and J. J. Habermehl's Sons were all busy with this line of work, which together with regular store trade taxed their facilities to the utmost.

"We had a record Easter as it was, but oh my, those hot days, how they did drive the stock forward. Had the weather been normal we would have done 20 per cent better." This was Robert A. Craig's answer to our query about Easter. The empty space in the houses is to be filled with dracaenas, palms and other stock from their tropical nursery in Porto Rico, of which a large shipment is now on the way.

The Jos. G. Niedenger Co. report a quantity of advance orders for Memorial Day. Their new American Legion wreath has made a great hit wherever shown and they are taxed to the utmost to fill orders. Jos. G. Niedenger, the head of the house, has arrived safely in France, from where he will make a tour of Europe in search of raw material and supplies.

"We have forgotten all about Easter and are working now on wedding orders," was Edward Reid's good word, "and best of all, we have the stock to fill them." Cattleyas and lily of the valley for the bride's bouquet, roses of high grade, snapdragon, carnations, etc., are specialties here.

Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., declares this to have been their best Easter. Plant and vase cutflower baskets were leaders. There has been a great demand for wreath material for Memorial Day.

The volume of Berger Bros.' business at Easter nearly swamped them, but they finally pulled through all right. Callas, Easter lilies, roses, carnations and sweet peas are now offered in quantity.

The Easter exhibition in Fairmount park was arranged in Manager Schmitt's best style and thoroughly enjoyed by crowds of visitors, there being great throngs on Palm and Easter Sundays.

Premier roses and high grade lily of the valley are features of the Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower market.

MODERATE VOLUME OF BUSINESS.

There was a moderate volume of business during the past week, quite as much as could be expected immediately following the Easter trade. The weather was decidedly cool with high winds and on the night of April 20, there was frost that on cultivated soil in the gardens formed a crust an inch thick. As a consequence, some carnations and other stock that had been planted out were frozen stiff. Barring the necessity to the growers of burning coal and the above mentioned misfortunes, cold weather was better than warm would have been for the market, as it kept the supply within reasonable proportions. But there was an abundance of stock and it did not completely clean up. The supply of American Beauty roses was light and prices remained firm. In other roses there was a considerable supply, the shorter grades moving best. In addition to the regular arrivals, the Ulrich Brunners are now in. Heavy supplies of Darwin tulips have been arriving and they were rather slow. Possibly that may be in part accounted for by the heavy supplies of lilacs that have been arriving from the south. The New Jersey product is also on the market. The cool weather has lessened the carnation supply and there seems to be about enough to meet the demand. As an indication that there is a fair amount of business in the retail stores, orchids, gardenias and lily of the valley are moving at good prices. The violet market continues somewhat demoralized. Cut lilies, callas and snapdragons are slow. The cold snap has checked the trade in geraniums and other bedding stock and window box planting is held up.

April 24.—With an abundant supply of stock, buying is rather light.

PROMINENT VISITORS.

When notable visitors from abroad—and some that are not notable—come to this city, they are banqueted and interviewed. There must be decorations for the banquets, which helps the florists and some of the interviewers and speeches add to the gaiety of nations. Thus we recently had Mrs. Margot Asquith who talked kitchen gossip, and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who told silly ghost stories. Last week, in Lady Astor, a different type arrived. No visitor since Marshal Foch has aroused such enthusiasm as Lady Astor. That a daughter of Virginia should become a viscountess and a member of the British parliament is noteworthy, but it was the kind-hearted, broad-minded and plain-spoken woman that was most admired. Here is one of her sayings, as quoted by an evening newspaper, that should interest our old soaks and rum hounds: "Put prohibition to a vote," she shouted when wet sympathy bobbed up. "You'll never get liquor back. Put it to a vote and you'll find out. You ought to thank God you've got rid of drink. Let the rich drink if they want to—it's their own business and their own ruin. It's the poor, I'm looking out for." Another: "The flapper? I've never seen her, but if all I've heard about her is true I think her mother ought to take her home and slap her." It is not our custom to stray from regular trade news to outside matters, but when robberies are a daily occurrence; when the criminal courts are working overtime to clear the dockets of crooks and send them to prison, and when men who consider themselves prominent are holding meetings with the avowed purpose of combating the law of the land, it is worth while to note what a native born American woman, now highly placed, thinks of current events.

NOTES.

Up in the Bronx they have more room to plant and sow seeds than on Manhattan island. Charles L. Bartels, 411 East Tremont avenue, keeps this in mind and is well stocked with geraniums, pansy plants and other offerings for the gardener. This store has large floor space, is always well stocked and had a good Easter business.

Manager N. G. Perry of the C. A. Dards store, Madison avenue and 44th street, reports that in addition to being completely sold out at Easter, they have been working overtime during the past week on banquet decorations.

The retail store known as the Fort Washington Florist, Broadway and 181st street, which is owned by N. G. Pallas and G. Papalleas, is about to be greatly enlarged and improved. Another show window will be added.

Peter F. McKenney, Fifth avenue and 42d street, was so fortunate at Easter, in that crowded neighborhood, as to secure a vacant store for his large stock of plants and was sold out at both places.

Washington Heights has a number of good retail stores. The Subway Arcade florist, St. Nicholas avenue at 181st street, and right over the subway station, catches them coming and going.

We are pleased to state that Mrs. Leo Klein, who recently underwent a serious operation, has so far recovered as to be able to leave the hospital and return to her home.

James G. Carlaftes, who had a fine shop at the corner of Westchester avenue and Southern boulevard, reported a good Easter business.

We have noticed at the booth of J. J. Coan, in the Eighteenth street market, a fine collection of the staple products of the greenhouses.

C. A. Ladiges, the retailer of 1792 Amsterdam avenue, will sail for Europe, May 8, and expects his tour to continue until September, next.

The florists' mass meeting was held in the Engineering building, April 22. Full account will be found elsewhere in this issue.

H. E. Froment is receiving heavy shipments of roses from the two ranges of L. B. Coddington, Murray Hill, N. J. The Van Neet Florist, 726 East Tremont avenue, has a good store and reports an encouraging business.

The new firm of Hildenbrand & Bartels, in the Eighteenth street market, reports satisfactory business.

Allied Florists' Trade Association of N. Y.

The mass meeting of the Allied Florists' Trade Association of New York was held in the Engineering Societies' building, that city, April 22, President A. M. Henshaw in the chair. Secretary Mrs. Geo. V. Nash, Treasurer F. H. Traendly and Lincoln Pierson, of the recently organized Rose Growers' Association occupied the platform. There was an attendance of 41 which was rather disappointing.

The retail trade was represented by A. T. Bunyard, Geo. E. M. Stumpp, Max Schling, Harry Ramm, Wm. Phillips, W. A. Rodman and Mrs. Alex. Warendorff. After some discussion about raising money for advertising, F. R. Pierson said that he would visit 25 florists and if he did not secure subscriptions would report the reasons for refusing to donate. A committee was appointed to assist him. The desire of the association is to secure the co-operation of more retailers and by increased publicity augment the sale of flowers, especially during the dull, summer months. The meeting was adjourned.

FAILURES last week totaled 485 against 516 the preceding week.

PETER HOLLENBACH, Chicago, reports his business this season comfortably ahead of last year's to date.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The Armour fertilizer works here were damaged to the extent of $250,000 by fire April 21.

J. C. VAUGHAN, Chicago, celebrated another birthday anniversary this week, Mrs. Vaughan returning from Miami, Fla., for the occasion.

JOHN BODGER, of John Bodger & Sons Co., Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Bodger have been spending a few days with friends in Ohio, resting after their ocean voyage.

VISITED CHICAGO: Louis M. Kimberlin, of the Kimberlin Seed Co., San Jose, Calif.; returning from the east, G. C. Eldering, of W. J. Eldering & Son, Overveen, Haarlem, Holland; A. E. Kunderd, Goshen, Ind.

A RECEIVER was appointed April 22 for the Sears & Nichols Canning Co., of Chillicothe, O., said to be the largest canning concern in the United States, also extensive growers of sweet corn for seed. The liabilities are given at $1,827,000, with assets of $4,814,000.

C. C. MORSE & Co., of San Francisco, Calif., write April 19, "While business was late in coming, it finally arrived with a noise. The Pacific coast jobbing and retail business for March and thus far in April has been exceptionally good. Growing seed crops generally look well, excepting some pieces of carrot, beet and parsnip."

TOLEDO, O.—The Toledo Seed & Oil Co., manufacturers of linseed oil, will be compelled to close at an early date unless congress enacts a tariff law giving this industry protection against foreign importation. G. A. Vradenburg, vice-president of the company, states that more than one-half of the 15 linseed oil factories in the United States are closed.

CINCINNATI, O.—The J. M. McCullough's Sons Co., say, the trade for January and February was 30 to 40 per cent ahead of former years. Early in March business continued good, but the rain and weather conditions toward the end of the month caused trade to slow up. The same conditions prevailed early in April. Kentucky blue grass is practically off the market, stocks are exhausted, and from the present outlook, it is one of the best seasons they have had for a few years. Stocks will be well cleaned out before the end of the season.

ONION SETS in the Chicago district are running low, with the price of whites and yellows at $4. Reds are practically exhausted.

Western Seedsmen's Association.

The annual spring meeting of the Western Seedsmen's Association will be held at Omaha, Neb., Saturday, April 29, 10 o'clock a. m., in the Hotel Fontenelle. This meeting will be given over entirely to the discussion of garden seeds, and while all members are cordially invited to be present, all who are interested in garden seeds are especially urged to attend.

Peacock Before Bankruptcy Referee.

Details of how Everette R. Peacock rose from seed store owner to a man of affluence through borrowing more than $400,000 from a dozen Chicago banks during three years' time, for which he gave securities of doubtful value, were told during a hearing before Referee in Bankruptcy Eastman April 25. The seed company was organized in October, 1917, with an initial capital stock of $100,000, Peacock said.

"I received $60,000 for merchandise received from me from another store in which I was interested," he testified. "In 1919 the capital stock was increased to $200,000 and a new issue of stock was made. In May, 1921, the capital stock was increased again, this time to $300,000, but at this time only $25,000 was sold, making the total capital of the company $215,000."

Peacock testified that he has an open credit with the Second Security bank of Chicago, 1951 Milwaukee avenue, for $20,000. The loan was secured by a mortgage on farm property owned by the corporation. In 1921 the indebtedness of the company was nearly $60,000, secured by warehouse receipts and discounted paper. "I went to the Milwaukee-Irving State bank and had them take a $100,000 first mortgage on the farm and property of the company, so that I could take up the indebtedness with the Second Security State bank. During that time I borrowed more than $5,000 from the Second Citizens' State bank, 4801 Lincoln avenue, and the First National bank of Oak Park had a note of mine for $11,500."

Stumpp & Walter Advertising.

For several weeks this spring, advertisements appeared in the rotogravure sections of New York newspapers, also in several garden magazines, offering in bold display "A Garden Full of Gladioli for $2." The copy following stressed the beauty of these flowers and their ease of cultivation, and then explained the heading with the statement, "For $2 we will send 50 Bulbs of our Grand Prize Mixture, which covers every conceivable shade in the Gladiolus Kingdom."

These advertisements measure about five inches by two columns; they illustrate the flowers, and are surrounded by a heavy border. But they make no mention of a catalogue, although they are designed to secure names for catalogue distribution for the Stumpp & Walter Co., New York.

"About five years ago," explained Wm. A. Sperling, secretary of the company, "we determined to reduce our catalogue waste by getting people interested first in some item of our merchandise. We knew that thousands of copies of our printed material were unproductive because they were being mailed to the merely curious, who answered the advertisements that urged them to send for free literature."

"We concluded that if we could build up a mailing list of purchasers rather than inquirers, it would be very much more productive. So we decided to try assortments of bulbs as leaders for two reasons. First, they are popular with nearly all growers of flowers. Second, much of the bulb planting is done in the fall when trade in our business is slack and we need the business to reduce overhead and to keep our organization intact. Both tulip and gladiolus bulbs are easy to cultivate, and the flowers are admired by everyone."

"The first special offer we advertised was a generous assortment of tulip bulbs. That was in the fall of the year, and the returns were encouraging. The next spring we advertised gladiolus bulbs—50 mixed for $2, postage paid. Thousands of orders came to us, and we have advertised the special mixtures every fall and spring since."

"Because of the advertising we have gained something of a reputation as bulb specialists, and this department has grown splendidly. Now we have large standing orders with our Holland growers, and all the bulbs we handle are grown especially for us.

"The bulbs that we are now advertising are the best quality that it is possible to obtain—we cannot afford to offer anything else at any price. To get the results we are after, the advertised value must be exceptional and genuine. If a purchaser selected a similar assortment from our regular stock, he would pay $5 or $6 for it. And if he does not fully appreciate the unusual value of his purchase when he gets the bulbs, he is invariably convinced of his bargain, we believe, when the flowers bloom in his garden.

"In both our spring and fall advertising we try to tie up, in the minds of readers, the thought of gardens with our firm name. That is one idea; but the main intent of all our advertising is to build up a mailing list of the names of people who have made a purchase from us.

"Every purchaser of our special bulb offer gets our catalogue. The next season we make the same offer through the mails to our list that we advertise in newspapers and magazines. And we send our catalogue only on request and to those who order bulbs. In this way our list is almost automatically kept alive.

"From time to time, of course, we mail folders, circulars and letters on seasonal specialties, as a follow-up to our catalogue. And we know from experience that all our mailings, going only to those who have purchased from us, bring a much higher percentage of orders and an average order of greater amount than would be possible if the mailings went to a list made up of people who had requested only catalogues.

Beyond all doubt, our decision of several years ago has been more than justified by results.

"So we do not advertise our catalogue. We advertise, instead, special offerings of bulbs. We mix them carefully to insure variety, and we mail them in attractive packages with full directions for planting and cultivating.

"The price of the package—always $2 for 50 bulbs—is sufficient to warrant us in believing that every purchaser has a garden of some size and enjoys the cultivation of flowers. And this is further indicated by the fact that we eventually sell other bulbs, seeds and garden supplies to more than 50 per cent of such purchasers.

"Our correspondence shows us that the price of our special offers creates in the minds of the majority of purchasers the thought that they have become customers of our house. This makes future sales easier, and such a favorable state of mind is impossible to establish with a purchase of 10 or 25 cents, for a collection of seeds or plants whose only appeal is cheapness or by selling the catalogue for a small amount which is to be credited on the first order.

"Then the unusual variety of the assortment stimulates interest in the catalogue. When the flowers bloom, most purchasers desire to know the names of the different specimens. Some of them are illustrated and all are described in the catalogue, and the purchasers study the book in order to identify their favorites, which many of them reorder the following season.

"In planning our special offers we have tried to give purchasers the best values they ever received, something that would create both an immediate and a future favorable impression, tie up our name with their gardens, stimulate their interest in our catalogue and other direct-mail material, and induce future business. The cost of doing this with our offer, merchandise and advertising, is just what we receive for it.

"The net selling cost runs about half the percentage of cost usual in selling seeds and bulbs profitably by mail. But it must be remembered that we are advertising an extraordinary value. The mixture of 50 bulbs, the package, printed enclosures, labor, postage and advertising cost us just $2. However, we are very well satisfied to break even on the proposition."—Printers' Ink.

DALLAS, TEX.—The La Feria Nursery Co. was recently incorporated, capital $25,000. B. H. Dunlop, D. E. Kirgen and Freda Wehmeyer are the incorporators.

ALBANY, N. Y.—The state conservation commission is planning to establish a tree nursery in Lewis county at an early date with a capacity of 20,000,000 and a yearly output of 7,000,000 trees.

SHREVEPORT, LA.—A municipal nursery owned and controlled by the city is a possibility in the near future if the suggestions made by Inspector Peets, of the Louisiana pomological department, at a recent meeting of the commission council are made law.

HOARDING of forest lands will be prevented if a bill now before congress becomes law, which provides that young timberlands shall be taxed as land alone on a valuation fixed for 40 years and that the standing growth shall be tax free until cut, or until it reaches a specified average yield per acre, when the owner shall pay six per cent of the stumpage value of the trees cut.

Nursery Business Holds Steady.

The W. & T. Smith Co., Geneva, N. Y., writes as follows April 25: "Sales this year have run well up to our record of last year. We have sold very closely on all kinds of fruit tree stocks and ornamental trees. Roses and shrubs also have been in very fair demand. We certainly cannot complain of the season's shipments. Furthermore, we are already booking a good many contracts for next year at prices equal to or better than those of the season past." on the proposition."

The white or American elm is the best tree for street, boulevard and highway planting in South Dakota, according to P. L. Kene, assistant in horticulture at the South Dakota State college, Brookings. Green ash and soft maple may be used in place of the elm, but make better grove or windbreak trees. Hackberry may be used in low places. The black walnut, commonly considered as not hardy, is worthy of trial.

For the front yard, the mountain ash and white birch make beautiful specimen trees. The Niobe weeping willow, Russian olive and silver poplar make good park trees and very pretty specimen trees. If used on the average city lot, they should be placed in the rear. Among the evergreens, the Colorado blue spruce, Black Hills spruce and bull (Black Hills) pine are the hardiest and best for lawn and grove planting.

Arnold Arboretum Field Class.

J. G. Jack, of the arboretum staff will conduct a field class on Saturdays during the spring and early summer, to assist those who wish to gain a more intimate knowledge of the native and foreign trees and shrubs which grow in New England. Instruction will be given in informal outdoor talks and in the examination of the plants. Different botanical groups will be examined at each meeting, although any trees or shrubs found may form subjects for study. No technical knowledge or special preparation is required in order to join the class as the instruction is intended to be simple in character, affording opportunities for questions and answers relating to the specimens under observation. Unless otherwise notified the class will meet promptly at 10 o'clock in the morning, on Saturdays, in the arboretum, at the Forest Hills entrance, beginning April 29. The class will close June 24.

For further particulars of this field class address J. G. Jack, Arnold Arboretum, Jamaica Plain, Mass., a suburb of Boston, Mass.

Street Trees.

Before ornamental tree-planting for town or city streets is undertaken, a number of important points must be given attention. Trees native to one part of the United States may not thrive in another region. Some trees are objectionable because their roots penetrate defective sewers, while others grow their roots so near the surface that they have a tendency to heave or crack sidewalks.

Only vigorous trees that will withstand the dust and smoke of a city should be planted to ornament the streets. The root system should be hardy, not easily affected by unusual soil conditions, by restricted feeding areas, or by root pruning in case street improvements are made. The shape of the top of the tree when full-grown should be suited to the width of the street. The foliage should not be too dense, and should be of a pleasing texture and color. The resistance of the tree to fungi, insect pests, and tree diseases is an important consideration. Trees that bear showy flowers, fruits, or nuts are usually undesirable for street planting.

Palms do not make good shade trees, although they are effective in formal planting. Only in the most southern parts of the country and in western California should evergreen trees be considered for street planting. Magnolias, live oaks, and a few other broad-leaved evergreens may be used in these regions. Where there is lack of sunshine in winter it is desirable to admit all the light possible by using only deciduous trees. Bulletin No. 1268, "Trees for Town and City Streets, issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., gives a table showing the differences in fall coloring and the date of dropping of all foliage. Narrow streets, it is pointed out, should be planted with tall slender trees like the Lombardy poplar or small trees. Broad streets may be planted with spreading trees. As a rule, native trees that have been tried out successfully in other towns of the same general locality should be given the preference.

For use within reach of ocean spray or on sandy lands near the coast the red oak and the red or scarlet maple are suitable as far south as Charleston, S. C., while the sweet gum and the live oak are equally good from Norfolk southward and along the Gulf of Mexico. The red oak, sweet gum, red maple, and eastern live oak are all grown successfully along the Pacific ocean, while the California live oak can be used from San Francisco southward. The trees that endure the most alkali appear to be the bladdernut tree, London plane, peppermint gum, and its variety Eucalyptus amygdalina angustifolia, and the Washingtonia and other hardy fan palms. The red oak and red maple are worth testing for alkali conditions.

In the heart of a city, where the greatest difficulty is experienced in getting trees to grow, the alanthus will probably thrive when nearly all other kinds fail. The sycamore and the London plane are also good. The Carolina poplar will frequently grow in such places, and its use may sometimes be warranted. Consultation with the nearest state agricultural experiment station or with the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., is frequently advisable before deciding upon extensive tree-planting.

Louis F. Miller, Toledo, O., President;
H. A. Dooley, Cleveland, O., Vice-President;
C. H. Nissley, New Brunswick, N. J., Secretary; H. J. Cheney, Grand Rapids, Mich.
Treasurer.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—Carl Schmidt, formerly of Boyceville, Wis., recently purchased land in this city, where he has built greenhouses for growing vegetables.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, April 25.—Cucumbers, per crate, $1.50 to $2.50; lettuce, per crate, $1.50 to $2.25; carrots, $4 to $5 per barrel; cabbage, $2 to $3.50 per crate; cauliflower, per crate, $1.25 to $2.50.

New York, April 21.—Cucumbers, $1.50 per dozen; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.50 to $2.50; tomatoes, per pound, 15 to 25 cents; lettuce, per crate, $1.25 to $2.75; beets, per hamper, $1.75 to $2; cauliflower, $1.50 to $3 per dozen.

Seed Potatoes.

Dip your seed potatoes before planting in a formaldehyde solution consisting of one pint of formaldehyde (commercial strength), and 30 gallons of water. Soak for 30 minutes to one and one-half hours, according to the amount of disease present. Cut and plant wet. The larger the seed piece the greater the certainty of getting a stand. A good stand means better yield. Blind plow the potatoes shortly after planting, so as to kill all small weeds which may be starting.

Vegetable Movement.

The trend of prices continued generally downward as the result of increasing supplies during the week ending April 22. Shipments of a dozen leading lines were nearly 20 per cent heavier than their combined volume a year ago, although spinach, celery and apples are decreasing. The great activity of the Texas onion movement at much lower prices was a leading factor. Potatoes, cabbage, lettuce, strawberries and apples all showed various degrees of weakness under liberal offerings.

Adsuki Bean.

The adsuki bean, new in the United States, has greater protein value than the navy or lima bean, according to Messrs. D. Breese Jones, A. J. Finks and C. E. J. Gersdorff, of the United States Department of Agriculture. The adsuki bean, originally grown in Japan, Manchuria, China and Korea, is one of the five Oriental varieties which have been introduced into this country at various times. In Japan it is used for making soups, gruels, cakes, as a base for facial cream and a flour for shampoos.

Potato Importation.

The Federal Horticultural Board announces that the provisions of Regulations No. 2 of the "Regulations Governing the Importation of Potatoes into the United States," were revised, March 1, to permit the entry of potatoes only from countries free from potato wart or other injurious potato diseases and insect pests new to or not widely prevalent or distributed within or throughout the United States. The revision of Regulation No. 2, will therefore, not involve any restrictions not hitherto enforced on the entry of foreign potatoes.

Florida State Florists' Association.

LAKELAND MEETING, MAY 5.

The first annual convention of the Florida State Florists' Association will be held at Lakeland May 5. An interesting programme has been prepared for the occasion touching on the possibilities of Florida as a floricultural and seed growing center. S. S. Pen-nock, president of the Society of American Florists, will deliver an address on "The Basic Principles Governing the Successful Florist." The following subjects will be discussed by the members: "Bulb Opportunities," "Commercial Rose Growing in Florida for Cut Flower Purposes," "The Asparagus Growers' Problem," "Florists' Planting Calendar for Cut Flowers" and "Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-two Novelties." A practical demonstration of the various methods of floral designing will be given by M. Whipp, of Mills the Florist, Inc., Jacksonville.

N. A. Reasoner, Royal Palm Nurseries, Oneco, Fla., is secretary-treasurer of the association.

Terre Haute, Ind.

The florists all report an excellent Easter business in spite of the fact that the coal miners are on a strike, which has slowed up trade considerably in the uptown stores since the holiday.

This section was visited by a cloudburst April 17, nearly four inches of water falling on that day. There were 25 feet of water in the Wabash river and the entire northeastern part of the city was submerged. The greenhouses of William Dinkle were deluged, his sweet peas and lettuce being nearly a total loss. Fred Wunker's coal room and basement were flooded and very few of the other establishments escaped without some loss.

SATISFACTORY HOLIDAY TRADE.

The Easter business was most satisfactory to the local trade. In the line of plants, rambler roses, hydrangeas and bulbous stock sold well. The few who had azaleas reported a good demand and all sold out. In cut flowers, roses, violets, sweet peas and orchids had the call in about the order named. Business was fully as good as last year with some reductions in prices. Most had cleanups and several retailers stated they could have disposed of much larger stocks had they put them in or given orders for timely delivery. The week after Easter brought numerous funeral orders. A number of prominent people died from pneumonia and other seasonal diseases due to the very changeable weather that has been characteristic of April this year.

NOTES.

State Conservation Commissioner Alexander MacDonald announces that the commission is planning the establishment of a new tree nursery in Lewis county on land owned by the state, which is to have a capacity of 20,000,000 trees and an annual output of about 7,000,000 trees. The demand for trees is growing steadily. Up to about April 1 the commission had received from citizens of the state orders for 3,150,000 trees for spring planting, a number 1,218,000 in excess of the same period in 1921. An American Legion post at Herkimer has placed an order for 200,000 trees for a memorial grove to be planted this spring in Herkimer county. The Troy water department ordered 70,000 trees for planting on reservoir lands. The children of Watson, Lewis county, have planned also to set out 10,000 trees to be furnished by the commission.

On Thursday night, April 20, Fred Henkes and wife, Newtonville, celebrated the 25th anniversary of their wedding with a dinner at Smith's tavern near that city. The color scheme was pink and white and the dining room was decorated with carnations and spring flowers. The favors were bouquets of sweet peas. Mr. and Mrs. Henkes received presents of silver, cut glass and mahogany. Sixty guests were present. Mr. Henkes is a member of the firm of Henkes Bros., growers, and a former president of the Florists' Club.

EASTER TRADE SATISFACTORY.

The Easter business this year was very good. The first three days of the week went very slowly, little or no stock being sold, but the remainder of the week kept every one on the jump. All stock was good and although the season was late this year most everyone had excellent material. Bulbous stock sold well. Rose bushes had a heavy call as usual, and lilies cleaned up early. Some of the best items sold were sweet peas, orchids and lily of the valley. Marguerites, pansies and other corsage flowers sold on sight. Pot plants had a good call, but the volume of business was not as heavy as last year.

NOTES.

Brookner the Florist opened his new store at 27 Broad street Easter week and it is very attractive, having a very large display window and an unusual depth with a well lighted store.

Fisher the Florist installed a new shop Easter week and experts agree that there is no finer store in New England that covers the field so completely. It is superb.

Macrae Bros., Smith street, sold several thousand pots of lilies Easter and could have disposed of many more.

Boston.

The market this week felt the after effects of the holiday worse than any week following a similar occasion for a long time. The rose growers did not gauge their crops right for Easter and consequently the stock that came in this week was far in excess of the demand. The facts are that this condition seems to have prevailed throughout, except as regards lily of the valley and orchids, which enjoyed a good demand all week at fine prices. There is little else to be said but that the value for all other stock hardly paid to bring it in.

The meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club held April 18 at Horticultural hall was well attended. The speaker of the evening was M. Thayer of Amherst college.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society has issued a number of interesting leaflets on wild flower preservation.

To My Mother.

Oh, the sweetness and completeness of the grandest word of time!
There's a message in its music—there's a note of love sublime.
How it thrills me! How it fills me! For
I know the note is true;
Mothers' hearts have throbbled the message to the world the ages through.
In the olden times so golden, when the world for me was young,
And the songs of joy and gladness in my heart were yet unsung, Tender feelings o'er me stealing, bore me on joy's highest crest.
When my mother's arms, encircling, drew me to her loving breast,
To the morrow with its sorrow never gave
I thought or heed:
Mother's yearning, sweet and tender, felt and filled my every need—Impulse swaying, e'er obeying Nature's noblest, grandest theme, Catching glimpses of its glory through the vista of her dream.
Friends may fail me, foes assail me, but your love is always true;
All my sweetest thoughts shall center, ever, mother dear, 'round you.
Hope entwines my heart enshrining, though your face I seldom see,
There shall be a glad reunion for us in eternity.

MOTHERS' DAY.

Importance Gaining Every Year.

When Miss Anna Jarvis asked the pastor of the church in which her mother had been a prominent member to hold a memorial service on the anniversary of her death the second Sunday in May and to make it a day of adoration of all mothers living, as well as those who had passed away, she struck a popular chord that has reverberated throughout the entire nation and found response with all the Christian peoples of the world.

She also proposed that as the white carnation had been her mother's favorite flower, that each person wear a white carnation in honor of their mother, the best mother who ever lived. For this first service she was given an armful of white carnations by a wholesale firm in Philadelphia, Pa., to whom she enthusiastically broached the idea and who then had so many white carnations that they were practically unsalable. There were sufficient to provide one for every member of the congregation and children of the Sunday school. The services in church and Sunday school, with the love and honor of mother as a theme, were so successful that it was determined to make this an annual anniversary to be called "Mothers' Day," to be celebrated the second Sunday in May of each year.

Miss Jarvis, as the originator of the idea, was most enthusiastic and as the time drew around for its second anniversary she felt that it should have a country wide observance. Writing to governors of states, mayors of cities and others in authority asking them to issue proclamations designating the second Sunday in May as Mothers' Day, and calling for its celebration along the lines as suggested by her, she met with general and ready response, the idea appealing strongly to all officials, most of whom at once in proclamations, set aside the day for the adoration of mothers and took a prominent part in the exercises of its observance.

It was always Miss Jarvis' ambition that the day should become a national institution by an act of congress, in which she finally succeeded when an act passed by the house and senate and duly signed by President Wilson on May 8, 1914, made the second Sunday in May a national holiday in honor of the mothers of the land and required that the flag be displayed from sunrise to sunset as on all other official holidays.

In the general observance of the day and the use of white carnations as the official flower there at once sprang up a demand which taxed the trade to the utmost, resulting in a rise in prices that was the cause of much criticism. In this emergency Miss Jarvis was asked to state that all flowers were appropriate; that while the white carnation was her mother's favorite, others loved the rose, the lily, many in fact having no special choice. It was pointed out that it was impossible to grow enough white carnations to supply the demand and it was the bidding of the retail florists to get enough for their trade that raised values. Miss Jarvis, however, would not agree to make this announcement, saying that the white carnation was her mother's choice and it would always remain the official flower.

Here the trade and Miss Jarvis parted company. In order to advertise the event Mothers' Day window cards were prepared by florists in Philadelphia, a number of which were given to Miss Jarvis. She then thought that her Mothers' Day Association, which she had just formed, should issue an official card to be furnished to the trade and that none other should be used. As the demand increased florists everywhere took the matter of publicity in their own hands and their success in augmenting the observance of the occasion, instead of gratifying Miss Jarvis, only added to her discomfiture in seeing such a call for flowers created out of her idea but of which she gained nothing but the credit of being the originator.

Some years ago Miss Jarvis was presented by the florists of the country with a sum amounting to over $1,200 as a thank offering, and later at the National Flower Show in Philadelphia, $300 realized from the sale of carnations on Carnation Day was given to her Mothers' Day Association.

In the past five years she has become more and more incensed against the trade, doing everything possible through the press of the country to discourage the use of flowers, claiming that the florists have commercialized the day selling carnations as high as $1 each and suggesting small flags or Mothers' Day buttons be worn instead. Her efforts, however, have seemingly had no noticeable effect, the use of plants and flowers in connection with the observance of the day, are now everywhere recognized as inseparable and the most appropriate of all gifts to mother.

Mothers' Day Window.

One of the most effective methods in featuring the day is through an elaborate decoration of the show window. In various parts of the country where the trade has been alive to the opportunity there have been fine examples of Mothers' Day windows in some of which a home scene is depicted with mother receiving flowers from F. T. D., and other messengers. One of Penn the Florist's windows had, as a central feature, a well displayed picture of Whistler's mother. This, on an easel with velvet drape and with a background of cibotiums, was supplemented with a number of elderly mothers' portraits which he had been able to secure from various photographers. With suitable cut flowers and baskets artistically arranged they made a striking window that could not but impress the great crowds attracted by its unique and beautiful appearance.

Cut flower boxes, a few filled and open and others empty and tied, with a spray of flowers on the outside as if ready for delivery with cards and tags marked "For Mother," will be found effective for the window, as will small handle vase baskets of cut flowers.

Mothers' Day should make a record for telegraph business this year as this country-wide service is so essential and successful for all who are distant from the old homestead. This Florists' Telegraph Delivery service should be featured in the shop, in the window and in all the advertising literature of the day. This is most essential, as so relatively few of the general public know of its advantage. Every order secured by this display is new business with a guaranteed 20 per cent profit and secures to the store a new customer.

The success of this holiday depends largely on the energy with which it is featured. This publicity work should begin from a month to three weeks previous to the occasion and pursued with a vigor and enthusiasm that will in no uncertain manner keep the event to the front as one of the most popular floral holidays of the year. Each retailer should see to it that his entire list of customers and prospects receive literature that will impress upon them the importance of the day and extol the use of flowers in its celebration.

Window cards and signs with "Mothers' Day; Second Sunday in May" should find place in the window and about the store three weeks before in order to get people thinking and talking and perhaps giving orders in advance.

All Flowers Suitable.

The stock to be featured as being suitable for gifts and memorials should consist of everything seasonable in plants and flowers; your mother's own favorites or selections she might have expressed a wish for were she present to enjoy them. Plants are just as suitable as cut flowers, in fact more so where they are to be cared for and enjoyed, as they will last so much longer and when used as a memorial for the cemetery are more or less permanent.

The possibilities of the memorial feature in the decoration of the graves is a field which offers great opportunities. The memories of the departed mother are sacred, her love, devotion and sacrifices being ever present in the mind. With a day set aside and officially dedicated in which to honor the mothers of the nation and one's own mother, the best mother that ever lived, what could be more appropriate than a visit to the cemetery to decorate the grave of that sainted mother with plants or flowers.

In the development of the day this feature should be given prominence and everything possible done to make the custom universal. Where the grief is recent the visit to the cemetery will suggest itself, while in the literature of the event the beauty of its observance in this manner can be extolled and the increasing use of flowers encouraged.

Basket and Plant Arrangements.

Coming frequently such a short time after Easter there is not sufficient time in which to work up a stock of flowering plants as can be profitably handled, but much can be done in combination plant pans made up of geraniums, candytuft, forget-me-nots, pansies, together with coleus, tradescantias, ferns and other miscellaneous items which, after arrangement will, in a week's stay in the greenhouse, fill out with foliage and flowers which, when given the artistic finishings of the flower shop make very acceptable and salable gifts. Six, eight and 10-inch pans are the best earthen receptacles for such filling, while tins to fit the smaller sized plant baskets add to the variety. Pans of all one kind, such as forget-me-nots, daisies, (bellis), candytuft and pansies are striking in their color effect and when decorated will be first choice with many. A window full of these plant arrangements displayed well in advance with a conspicuous card announced "For Mothers' Day" is good publicity.

Cut Flower Baskets.

Small to medium sized vase baskets filled with short roses, sweet peas, calendulas and short snapdragon, all of a kind or in combination will, with a touch of harmonized color in ribbon at the handle, be very salable and of great assistance in quick selling when the rush is on. There is to be no distinction as to color, as all flowers are beautiful and appropriate, so are all colors. Carnations are no longer a preferred flower and should as far as possible be kept in the background. It was the demand for the white carnation which grew to such proportions and greatly exceeded the supply that gave rise to the profiteering cry that has been made so much of by Miss Jarvis.

That the observance of Mothers' Day in the use of plants and cut flowers is not country wide or universal is entirely due to the lack of enthusiasm of the trade in not properly exploiting their business in connection with the event. Where they are alive to their opportunity, preparing large stocks of plants and cut flowers and extensively featuring these in connection with the event in co-operative advertising, they have created and built up a large and profitable business which has grown in some communities to be the greatest floral holiday of the year.

The same demand can be created in every large city or town in the country where the various interests will get together and work co-operatively in featuring plants and flowers in connection with the day. In this broadcast propaganda to establish the custom of using flowers all share alike in the interest created, the individual reward coming to the man making the best bid for the business.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

As Mothers' Day approaches all efforts should be made to attract attention and arouse such interest in connecting plants and flowers with its observance as to more firmly establish this beautiful custom. Everything seasonable in foliage and flowering plants, as well as cut flowers, is to be featured as appropriate as gifts for mother. The great majority of people who come to the shop have no definite idea of just what they want, and the clever salesman or woman can readily dispose of such stock as they recommend.

In many communities the demand for flowers is not nearly as great as in others; this is notable in most of the large cities, although there are exceptions, such as Cleveland, O., where by persistent and well planned co-operative publicity of the trade, the business of the day rivals that of Easter with a great demand for all kinds of flowering plants as well as cut flowers.

It is a common expression: "Mothers' Day does not amount to much in this town," which state of affairs is owing almost entirely to the apathy of the trade itself. The sentiment of the day, the love for mother, is the same everywhere and it is clearly the business of the florists to work up and establish this beautiful custom. In nearly all retail lines half the volume of trade is due almost entirely to publicity, and the flower business would be alike benefitted were they to be equally aggressive in this respect.

Push the telegraph delivery service; it can be made productive of much new business and many will make use of it as soon as they know the possibilities; give it prominence in all your publicity.

Feature all plants and plant baskets the same as at Easter. Plants are like people in this respect, that they look best when they are dressed up, being then much more attractive and salable. Tastefully arranged boxes of cut flowers and vase baskets of one kind of flowers, or in assortment, will when nicely displayed, almost sell themselves while they give prestige to the shop which presents such an assortment.

Be on the lookout at all times for dissatisfied customers. People who have any kind of a grievance, fancied or real, will often not bother to speak of it but will for a time transfer their patronage elsewhere. The ever watchful manager will soon miss these faces and set about finding out the reason for their absence. Some firms have a circular letter which is sent out to customers when it is found that they have closed their account and have had nothing charged for several months. There are individual cases, however, which have to be treated in a more personal manner and diplomatically followed up until the real cause of the trouble is known and settled to the satisfaction of the customer.

How about the outside or street appearance of the store? Are the plant boxes filled with flowering stock and vines up over the cornice of the show window and on the ledges of the windows above? One of the sights of Fifth avenue, New York, is the beautifully decorated store of Charles Thorley, where he has taken advantage of every ledge up to the roof of his five-story building for boxes filled with foliage and flowering plants and vines during the summer, all of which are kept in the best possible condition, making his store stand out prominently amongst other more imposing structures and always an object of admiration to the constantly passing throngs. The pavement close to the wall has also its row of boxes which are most conspicuously filled. After the first frost, evergreens succeed the flowering plants and produce a wonderful decorative effect throughout the winter. The publicity given to the store by this attractive outside appearance is the best kind of advertising, as it is always on view and comes to mind involuntarily when occasions arise for the use of flowers.

There is no more important feature to be kept constantly to the front for creating new business than that of the birthday anniversary which is ever present in every community and for which to accompany congratulations nothing is more important than flowers or other products of the flower shop. A carefully compiled record of these events will, if properly handled, grow in time to become almost a business of itself. Many enterprising members of the trade have through suggestions sent by mail to their customers, secured lists of birthdays which by reminders on their recurrence have been productive of much profitable business.

THE S. A. F.

Executive Board Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the executive board of the society was held in the Woman's Art building, Indianapolis, Ind., March 27-28. President S. S. Pennock in the chair. At the opening session, Monday morning, the president called the meeting to order and directed that the roll be called, when the following were found to be present: S. S. Pennock, Philadelphia, Pa., president; Samuel Murray, Kansas City, Mo., vice president; John Young, New York, secretary; J. J. Hess, Omaha, Neb., treasurer; Wm. F. Gude, Washington, D. C., representative; J. C. Vaughan, Chicago, national councillor; Wm. L. Rock, Kansas City; H. P. Knoble, Cleveland, O.; Paul R. Klingsporn, Chicago; Thos. H. Joy, Nashville, Tenn.; Carl Hagenburger, West Mentor, O.; Wallace R. Pierson, Cromwell, Conn.; Thomas Roland, Nahant, Mass., ex-officio; J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill., president Florists' Hall Association; Jos. Kohout, Libertyville, Ill., president Chicago Florists' Club; Henry Penn, Boston, Mass., chairman national publicity committee; Geo. Asmus, Chicago, chairman National Flower Show committee; Philip Breitmeyer, Detroit, Mich., president Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association; W. H. Culp, Wichita, Kan., president Kansas State Florists' Association; S. W. Coggan, Battle Creek, Mich., president Michigan State Florists' Association; W. D. Howard, Milford, Mass., president American Carnation Society; Roman J. Irwin, New York, president New York Florists' Club; Robt. Pyle, West Grove, Pa., president American Rose Society; W. A. Rowe, Kirkwood, Mo., president St. Louis Florists' Club; James McLaughlin, Cleveland, O., president Cleveland Florists' Club; H. M. Joy, Nashville, president Tennessee State Florists' Association; A. S. Gray, Chickasha, Okla., president Oklahoma State Florists' Association, and Richard Vincent, Jr., White Marsh, Md., president American Dahlia Society.

The delegate members representing the affiliated organizations, all having presented credentials, were duly seated. James McLaughlin was appointed sergeant-at-arms. Secretary Young read his report of the Washington, D. C., trade exhibition, which showed that a profit of $6,520.61 had been realized. The total receipts were $10,408.43, and disbursements $3,887.82. On motion of Mr. Roland the report was accepted and ordered to be made part of the minutes.

The secretary then read the report of the auditing committee, first explaining that this was a new committee of lay members of the society, appointed at the recommendation of Mr. Roland while president. The report, submitted by Percy B. Rigby, New York, chairman of the committee, endorsed the work of the official auditors and the work of the secretary's office in the preparation of the various accounts, which was enormous. The expenditure for auditor's service was, in the opinion of the committee, quite necessary and was both nominal and reasonable.

Considerable discussion ensued as to the advisability of continuing the service of the public auditors, and it was finally decided, on motion of Secretary Young, that the services of the public accountants be continued, with compensation not to exceed that now provided.

The secretary presented his annual financial report, which was quite lengthy and occupied some time in the reading. The report was prefaced with the report of the official auditors, which certified that balances of the different funds as set out were a true and correct statement resulting from receipts and disbursements since January 1, 1921, and conformed with the balance as shown on the books of the secretary as of December 31, 1921. It was shown that there was a balance in the permanent fund of $49,167.68, and in the general fund of $16,653.01. In addition, the secretary read a lengthy state-

First Mothers' Day Anniversary.

The following extract from the Philadelphia news letter in the May 16, 1908, issue of The American Florist will be found interesting as being the first reference to this now important floral holiday and the great demand created for flowers on its first celebration:

"The feature of the week was the rush of business on Saturday. It had been quiet all week but, almost without warning, a demand sprung up on Saturday morning which continued and kept the boys on the go all day long. Everything in white flowers sold out clean, the principal demand being for white carnations. It was the first celebration of Mothers' day, when everyone, man, woman and child, was to honor the 'best mother in the world, their mother,' if happily they still enjoyed her companionship, by wearing a white flower or, if she had passed away, wear a white flower in memory of her. It is proposed to make this an annual event to be commemorated on May 10 each year. This custom is said to have originated in this city, being the idea of a lady resident, which was taken up by the city press and spread in a few days so that it is said to have been observed quite generally in many of the adjacent states. Owing to the short time or notice that was given to it, its observance was not at all general here, when one takes into account the whole population. Yet the demand was enough to use up every white carnation in sight and was a godsend to the commission houses, where the whites had been hanging fire and had, for a long time, been the hardest to sell. It is hoped that with the favorable way in which the idea of Mothers' day was received that it will become, in time, one of the great flower days of the year. Why could not the idea be carried out so that the last resting place of those who have passed away should have placed thereon a bunch of white flowers? It would be a beautiful custom and much might be done by the craft in an unostentatious way to bring it about."

ment from the auditors, embodying comments on the system of accounting in force, and suggesting a few changes looking to its betterment. On motion of Mr. Penn, the secretary's financial report was accepted.

Treasurer J. J. Hess presented his annual financial report, with official reports from the auditors, and bank certificates as to balances, all of which agreed with the secretary's report. On motion of Mr. Culp, the treasurer's report was accepted.

Wm. F. Gude, as Washington representative, stated that while there had been no necessity for particularly active service, he might mention that last fall he had been privately informed that a bill had been introduced which threatened the parcel post service for florists, and he had at once, through the trade papers, called upon all members of the trade to make protests to their congressmen against the passage of such bill. The bill, he had since been informed, had been practically withdrawn. He had considered it advisable, he said, at the time of the disarmament conference in Washington, to follow the example set by the Rotary Club and other organizations, and send flowers on the opening of the conference. He had also sent a large basket of American Beauty roses in the name of the society, but at his own expense. On motion of Mr.

Ammann the report was received and the action concurred in, and a vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Gude.

Kansas City Convention, August 15-17.

Vice-President Murray reported as to the renting of the auditorium in Kansas City for the August convention. Secretary Young stated that he and President Pennock had visited Kansas City and looked over the auditorium, and it was found very suitable for the purposes of the society, and it was arranged to secure it. It was also arranged that the sessions of the convention be held in the same building. There was an area of 18,000 to 19,000 square feet available for the exhibits, and the rental terms were $1,000 if the public were not admitted, and $2,000 if the building was to be open to the public. President Pennock spoke of the fine reception he and the secretary received in the Convention City, and of the enthusiasm existing among the trade over convention prospects. It was arranged that details as to trade space and other matters be discussed at a later session of the board.

Mr. Penn made a verbal report for the national publicity committee. He stated that the work of the committee had been very satisfactory so far this year, with more enthusiasm than had been shown in the past two years. The committee was convinced that the florist business had prospered, and much of the prosperity was due to the publicity campaign. Two of the outstanding features of this business was the work of Mr. Asmus and Mr. Ammann, who gave unselfishly of their time, and thanks were due them for their tireless devotion, and to the members of the committee for their interest in the campaign. A meeting of the committee had been held that morning, at which it had been arranged to spend in national advertising at once a further sum of $10,000, making a total expenditure of $20,000 already for 1922. On motion of Mr. Hagenburger, seconded by Mr. Roland, a vote of thanks was given to Mr. Asmus and Mr. Ammann and to the other members of the committee.

Mr. Asmus, chairman of the publicity finance committee, first referring to the fact that a flower stand had been opened at the National Flower Show then in progress in Indianapolis, for which flowers were donated, and from which it was expected at least $1,500 in revenue might result, all of which was to be turned over to the publicity committee. He believed it was possible to do the same thing at other shows throughout the country. There were now, he said, 27 allied organizations doing district advertising, and a large number of them contributed to the national fund. The success of the national campaign was not entirely due to the magazine advertising; much of it was due to the interest it had aroused among florists, educating them to advertise. It was not only the money spent, but the kind of work the committee was back of, urging and fostering that had much to do with success in keeping flowers before the public. A better co-operative spirit was now very apparent.

Mr. Ammann reviewed some of the difficulties which had been presented to the publicity committee, particularly that one in regard to the deficiency reported some time back by the committee, created by the negligence of many subscribers in meeting their obligations, and removed by a loan from the society. That loan had all been returned and put back into the general fund, so that today the society stood as not having contributed $1 to the national publicity campaign, while the campaign had a good working capital. Many organizations, and some few corporations, realized that the florists were doing some wonderful work. It was the tie-up that made such advertising profitable, and it must surely be felt that great results were forthcoming from the local co-operative campaigns.

Mr. Pyle eulogized the publicity work done by the committee, especially in regard to an important outcome, the establishment of campaigns in local districts. He reviewed the career of the nurserymen's advertising campaign, which had finished rather badly, and Vaughan should introduce a resolution defining his line of action in his relations to the United States Chamber of Commerce in this and other matters of trade interest. Adjournment was here taken until 8 p. m.

Second Session, Monday Evening.

The board reconvened at 8:30 p. m., and President Pennock gave the floor to Mr. Ammann, who introduced J. J. Davis, an entomologist of the Illinois Experimental station. Mr. Davis said it was his desire to bring to the attention of the society the fact that he had state organizations were working together for the success of the meeting, and everything pointed to a successful gathering as far as housing and care were concerned.

Mr. Robinson, of the convention bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, Kansas City, was present. He imparted much information in regard to the Convention City, and plans for the convention. The auditorium, he said, was just about two blocks from practically all of the principal hotels. The average August temperature in Kansas City was not as high as usually experienced in Buffalo, N. Y. Did anyone doubt this, there were government statistics in support of it. The banquet hall at the Muhlebach hotel was cooled by refrigeration, something new to many visitors. The rental of the hall, he said, was $2,000, but his bureau was paying half of it. The bureau was also ready to furnish all the clerical help, attend to the registration of delegates, and to send out quantities of printed matter, said, would be pleased to find that the old trail from St. Louis to Kansas City was paved about half way, and the drive was usually made in a night, or a day.

President Pennock suggested that the official programme for the convention should be discussed. Secretary Young explained that the programme was generally left to the president and secretary, but the opinions of members of the board should be of material assistance in its compilation. Considerable time was spent discussing various suggestions made looking to an attractive programme, and a resulting enthusiastic attendance. Many ideas were evolved, all of which Secretary Young said would have careful consideration, with a view to their adoption. The rental for space in the trade exhibition was, on motion, fixed at 60 cents per square foot.

J. McHutchison, chairman of the committee on tariff and legislation, said there was nothing to report for his committee beyond what had appeared in the trade papers.

A communication from Robert C. Hodgin, and Fred J. Gammage, president and secretary respectively of the Floriculture Club, University of Illinois, suggesting an affiliation with the Society of American Florists in some form to be decided upon, so that, perhaps under the name of Junior Society of American Florists the club could expand into a national organization, creating a benefit which should be mutual, was, after some discussion, referred to a committee for consideration, and instructions to bring in a recommendation. The chair appointed Mr. Hagenburger, Mr. Kohout and Mr. Culp as such committee.

expressed his belief that the nurserymen would have to come into contact with the society's publicity enthusiasts with the idea of profiting by experiences exchanged.

Mr. Vaughan regretted the failure partially of the nurserymen's campaign and stated that the seedsmen's efforts had been quite successful, magazine articles prepared being generally accepted on similar lines to paid matter. On motion of Secretary Young, Mr. Penn's report was accepted and ordered to be made part of the minutes of the meeting.

Mr. Vaughan was called upon for information as to the working of the new office he filled, that of councillor of the society in the United States Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Vaughan made a very lengthy address in the course of which he touched upon a number of subjects pertinent to the relations of the society with the chamber. He was particularly concerned as to the dissemination of the reports forthcoming from the chamber to the society's members, such reports being very voluminous. He was willing to make a synopsis of matter in these reports of interest to the trade. He would like, he said, to submit to the board in some way, a resume of the proceedings of the chamber, preferably to a committee to be appointed from the board, which could decide upon any necessary action, and on advisability of publication. On motion of Mr. Hagenburger, seconded by Mr. Hess, the appointment of such a committee was directed, and President Pennock named it as comprising J. C. Vaughan, chairman, W. F. Gude, Carl Hagenburger, and Robert Pyle.

President Pennock announced that it was necessary that Mr. Vaughan have the authorization of the board to act as the councillor of the society, for presentation to the chamber and on motion of Mr. Asmus, it was directed that credentials be prepared, to be signed by the president and secretary.

Considerable discussion was projected in regard to the carrying out and extension of Quarantine No. 37, but no action was taken, although it was arranged that at a later session Mr.

prepared for publication a book covering descriptions of and data concerning insects and other pests of the greenhouse and garden. The book would contain over 300 pages, he said, and appeared to be too large for consideration as a publication by any college, experimental station, or even the United States of Agriculture. He did not seek remuneration for the work, but was of the opinion that the society might recognize its value and assist in some way in its production. The book was cross-indexed in a most complete manner, so that plant species and their troubles could readily be located.

On motion of Mr. Culp, it was decided that the matter be placed in the hands of a committee for consideration, and to report at the August Convention. The chair appointed as such committee: J. F. Ammann, Prof. H. B. Dornier, and the society's entomologist.

Matters concerning the Kansas City Convention were taken up, and a long discussion took place. Mr. Rock reported conditions as then existing in regard to preparations. Some 15 or 16 committees had been appointed, and details appeared to be taken care of very well. The local florists and local and the bureau's publicity men would also be at the disposal of the society continually. Those traveling by motor, he

MOTHERS' DAY FLOWER BOX FOR WINDOW DISPLAY—INTERIOR.

In accordance with the understanding arrived at toward the close of the first session, Mr. Vaughan introduced a resolution, to be forwarded to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the effect that the board of directors of the Society of American Florists, in session at the Fifth National Flower Show, Indianapolis, requested that by authority of his office he direct the federal horticultural board to make no further restrictions in the present regulations of Quarantine No. 37; and that he direct that said federal board take immediate measures for relief from present drastic restrictions complained of by state horticultural societies; and, finally, that he direct said federal board to proceed no farther in the curtailment of private or commercial plant and bulb importations. The resolution further stated that the board of directors was giving this request no press publicity, and awaited the secretary's views and action on the question so vital to the increase and progress of the florists' industry.

An earnest discussion followed the reading of the resolution. Many thought it was entirely out of the scope of the executive board, and was a question for the convention, and this feeling seemed to prevail. Finally, on motion of Mr. Pyle, seconded by Mr. Pierson, the resolution was laid on the table. Adjournment was taken until Tuesday morning.

Third Session, Tuesday Morning.

The first business was the report of the committee in regard to the Floriculture Club of the University of Illinois. Mr. Klingsporn read the report, which was to the effect that the organization of a Junior Society of American Florists as outlined did not promise benefits of real value to the society sufficient to justify such a proceeding, but the committee believed that if the student body had ultimate membership in the society in view, it would be of more benefit, mutually, for the students to join the society as soon as eligible. Mr. Culp moved the adoption of the report, and his motion was seconded. After a prolonged discussion, however, in which those taking part expressed sympathy with the plans of the students to connect with the society in some way, Mr. Ammann moved in amendment to Mr. Culp's motion that a committee of three be appointed to confer with the students' representatives before the meeting at Kansas City, and report on recommendations at that meeting. The amendment, which was accepted as a substitute motion, was duly seconded and passed. The chair continued the previous committee to act in the matter, adding to it Mr. Ammann.

Mr. Penn, as chairman of the committee appointed at the Washington convention to consider the question of standardization of cut flowers and plants, presented a report covering a plan prepared by L. F. Murphy, Cincinnati, O., chairman of the National Flower Growers' Association committee, and also a report signed by E. Allan Peirce, representing the New England District of the National Flower Growers' Association, outlining a plan evolved by the eastern growers. The chair explained that this question had been referred to the executive board at the convention. Mr. Roland explained that the reports presented were to be taken as the report of the committee he, as president, appointed in Washington at the request of the convention, and it was before the board for action. The individual reports differed in very many respects. Mr. Asmus moved, and his motion was seconded and carried, that inasmuch as the matter was being taken care of by individual organizations, it should be referred back to them to work out a solution, and that the committee be discharged with the thanks of the society.

The report of the committee on Dutch bulbs, expected at this session, not being ready, on motion of Mr. Asmus the committee was directed to present it at the August convention.

A project looking to an establishment and observance of Armistice Day referred to the board by the Washington convention was, on motion of Mr. Asmus referred to the publicity committee. The advisability of promoting field work for membership, also referred to the board, was by motion referred to the meeting of vice-presidents to be held at the Kansas City convention.

Secretary Young referred to the fact that Past President Patrick Welch, Boston, was quite ill, and moved that Mr. Penn be authorized to send him a message and flowers from the board, conveying sympathy and best wishes for a speedy recovery. The chair suggested that the message take the form of a letter bearing the signatures of the members of the board, and it was so ordered.

Mr. Culp referred to the matter of the resolution in regard to Quarantine No. 37 tabled by the board the previous day, and read a substitute resolution which he moved be accepted and passed. The resolution was as follows:

"To the Honorable Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.:

"The executive board of the Society of American Florists would respectfully urge that you direct the federal horticultural board that no further extensions, or changes in rulings for application of Quarantine No. 37 be made without due notice and opportunity for a hearing be given to those whose interests will be affected by such contemplated ruling or change in application.

"A sufficient time having elapsed since the establishing of said quarantine to show its working efficiency and also where modifications or adjustments are needed for its harmonious action. We would also urge that the board also be directed to take up, by conference, or otherwise, with those whose interests are affected, and are qualified to act, the various items and figures which up to this time have been brought to the attention of the federal horticultural board as being unjust, unnecessary or showing discrepancy in the application of said quarantine. This request being made not in criticism but with a view to harmonious adjustment and a maximum of benefit and efficiency in the working of Quarantine No. 37 for the good of those whose interests it is designed to protect."

After a short discussion, the resolution, duly seconded, was passed.

On motion of Secretary Young, it was directed that a committee on final resolutions be appointed, and the chair appointed the following as such committee; Roman J. Irwin, J. C. Vaughan and S. W. Coggan.

The balance of the session was taken up by an informal talk, during which the members of the board representing affiliated organizations spoke of the activities of their various bodies, especially in so far as they related to the society. Adjournment was taken until 1 p. m.

The board reconvened pursuant to adjournment, and President Pennock called for the report of the committee on amendments to by-laws. Thos. Roland, chairman. Mr. Roland presented a well thought out report, the dealing with which took up considerable time, especially as each amendment offered was carefully explained, both as to purport and effect. The amendments offered were as follows:

1. An amendment providing for the appointment of an executive committee, to consist of the president, vice-president, junior ex-president, and two directors to be appointed by the president, to serve one year, on taking office, January 1. In the intervals between the meetings of the directors this committee to have charge of the affairs of the society subject to the general and specific directions of the society and directors.

2. An amendment providing for the appointment of reserve fund trustees, the same to consist of the treasurer and three past-presidents, to be appointed by the president, one for one year, one for two years and one for three years. Members to elect their own chairman. This committee, in the intervals between the meetings of the directors and subject to the general and specific direction of the society and directors, to have the care and management of the society's reserve funds, and the power to sell, exchange, invest, reinvest and transfer the same. If adopted by the society, this amendment would eliminate the finance committee in so far as its functions, along similar lines.

3. An amendment governing the permanent fund, to be in future known as "Reserve Funds." Money accruing from life membership payments to form a reserve fund, the interest of which can be used annually for general or specific purposes. The permanent fund or any part of it not to be used for any purpose whatever without the approval of a two-thirds vote of the entire board of directors, and to receive a majority of all votes cast at the annual election for officers; to be placed on the ballot and voted on as are elected officers of the society.

4. An amendment defining the treasurer's duties and powers. He shall deposit funds in bank or trust company as the board of directors shall approve, where his account as treasurer shall be kept, and all payments shall be made by check. He shall have in his safekeeping the bonds, deeds, notes and other evidences of property. He shall give bonds equal in amount to the funds in his charge. In the absence or disability of the treasurer, the directors may appoint a temporary treasurer, who shall have all the powers and duties of the treasurer.

5. An amendment instituting a budget committee, and defining its duties. Their duties to be the preparation of an annual budget, to be passed at the mid-winter meeting of the executive board.

6. An amendment defining the status of the president in regard to committees. He shall be an ex-officio member of all committees, and he shall have the right to attend and be heard at all meetings of such committees, but, at all such meetings, except in the case of the executive and budget committees, he shall not vote except in the case of a tie.

All these amendments were, by motions, accepted by the board.

Mr. Ammann moved, and the motion was carried that an amendment be recommended directing that the secretary be elected by the executive board instead of by the convention.

Secretary Young moved and his motion was carried, that an amendment be recommended to make the councillor of the United States Chamber of Commerce a member of the executive board.

Mr. Asmus moved that an amendment be recommended making the committee on tariff and legislation a constitutional committee and its chairman a member of the executive board, and the motion passed.

Mr. Kohout, at the request of the State Florists' Association of Illinois, suggested that affiliated bodies be allowed to elect their directors for more than one year, it being believed that a greater interest in the society's affairs would thus result. In a discussion of the matter, Mr. Asmus, Secretary Young, Mr. Pierson and Mr. Ammann reviewed the proceedings which led to the adoption of the present regulation in affiliation procedures, and action on the question was not deemed necessary.

An interesting part of the proceedings now took place. The matter of the medal of honor recommended by Ex-President Roland at the Washington convention came up in the regular way being on the business agenda for discussion. Secretary Young read the recommendation as it appeared in the presidential address, as follows:

"Many years ago this society established a gold medal, which I understand has been awarded but twice in all these years. Now I believe we should not bestow it except after the most careful consideration, but I cannot but think that the progress of many branches of our profession during 20 years might have been rewarded wisely through the medal we have had so long established. This would tend to encourage and to spur, especially those whose work is so valuable and so often not rewarded by financial returns. Much of the scientific progress needed in our profession is by work for love and for knowledge and this sort of work needs our help in any way we can give it.

"I therefore suggest that the society re-establish this medal as a medal of honor, to be awarded by the board of directors annually, to the man or woman, firm or institution, in the United States or elsewhere, who has done the most in recent years to promote horticulture, using the phrase in its broadest meaning. Members of our society to be eligible for this medal, for meritorious service of the same kind. It may be awarded once in five years, to the members of the Society of American Florists, who, during the preceding five years, shall have rendered services best calculated to advance the largest interest in this society. I do not believe, however, that the medal should ever come to be considered an internal operation, but that the thought of the directors ever should be to encourage others. I would suggest that the board of directors decide the award by ballot at the annual meeting held about Mid-Lent."

Geo. Asmus Awarded Medal of Honor.

Mr. Pierson in a short address spoke of the significance of an award of this kind, and referred particularly to the fact that in his opinion no society had received more unselfish devotion than the devotion of George Asmus to the Society of American Florists. He spoke of the manner in which Mr. Asmus had faced the National Flower Show situation in Cleveland, O., and of how he had the key to it in the change to Indianapolis. In recognition of this, and his past work of years, he wished, he said, to nominate Mr. Asmus for the medal of honor to be awarded this year. Mr. Hagenburger seconded the nomination, as also did Mr. Knoble, Secretary Young, Mr. Ammann, Mr. Klingsporn, President Pennock, Treasurer Hess, and Mr. Roland, and a rising vote was called for, awarding the medal to one who had proved himself an unselfish worker for everybody, selling plants and flowers. (Mr. Asmus was not in the room at the time. Mr. Pierson was directed to locate him and present him at the platform. In the meantime, on motion of Mr. Roland, it was decided to make formal presentation of the medal at the Kansas City convention. Mr. Asmus now appearing, amid applause and cheers, he was addressed by President Pennock, as follows:

"Mr. Asmus, there is a medal of honor which is awarded every five years to the person who has done the most, and made the most sacrifices for the Society of American Florists, and the gentlemen in this room have gone over the field very carefully and they have selected you to be the recipient of that medal. It gives us great pleasure today to hand you one of the biggest honors that the society has ever handed any member. We believe that that honor is more than fully merited by the work that you have done in the past five or 10 years, which has been prodigious in every way, your time unstintingly given, your business sacrificed, not only your business but your family as well. In the case of the flower show, you have given every minute, night and day—as some men said, you slept on the job and never flinched. Even when you had the whole board against you, you carried them through with your enthusiasm, your push and your energy.

"It gives us a great deal of pleasure to be able to award this medal to you, as a small recompense for the work which you have done in the past five or 10 years. The medal is not ready to give to you at this time. We are sorry it is not ready, but it will be presented to you in August, at the convention in Kansas City."

Mr. Asmus made a feeling response. The feeling which prompted the award, he said, was quite sufficient for him, reward enough for anything he might have done, without anything more material. He was greatly pleased to accept the confidence and thought of the society, and should always cherish the token.

Some further discussion was had as to future bestowal of the medal of honor, and, finally, on motion of Mr. Roland, it was decided that the chair appoint a committee of three to consider names and institutions for the award.

A long discussion then ensued on the budget. Mr. Knoble, for the budget committee, presented a report embodying a budget for the year amounting to $14,230, and an income estimated at $16,900. The income estimate, he said, was placed at the lowest possible figures. On motion of Mr. Knoble, it was decided that the board recommend that the society at the Kansas City convention contribute $2,500 to the publicity campaign.

Mr. Knoble, for the finance committee, presented a report. The report showed that the permanent fund balance of $13,000 had been reinvested in government bonds for a six months' period, and the committee had given authority to the treasurer to reinvest for an additional period of six months following the expiration of the original period. The treasurer had been instructed to rent a safety deposit box for the needs of the society. The report was, on motion of Mr. Ammann, accepted.

A report from the committee on the annual report embodied a proposal from the A. T. DeLaMare Co., New York, to print the report as a business proposition, adding matter to the volume which should make it a valuable year book. Advertising would be accepted for the book, and the publishers would divide with the society any profit which might result over actual cost of publication and distribution. The society, however, was to appropriate $1,000 toward the expense, for a term not to exceed five years. On motion of Mr. Roland, the report was accepted, as well as the offer of the DeLaMare company, with the provision that the annual be sold for a price not less than the annual membership dues. On motion of Mr. Asmus, the appropriation for the annual was ordered to be made part of the budget.

Fifth National Flower Show.

Chas. Russell, who acted as secretary to the judges, is full of apologies for an accidental omission in the list of awards in the trade section of a certificate of merit awarded to the A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, for a magnificent display demonstrating an up-to-date furnishing of a retail flower shop and accessories in connection with the same. The omission is occasion for regret, as the exhibit was most notable in the trade section.

Vouchers are being drawn for the premiums awarded at the show, and with the vouchers for the subscribers to the guarantee fund are being started through the regular channel for verification, first to the chairman of the committee, thence to the president, and later to the treasurer, which course may account for a little delay in the ultimate receipt of checks.

The National Flower Show was the final topic for discussion. Mr. Asmus, as chairman of the National Flower Show committee, presented a very lengthy report, which included a financial statement of expectations based on returns up to the fourth day of the show. He reviewed the preparations for the Fifth National Flower Show from the start until the Cleveland fiasco, and then detailed the measures, both extraordinary and energetic, that were taken to save the show dates by going to Indianapolis. Mr. Asmus finished the report amid applause, and, on motion of Mr. Hagenburger, the document was accepted and filed.

Mr. Asmus bespoke praise for Irwin Bertermann, whose work Mr. Asmus eulogized, and whom he described as really his sub-partner in the show. Mr. Bertermann entering the room at the time was called upon for a few remarks, in the course of which he said his relations with those in charge of the show had all along been most pleasant. He had only one request left to make, and that was that the show be left intact until the last hour and last minute on the final Saturday night. Secretary Young also spoke very highly of Mr. Bertermann's work and enthusiasm in connection with the show.

Final Resolutions.

The committee on final resolutions presented the following, which were unanimously passed: "In view of the great Fifth National Flower Show being held in Indianapolis, Ind., March 25-April 1, we the undersigned committee, beg to submit the following resolution:

"Whereas: In these closing days of the Fifth National Flower Show it is fitting, and a genuine pleasure to note the willing cooperation of many individuals, societies and organizations who have carried it forward,

"Therefore, be it resolved: That we, the executive board of the Society of American Florists, herewith express our sincere appreciation of the activities of those who have helped to make this exhibition; to Irwin Bertermann, chairman of the local executive committee, who, with the united support of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, through its general secretary, John B. Reynolds, brought to us at Cleveland in our emergency the enthusiastic welcome of your city; second, the endorsement of the State Florists' Association of Indiana and later their collective exhibit.

"Further, our grateful thanks to that great body of exhibitors, whose plans, though made for another city, and though coming in numbers from far New England to a greater distance and under increased risk, immediately consented to the change; and to those guarantors who renewed their allegiance and financial support to the new location.

"And to Governor Warren T. McCray of Indiana, the State Department of Conservation, the Mayor of Indianapolis, and the City Park board.

"Further, to the chairmen and members of the florists' local committees, who at the sacrifice of their own business at this critical time have labored with full devotion.

"And finally, let us say: We have never received such interested service and co-operation as from the Indianapolis press and local merchants; our sincere thanks to them and everyone we have come in contact with in your city."

After an informal discussion on various matters, the board adjourned sine die. JOHN YOUNG, Sec'y.

THE Massachusetts Horticultural Societies' exhibition of rhododendrons, azaleas and irises will be held at Horticultural hall, Boston, June 3-4; the peony exhibition, June 17-18.

CALIFORNIA is in the best condition of any of the western states, it is said, due to its diversified business and the variety of its products. Its business leaders are original and they get results.

SAMUEL MURRAY, the well known florist of Kansas City, Mo., and vice-president of the Society of American Florists, says the Easter buying showed a tendency to lower prices and less recklessness on the part of the buying public, than at any time during the war or since, indicating a slow but certain return to normal conditions.

Personal.

E. C. Vick, of the advertising firm of Hanff-Metzger, Inc., New York, who has been on the sick list, is again at his desk.

Post Offices to Observe Mothers' Day.

The Postal Bulletin, issued Monday, May 1, contained the following suggestion from the Postmaster General:

"Sunday, May 14, is Mothers' Day. I suggest, as an appropriate recognition of our pride in and veneration for our mothers, that the United States flag fly on all post office buildings on that day. Nearly all post offices have flags; every office should have one."

WE ARE in receipt of the premium list for the annual exhibition of the American Sweet Pea Society, to be held in Horticultural hall, Boston, Mass., June 24-25. Copies may be had on application to Secretary Wm. Gray, Bellevue avenue, Newport, R. I.

Plant Quarantine Conference.

WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 15.

The plant quarantine conference called by the Federal Horticultural Board will meet in Washington, D. C., May 15, to discuss the classes of plants to be admitted under the limitations established in Regulation 3 of Quarantine No. 37. The board hopes to secure from this conference information that will clearly justify action on one or more of the following propositions: First, the continuation of the classes now in Regulation 3; second, the need, if any, for restricting the classes of plants now included in this regulation, and third, the necessity, if any, of adding to the classes of bulbs or plants under this regulation.

National Hospital Day, May 12.

All florists' organizations should make it a point to get behind National Hospital Day, May 12. Remember the mothers in the hospitals. Adopt some plan of co-operation that will encourage this day. While the day, at the present time, comes at a very inopportune time, being so near Mothers' Day, plans are now under way, and progressing favorably, to induce the National Hospital Association to postpone National Hospital Day to some time in June. I believe with the right kind of aggressive work along this line this can be brought about next year.

National Hospital Day lends itself to sentiment to a very unusual degree. It has the same qualities that Mothers' Day has and, if promoted by the florists, can be made another big holiday. For this reason it is urged that all florists and florists' organizations do what they can to co-operate this year, in order to hold the interest of the public, so that we can make something out of the day, if it is postponed until June next year.

GEORGE ASMUS.

Mothers' Day Co-Operation.

BY AMERICAN LEGION AND AUXILIARY.

The American Legion and Auxiliary and the Society of American Florists' campaign for greater Mothers' Day publicity, full account of which appeared in our issue of April 29, page 740, is a big success. The society has received a goodly number of requests for matrices and posters of the Legion advertisement. Florists are already running the advertisement jointly in the newspapers of some of the larger cities. The trade in many cities is in touch with the local American Legion posts and has even obtained the permission of merchants in other lines of enterprise to give the poster a prominent place in their establishments. There seems to be a very wholehearted co-operation on the part of the florists all over the country and the national publicity committee of the society wishes to thank them for their willingness to co-operate.

If there are any florists who have not received the Legion matrix or posters be sure and send for them at once, addressing Hilmer V. Swenson, Directing the Campaign for the S. A. F. Publicity Committee, 225 North Michigan avenue, Chicago, which will be mailed by special delivery.

HUGE SUPPLY OF STOCK.

The market is generally flooded with stock of every description, both outdoor and greenhouse material. Prices in most cases have dropped to low levels in the wholesale district. Retailers seem to be busy enough, but they hardly make a dent in the huge daily arrivals. Roses are mostly poor stock and when one sees peddlers on every street corner, with fairly good flowers, you can rest assured that the stores are having a difficult time to get remunerative prices. Easter plants have cleaned up remarkably well and few are to be seen in the local markets. Tulips are exceptionally hard to move and the prices growers are receiving are most unsatisfactory. Narcissi are about done for in the growing sections, although locally grown stock cleans up readily. This seems to be a lilac year. We do not remember when lilacs have been so plentiful or popular as has been the case this spring, and they sell well. The stock is of excellent quality. Pot grown lilies are very plentiful and move slowly. Some rambler rose bushes are yet obtainable. Small offerings of azaleas and rhododendrons about complete the list of flowering plants. Shippers report very little activity and the end of the season is about in sight.

NOTES.

The new flower store of Alfred H. Meyer and Louis Garbaldi, 901 Clement street, is probably the finest in that section of the city. The style of the business is the Golden Gate Floral Co. Both members of the firm are prominent as dahlia specialists, having gardens at 239 Hanover street.

P. Conci, Colma, is cutting his first crop of outdoor Ulrich Brunner roses. His fields are in splendid shape. He expects a steady supply throughout the summer months.

Albert O. Stein, president of the Retail Florists' Association, underwent an operation for throat trouble recently and from last reports he is recovering rapidly.

Miss Ella E. Barton recently had her shop at 2209 Union street remodeled and decorated, making it one of the most attractive in that neighborhood.

M. H. Ebel was a visitor recently from Sacramento and reports a fine Easter trade there, slightly ahead of 1921.

Luther Burbank, of Santa Rosa, and wife attended the recent wild flower show in this city.

STOCK CLEANS UP AT WEEK END.

The early part of last week was practically a repetition of the previous one, with an unwieldy supply and a very light demand, but the call quickened toward the week end and Saturday wound up with a clearance of everything with the exception of Easter and calla lilies. These two items have been a drug on the market since the holidays and it has been a long time since either was quoted so low in this market. Prices in quantity lots ran as low as $8 to $10 per 100. American Beauty roses are in moderate supply and were quoted at $9 per dozen for specials and from that on down to $4 per 100 for shorts. The supply of roses has been rather top heavy, with the consequence that it was impossible to stick to list prices, but the quality has been of the best. Premier and Columbia are the favorites with Butterfly next. Other kinds include American Legion, Ophelia, Pilgrim, Sunburst, Hilda and Double White Killarney. At least one-half of the carnation arrivals have been poor in quality with good stock holding firm at $6 per 100, while the balance has to be disposed of at any price. Laddie holds firm at $10 and $12. Snapdragon is still good property. The cool weather has improved the quality of the sweet peas and some very good stock is arriving. Prices range from 50 cents to $2 per 100. Yellow daisies are plentiful and cheap. Outdoor lilac is seen in quantity and wholesales at 50 cents per bunch.

NOTES.

Both the Florists' and Gardeners' Club and the Retail Florists' Association hold their regular monthly meetings this week. Both organizations promise an excellent programme this month with good speakers, and all are urged to attend whether they are members or not.

The Dave Hill Co. has moved from its old location on Fifth avenue temporarily, while a modern building is being erected. Dave has leased a room in the new building for a term of 10 years at a rental of $10,000 per year.

De Forest Ludwig, of the E. C. Ludwig Co., is enjoying a little vacation visiting friends and relatives in Kansas. Ed Ludwig of the same firm has been put in charge of the greenhouses located at Ludwig Station, Pa.

E. J. McCallum of the McCallum Co., is with the local Chamber of Commerce on its annual golden rule tour. This year they will visit the principal towns in Ohio and eastern Indiana, and expect to be gone a week.

The G. P. Weaklen Co. has moved into its new location on Penn avenue and when alterations on the store are completed they will have one of the most up-to-date shops in the country. Recent heavy frosts have damaged early fruits and vegetation to a great extent in this section.

LOW PRICES CONTINUE.

This was another week of low prices, oversupply and poor conditions in general has come to a close. There really is no set market value on any ordinary stock. The exceptionally fine stock arriving is clearing up fairly well but the price for such stock is really absurd. Roses of the fancy grades bring eight to 10 cents on a limited amount, then the balance is cleaned up for what they can get for it. Carnations are selling at two to four cents and six cents is the top price for the fancy varieties. There is still a large supply of jonquils coming in with a very light demand for them. Sweet peas were moved with difficulty the early part of the week but they cleaned up well, April 29 forenoon, and the call was good all day and thousands of sweet peas could have been sold Saturday afternoon. Snapdragons of very fair quality are also a drug. It carries over day after day and then eventually is sold to the street boys. Orchids and lily of the valley are holding their own, the demand being still abreast of the supply. The growers look for better conditions next week owing to Mothers' Day. The carnations will be held back as much as possible for the next two weeks, which will likely help conditions somewhat.

The stockholders of both markets met at Young's hotel, April 29, and voted to consolidate. They have an option on the Cyclorama building in the South end, for the new market, but there is much dissatisfaction about the location, as it is a long distance from both depots.

BUSINESS GOOD SINCE HOLIDAY.

Business since Easter has been very good. An abundance of jonquils, daffodils, Poetaz and Emperor narcissi, Darwin tulips, marguerites, freesias, myosotis and cut pansies are on the market. Roses of all varieties are excellent. Laddies is the favorite in carnations, all being of good quality. Spanish irises and sweet peas are plentiful.

NOTES.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Association was held April 21 at the Osborn house. It was ladies' night and a goodly representation of the fair sex was present. J. C. Campbell gave an interesting talk on floral subjects.

The five and 10 cent stores, as well as the department stores, are now handling shrubs and plants for spring planting.

F. J. Keller and wife left for California April 20, where they will visit their son and daughter, who reside there.

Geo. T. Boucher reported the biggest business this Easter in the history of the establishment.

J. B. Keller's Sons are having an excellent wedding trade.

CHESTER.

DEFIANCE, O.—Simon Brouwer has purchased property at Sunday and Clinton streets, where he will erect a greenhouse, 35x100 feet and a service building, 20x25 feet, in the near future.

Dreer's Pot Grown Hardy Perennials

The Stock here offered, all of best planting size, is pot grown unless otherwise noted. It is superior at all times to field grown stock and particularly so late in the season, there being no risk of loss even under unfavorable weather conditions. Extensive planters, among these the leading Landscape Architects, have for many years shown their appreciation of the Dreer Pot Grown Perennials.

CHICAGO VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE NEW YORK

Evansville, Ind.

SATISFACTORY TRADE REPORTED.

Despite bad weather conditions, florists have enjoyed a very good trade during the past two weeks. Funeral and party work has been good. Business compares very favorably with that of a year ago at this time. The supply of stock is sufficient for all purposes.

NOTES.

Dr. A. J. Knapp, of this city, one of the largest growers of peonies in the United States, is at Dyersburg, Tenn., attending to the cutting of his crop in that state. He also has peony farms in North Carolina. He will remain in Tennessee until his crop has been cut and shipped. The peony crop in this city will come on in plenty of time for Memorial Day. The crop in this section of Indiana is very promising at this time and unless there is a killing frost the yield probably will be much better than last year, which was shortened by freezing weather.

The Wm. Blackman Floral Co. will move from its present location at 518 Main street to 410 Main street within the next month. The new location is now occupied by a candy store and the Blackman company has been unable to get the building for the past two years because the present occupant fought giving it, the matter being carried to the highest court in Indiana. The building is being remodeled and will make an ideal location for a flower shop.

Several flower shows for towns in southern Indiana, southern Illinois and western and northern Kentucky have been arranged for May and June, and one or two small flower shows are scheduled for this city.

W. B. C.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.—There will be a meeting of the creditors of the Stiles Floral Co., bankrupt, at Room 309, Baum building, this city, May 6 at 10 a. m. to declare a first dividend and to pass on all claims on file, including claims of attorneys for fees.

ORDER NOW FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

Business has shown a steady improvement since last week but the returns have not been as satisfactory as the wholesalers would like owing to the unusually heavy supply of stock cut. Mothers' Day, Sunday, May 14, is now occupying the attention of the growers, wholesalers and retailers and from present indications the demand promises to be stronger than ever. Stock in general will be in large supply but whether it will be equal to the demand remains to be seen, but one thing is certain and that is everyone will do well to place all orders immediately so as to protect their supply. Peonies will be quite a factor in the market for this occasion and so will gladioli from the south and local indoor stock which is arriving in heavier supply, with choice Pendleton attracting the attention of the buyers. The supply of roses will be quite heavy and the outlook is bright for large cuts of carnations. Stocks, snapdragons, lupines, daisies, pansies, tulips, narcissus, forget-me-nots, calendulas, sweet peas, callas, lilies, lily of the valley, orchids and jonquils will be included in the offerings together with all other miscellaneous indoor and outdoor stock. While the offerings promise to be large everyone is confident that the demand will absorb all the market has to offer. One of the box manufacturers had a special box made for Mothers' Day and printed what they thought would be more than enough to go around but were agreeably surprised early last week to find that the edition was practically exhausted, which goes to show that all the retailers are making early preparations. Many large sized orders have already been booked for this occasion and inquiries regarding stock are arriving in every mail. The supply houses report a strong demand for

The second annual Pageant of Progress Exposition will be held at the Municipal pier, July 29-August 14, inclusive. Many new features will be added this year, among them a health exhibit, which depicts by moving models practically every phase of disease prevention; a pure food show and exhibits from foreign countries.

There was a large attendance of the trade at the funeral of the late Andrew Benson, Hinsdale, April 29, and the remains were laid to rest at the Bronwood cemetery with Masonic ceremonies. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful.

The Illinois Plant Co. has a fine lot of hydrangeas for Mothers' Day thanks to Manager Thomas Conlon, who takes great pride in showing the trade his stock. A. Henderson & Co. are booking orders for them and the supply will soon be exhausted.

Sharp, Partridge & Co., well known greenhouse glass manufacturers, had their offices bombed April 28 by supposed labor agitators, in opposition to the engagement of Landis award employees in their building operations.

Zech & Mann are booking a large number of orders for Mothers' Day and inquiries are numerous for stock for the occasion. The outlook is bright for a heavy supply at this establishment including all stock in season.

Frank Oechslein's six new Foley houses at the Harlem avenue plant are nearing completion, and most of them are already filled with Memorial Day stock.

Peter Reinberg, Inc., is booking some nice orders for Mothers' Day and there are a large number of inquiries in regard to stock, especially carnations.

J. L. Raske, who has been on sick list for some time, is at home this week and will return to the North Shore hospital for further treatment May 15.

The Joseph Foerster Co.'s line is complete in every respect, with choice candytuft now attracting the attention of the buyers.

The J. A. Budlong Co. is strong on stock of all kinds and will be well fixed as far as the supply is concerned for Mothers' Day.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association is having a strong call for lupines, which it is handling in quantity.

R. F. Gloede, Evanston, had seven golfers arrested last week for making wild shots too close to his greenhouses.

Jim Aldous, of Iowa City, Ia., was here on a business trip April 27, leaving for home the same evening.

John Fuhrmann is planning an elaborate new store and conservatory near his present location.

Vaughan's Seed Store reports excellent counter demand for gladiolus bulbs and rose plants. Seed potatoes are selling well.

The American Bulb Co.'s representatives on the road report good sales in their specialties.

Ed. Eisner is on the job at Kennicott Bros. Co.'s store for a couple of months.

A. Henderson & Co.'s retail business continues to keep all hands busy.

Schiller's employees and their friends to the number of 50 held a dance at the north side establishment, Tuesday evening, May 2, and it is needless to add that everyone had a most enjoyable time. Herman Schiller was master of ceremonies and Manager Asmus joined in the festivities. The conservatory was arranged for the big event and if the employees are as happy for Mothers' Day as they were on the evening of the dance the proprietors will not have to lose any sleep on account of not being able to take care of the orders no matter how heavy the demand will be.

The Wholesale Cut Flower Association met April 27, when the nomination of officers was held as follows: C. J. Michelsen, president; A. T. Pyfer, vice-president; Philip C. Schupp, treasurer; A. C. Kohlbrand and Fred Price, secretaries. C. J. Michelsen, Eric John and Paul Klingsporn were selected to represent the wholesalers on the board of directors of the Allied Florists' Association of Illinois for three, two and one year in the order named.

Poehlmann Bros. Co.'s supply department has a fresh supply of special boxes for Mothers' Day and Manager Tyler says he is able to fill all orders coming his way. The cut flower department is comfortably located in its new home and the stage is all set for a record Mothers' Day trade.

Tonner's will have a large supply of peonies for Mothers' Day in addition to their regular line and the first shipments are now arriving. They handle a large quantity each season from the north in addition to their own locally grown stock.

Victor Bros. report a heavy call for young carnation plants out of soil and carnation cuttings, as well as rose stock. The outlook is bright for a heavy cut of stock for Mothers' Day, especially carnations, at this firm's greenhouses.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are supplying their customers with choice gladioli especially Pendleton. Peonies will be in good supply at their establishment for Mothers' Day not to mention all other reasonable stock.

THE Chicago Tribune of April 30, makes vigorous protest against the commercial use of wild flowers in florists' stores or elsewhere, and suggests restrictive legislation.

August Poehlmann is in Louisville, Ky., on a business trip.

John Walsh has joined the sales force of Kennicott Bros. Co.

Allied Florists' Ass'n of Illinois.

The first meeting of the new board of directors of the Allied Florists' Association of Illinois was held, April 28, at the Randolph hotel, Chicago, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Peter Pearson, president; August Poehlmann, vice-president; Fred Stielow, treasurer; Hilmer V. Swenson, 225 North Michigan avenue, Chicago, appointed secretary.

Upon the election of the new officers a rising vote of thanks was given by the entire board for the splendid service rendered the association by the retiring officers and directors, namely.

It was unanimously adopted by the board to co-operate with the American Legion in connection with the Society of American Florists' publicity campaign preceding Mothers' Day. The sum of $1,200 was appropriated, to be used for newspaper space in which the American Legion's ad would be run.

Chicago Pageant of Progress.

The second annual Pageant of Progress will be held at the Municipal pier, Chicago, July 29-August 14, inclusive, and holds promise of being more successful, both in point of exhibits and attendance, than the remarkable event of 1921. This year the exhibits will be even more extensive, better organized and more attractive, and an attendance in excess of 1,500,000 is being provided for. The entertainment features will excel anything hitherto attempted in Chicago. In character and magnitude they will be in keeping with this great exposition. Spectacular events, in the air, on land and water, morning, afternoon and evening, will add materially to the enjoyment of the visitors.

Buyers have come to realize that it is possible to transact more business in one day at this great trade exposition than can be done elsewhere in 30 days, under ordinary circumstances. Among other notable developments in connection with the Pageant of Progress will be the permanent establishment of a section devoted exclusively to the exhibits of foreign governments. In the "Concourse of Nations" will be found the official representative of practically every civilized country in the world, making the pageant an annual event of international significance. As an educational institution the Pageant of Progress exposition affords superior advantages for the observation and study of progress not only in commerce and industry, but also in the arts and sciences. The leading educators of the central west, headed by President Kinley of the University of Illinois, are giving their best thought and effort to the educational features. Governmental departments, federal, state and municipal, are preparing displays of highly interesting and informative character.

CUT FLOWERS IN FINE DEMAND.

There is an excellent demand for all cut flower stock, the market being well supplied with excellent flowers. Perennials are now arriving and are in fine condition due to the good growing weather. The call for pot plants is very poor, hydrangeas moving the best. A few begonias, jonquils and tulips are being offered. Roses are in fairly good demand, Premier and Mrs. Charles Russell leading. Other offerings include Mrs. Aaron Ward, White Killarney and Milady, prices on all stock ranging from $2 to $15 per 100. Carnations are selling better than roses. Some fine stock is being shipped in from Chicago, selling at $2.50 to $6 per 100. Lily of the valley goes well at $8 to $10 per 100. The call for orchids is all that could be desired, but sweet peas move slowly. Snapdragons, delphiniums and calendulas find a ready market. Excellent daisies and stocks sell well. The quantity of irises in the market moves exceptionally well considering the fact that it is grown in nearly every backyard in the city. Cut tulips are depreciating in quality and the call is rapidly falling off. Easter lilies are hard to move, but yellow and white callas are meeting a fine demand. Southern gladioli are popular. Greens supply is increasing and Asparagus plumosus and A. Sprengeri sell without urging. Prospects are exceptionally bright for a fine Mothers' Day trade.

NOTES.

The third annual flower show of the Garden Club to be staged at the Missouri Botanic Gardens May 20-21 is not creating the interest it should and appeals through the local newspapers are being made. Valuable prizes are offered for cut flowers and pot plants and artistic arrangements.

Friday and Saturday specials of roses are popular at the Grimm & Gorly establishment. The firm featured an attractive

Be sure that the name MEYER is on every spool of green Florists thread that you are buying, and you will get the original and best green Florists thread on the market. A great many of the salesmen on the road and the Florists' supply houses are substituting a cheap and inferior green Florists thread to take the place of the Meyer Green Silkline and Florists' thread.

Therefore, if you cannot get the real article send the goods back and order direct from the manufacturer and you will get the best. Guaranteed two ounces of actual thread to the spool, 16 ounces to the pound.

STOCK MOVING SLOWLY.

While there is enough business to use up the greater quantity of the stock in the wholesale houses, prices rule low and at times it looks as if a glut was setting in. Quantity stocks are roses, snapdragons, sweet peas, callas and Easter lilies. The weather has been cool for the past 10 days, bringing all kinds of flowers on slowly, with the result that stock in all lines is of exceptional quality for the season. Ordinarily such flowers would command high prices for the time of year, but for some reason there is not the pep to business and, as one dealer put it: "We just have to do the best we can with prices rapidly getting back to the 1916 basis." There has also been great competition with the outside blossoms. Lilac has never been better or offered in larger quantities than for the past 10 days. Dogwood was also at its height the past week. Outdoor lily of the valley is in, fine sprays that helps to keep down the price of the forcing stock. The best rose at the present time is Mrs. Chas. Russell, the cool weather having extended the Easter crop and the quality of this superb rose was never better, but it is not bringing the expected prices on account of the competition of Premier and Columbia, with which the market is oversupplied. One large retailer who runs special sales claims to be able to get all the roses he wants with stems 15 inches for $20 per 1,000. Sweet peas in quantity lots are also sold very low, it being necessary to move them quickly to prevent accumulation. Very good southern gladioli is seen, quite the equal to any of the stock grown in summer hereabouts. It carries wonderfully well. Southern peonies and irises are expected the last of the present week. Easter lilies have been hard to move; several growers with belated stock have them standing recent tour to the principal cities of France, Germany and Italy. His description of conditions as regards the florists' trade were very graphic, which were in great contrast to the business as conducted in this country. The Mothers' Day advertisement of the American Legion, and window card, received from the national publicity committee of the Society of American Florists, aroused great interest. After considerable discussion a committee was appointed to collect funds, which will enable the club to place the Legion advertisement in the local newspapers, distribute window cards and otherwise arouse interest in Mothers' Day. The meeting was adjourned.

EASTER AFTERMATH.

The late Easter and its possibilities is still turned over and over when a little knot of the trade gets together. One grower who had a house of hyacinths just right in ordinary weather, overcame the great burst of heat by shading the house and putting in half a ton of ice, which he placed in the original blocks at equal distances among the plants. He said this made an appreciable difference to the flowers at once and, lasting three days, saved the crop as he was able to use all the stock. There was a tremendous quantity of plants sold on the streets and but for the unusually hot weather all agree it would have been a record season.

MOTHERS' DAY.

The wholesalers are preparing for a record Mothers' Day business as orders are already being booked from out-of-town customers, some of whom find it one of their best holidays and see that stocks are secured well in advance. For some reason the majority of the stores here do nothing whatever to feature the event and in consequence business amounts to very little more than on an ordinary day. There is no question but Mothers' Day could be worked up here as has been done elsewhere, in many instances to fully equal the volume of the Easter trade.

NOTES.

The West Philadelphia Rod and Gun Club composed in the main of florists, with Mark Mills as president, had their annual banquet at the Adelphia hotel, April 26. The room was beautifully decorated with flags, plants and vases of flowers. In the hollow center formed by the square table, there was an artistic grouping of foliage and flowering plants. Frank M. Ross had charge of the decorations. President Mills who is noted as an expert, deep sea fisherman was presented with a shark hook of latest design with which he will attempt to break the Ocean City record the coming summer.

A prominent grower declares that forcing roses should not be grown longer than two years as after that they begin to go back; also that insects and diseases that they may have acquired and eggs or larvae that perhaps are in the soil are all removed with the changing of the soil. There is now such a demand for this bench stock that it can be sold for a price as will replace the old plants with new and gives an opportunity to test out the new varieties that are now being offered annually.

AMERICAN FLORIST CO.
440 SOUTH DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving their first shipments of southern peonies and irises for the season. They are making great preparations for Mothers' Day which from the advance orders received promises to be a record breaker. Mrs. Chas. Russell roses, sweet peas and carnations are quantity items at this time.

Wm. K. Harris is filling the houses made empty by the sale of Easter stock, with hybrid tea roses in 6-inch pots for May and June sales. These are fine plants from the growers' bench stock for which there is now such good demand to take the place of the former imported stock from Holland.

Edward Reid would like to see a little more pep to business, but makes up for it by the quality of his stock and a little more energy as occasion requires. High grade Premier and Columbia roses, sweet peas and carnations in variety are features of his stock.

Chas. W. Moorby opened his new store on Germantown avenue, above Church lane, May 1. Mr. Moorby, while recently in the wholesale business, is a practical retailer and will no doubt build up a successful business in his new location.

Charles B. Stahl has bought an eight-acre farm at Trevo, Montgomery county, and is having erected two Lord & Burnham greenhouses, each 28x100 feet, which he will run in connection with his Eleventh street store.

The Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market finds business enough, but they have to hustle for it these days. Premier, Columbia, and Double White Killarney are leaders in their rose stock.

At Habermehl's they have had a busy season since Easter. Their elaborate Walnut street window always contains specimens of well made baskets and vases of flowers artistically arranged.

Berger Bros. have their store full of all kinds of spring flowers, a line of choice roses also being a feature. Easter and calla lilies are quantity items.

BRISK TRADE LAST WEEK.

Trade the past week has been rather brisk, the supply of stock being sufficient, however, for all purposes. Rose prices have held firm the past few days. Excellent carnations have been received. Calendulas, snapdragons, sweet peas and daffodils are arriving in huge lots. Violets are finished and cut pansies find a good call for corsage work. Wedding work is brisk.

NOTES.

The Budlong Rose Co. is cleaning out the old plants in its greenhouses, replacing them with new ones. The firm's daily cuttings are of fine quality.

Eug. Appleton, of the Westminster Greenhouses, is busy with outdoor planting.

Handsomely decorated windows are seen at Fisher the Florist's store.

Albert Holcher continues to cut fine snapdragons and sweet peas.

Scott The Florist has his hands full with outside work.

HUGE VOLUME OF STOCK ARRIVING.

It is doubtful if in any previous year at this season such a great volume of fine stock was ever seen in the wholesale stores of this city. Tea roses and carnations in all the most popular varieties, sweet peas, yellow daisies, orchids, gardenias, lilacs, lilies, callas and various other offerings make a sum total that is pleasing to the eye. American Beauty roses have been in rather light supply, being exceptions to the general rule. But business was slow during the past week. Necessarily in a market that has such an extended clientele as this one there is always some buying, but during the past week it did not clean up the supply. While the nights were cool there was clear sunshine every day, which accounts for the heavy supply. Tulips are no longer factors, though yet seen in small lots. The cool weather has prolonged the season for bulbous stock and considerable shipments of the yellow narcissi are yet arriving. Lilacs are plentiful and moving better than most other minor offerings. There are immense stocks of sweet peas. They are popular flowers and have had a great sale this season, but the great volume has resulted in heavy price cuttings, good stock going at $1 to $1.25 per 100. While there are many good roses on the market, the fine quality of Premier is particularly noteworthy. We are aware that Premier has its critics, but so has almost every rose. It remains a fact that Premier as now displayed is a most attractive proposition.

May 1.—With continued fine weather heavier shipments are arriving, while buying is light. American Beauty roses which have been in rather light supply are now coming in in greater volume and values have declined.

MOTHERS' DAY CO-OPERATION.

The proposed Mothers' Day co-operation by the American Legion and Auxiliary, as outlined in last week's issue, page 740, is a most encouraging sign and should cause the observance as well as the business for that day to be a great success. There are some questions that are not debatable and one of them is the duty and reverence the nation owes to its mothers. We would be glad to see the day made as noteworthy and as generally observed as Christmas or Easter, but such cannot be done by more profiteering and speculating in carnations. There will doubtless be heavy demands for carnations and there is no reason why there should not be, but we are unable to understand the necessity of making them the chief factors in the observance. As we see it there will be an abundant supply of all reasonable flowers and why should there be any discrimination? As it is the retailers who have the last say with the public they should push the other

NOTES.

A meeting of the creditors of Sam Seligman, bankrupt, will be held at the office of John J. Townsend, referee in bankruptcy, in Room 1701, 299 Broadway, New York city, May 10, at 11 a. m. and creditors may file claims, appoint a trustee, examine the bankrupt and transact such other business as may come before said meeting.

Clearance Slinn, who since the opening of the Eighteenth street market has had a booth there, has formed a partnership with his brother, B. S. Slinn, the style of the business being the Slinn Co., Inc. The firm occupies space in the Cut Flower Exchange, 57 West Twenty-sixth street.

Workmen are busy on the large store at 146 West Eighteenth street, preparing it for H. Bayersdorfer & Co., who, as soon as changes are completed, will occupy it with a full line of florists' supplies. Sydney Bayersdorfer is on the ground overseeing the operations.

The wholesalers of the Eighteenth street market will not go thirsty this summer for want of cooling drinks. Mrs. J. S. Goddard, who conducts the cigar and confectionery booth in the market, recently installed a fine soda fountain.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at the Engineering building, 33 West 39th street, on the night of May 8. Important unfinished business will be taken up and it is expected that there will be good exhibits of stock.

One of the most attractive downtown stores is that of Wernz & Koehne, Fifth avenue at Thirteenth street. Located on a corner they have ample space for window displays, which is well utilized. They had a fine Easter trade.

Herman Warendorff, in the Ansonia hotel, has been having successful sales of boxes of flowers, each box containing six or more roses and a collection of other good flowers.

"Jack Frost," who has been quite busy here lately, has taken a vacation or gone on a visit, and may yet shame the weather prophets by staying away all summer.

Pappas Bros., Broadway at 79th street, in addition to an attractive stock of cut flowers, have recently featured geranium plants and report them as selling well.

President Pennock, of the Society of American Florists, was in the city last week visiting society headquarters, the S. S. Pennock Co., and other places of interest.

In addition to fine carnations, Herman Weiss, 121 West Twenty-eighth street, is handling a fine lot of sweet peas, yellow daisies and other stock.

Malandre Bros. have been making attractive window displays with apple and peach blossoms. Fine rambler rose and hydrangea plants are seen here.

On account of the strong opposition that developed, the project for holding an exhibition of sculpture in Central Park has been abandoned.

At the shop of James Weir, Inc., Brooklyn, we have recently noticed continued activity, for it may be said they are always busy.

We have recently noticed many attractive features in the arrangement of cut flowers at the A. Ehmann store, 136 West 72d street.

Jos. S. Fenrich, in the Eighteenth street market, is handling a fine lot of roses from the Duckham-Pierson range, Madison, N. J.

David Clarke's Sons, Broadway and 75th street, reports a good trade. The firm had three wedding decorations, April 29.

We are pleased to state that Eugene Dailedouze, who has been unwell for some time, is now able to visit the market.

Sullivan, Dolan & Co., 112 West Twenty-eighth street, are now handling a good line of outdoor lily of the valley.

DALLAS, TEX.—A $3,000 addition to the City Park greenhouses will be commenced at an early date.

CHADRON, NEB.—West Williams is planning to erect two greenhouses, each 30x100 feet, in the near future.

FORT WORTH, TEX.—The Baker Bros. Co., and George Kennedy, advise the flood damage was not so serious as at first feared, their places being uninjured.

ASHTABULA, O.—The W. C. Gallup Co., recently organized here, will build six greenhouses on its property at Birch and Nathan streets, each 17x144 feet, worth $10,000, in the near future.

THE mail order seed trade continues good.

RETAIL seedsmen report an unusually heavy demand for flower seeds this season.

SEED POTATOES advanced sharply this week, Early Ohio to $2.50 per hundred pounds, late kinds to $2.25.

LA CROSSE, WIS.—The John A. Salzer Seed Co. reports business from July 1 last to date 27 per cent better than a year ago.

At a public sale of war department nitrates recently evidently less than 2,000 tons were bought by fertilizer companies.

PRICES of bags at Chicago, May 3: Anchor, 16 oz., $30 per bale in bale lots or over; Royal River, 16 oz., $30; National, 16 oz., $30.

ONION SETS in the Chicago district were $6 to $7 May 2 for reds, whites and yellows, small lots of the reds reappearing this week.

PERENNIAL flower seeds have been scarce this season and many kinds will be in shorter supply next year on account of the European drought.

THE Sears & Nichols Canning Co., of Chillicothe, O., who recently failed as noted in our issue of April 29, page 764, have plants in 19 different cities.

THE May calendar of the J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Waterloo, Neb., has the following legend: "A thing done right today means less trouble tomorrow."

BOARD OF TRADE.—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade this week were as follows: Timothy, $5.90 per 100 pounds; Red Clover, $12 to $22.

NEW YORK.—The weather the past week has not favored counter trade.—B. Rynveld, of F. Rynveld & Sons Hillegom, Holland and New York, sailed for Europe on the S. S. Resolute May 2.

GORDON SELFRIDGE, head of Selfridge & Co., Ltd., of London, Eng., who is in Boston, states it as his opinion that the British pound may reach normal value of $4.86 by the end of the year, but that the franc and lira will stay low.

BET sugar production in the United States in 1921 amounted to 1,020,489 short tons, a decrease of 65,532 tons compared with the previous year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. The acreage planted showed a falling off of 56,688, there being 814,988 acres planted in 1921.

FLOWER SEEDS, many of which are imported, heretofore free of duty and tariff schedules, will carry a troublesome 20 per cent ad valorem tax, in the proposed new schedule according to well informed tariff authorities.

SOUTH HOLLAND, ILL.—A meeting of the Co-Operative Onion Set Growers' Association, Inc., is called for May 22 to consider and vote upon the question of dissolving the association, as provided by law, such action having been requested by the owners of more than two-thirds of the capital stock outstanding.

VISITED CHICAGO: John Bodger, of John Bodger & Sons Co., Los Angeles, Calif., and Mrs. Bodger, returning from Europe; Miss Eileen Low, of Stuart, Low & Co., London, Eng., returning from China and Japan by way of Vancouver and California; Thos. Chisholm, representing the Braslan Seed Growers Co., San Jose, Calif., returning from the east; Kenneth Salzer, of John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis.; Geo. Valker, of the Valker-Christensen Co., Minot, N. D.; E. Leifer, Little Rock, Ark.; H. M. Weil, Shreveport, La.

New Tariff Bill Before Senate.

The following appeared in our issue of April 15, page 646, and is reprinted here because of its importance to our readers:

VALUATION.

The foreign value or the export value, whichever is higher.

If the foreign value or the export value can not be ascertained to the satisfaction of the appraising officials, or if the merchandise is not freely offered for sale in usual wholesale quantities in the open market of the country of exportation to all purchasers, then the United States value.

If neither the foreign value, the export value, nor the United States value can be ascertained to the satisfaction of the appraising officers, then the cost of production.

PROPOSED TARIFF ON BULBS.

Paragraph 751.—Tulip, lily, and narcissus bulbs, and lily of the valley pips, $2 per 1,000; hyacinth bulbs, $4 per 1,000; crocus bulbs, $1 per 1,000; all other bulbs and roots, root stocks, clumps, corms, tubers, and herbaceous perennials, imported for horticultural purposes, 30 per centum ad valorem; cut flowers, fresh or preserved, 40 per centum ad valorem.

NURSERY STOCK.

Paragraph 752.—Seedlings and cuttings of Manettia, multiflora, brier, rugosa and other rose stock, all the foregoing not more than three years old, $2 per 1,000; rose plants, budded, grafted, or grown on their own roots, four cents each; cuttings, seedlings, and grafted or budded plants or other deciduous or evergreen ornamental trees, shrubs, or vines, and all nursery or greenhouse stock, not specially provided for, 30 per centum ad valorem.

Paragraph 753.—Seedlings, layers, and cuttings of apple, cherry, pear, plum, quince, and other fruit stocks, $2 per 1,000; grafted or budded fruit trees, cuttings and seedlings of grapes, currants, gooseberries, or other fruit vines, plants or bushes, 30 per centum ad valorem.

GARDEN AND FLOWER SEEDS*.

Paragraph 762.—Other garden and field seeds: Beet (except sugar beet), four cents per pound; cabbage, eight cents per pound; canary, one cent per pound; carrot, four cents per pound; cauliflower, 25 cents per pound; celery, two cents per pound; kale, six cents per pound; Kohlrabi, eight cents per pound; mangelwurzel, four cents per pound; onion, 10 cents per pound; parsley, two cents per pound; parsnip, four cents per pound; pepper, 15 cents per pound; rutabaga, four cents per pound; all other garden and field seeds not specially provided for, 20 per centum ad valorem: Provided, That the provisions for seeds of this schedule shall include such seeds whether used for planting or for other purposes.

Paragraph 763.—Beans, not specially provided for, green or unripe, one-half of one per cent per pound; dried, two cents per pound; peas, one cent per pound.

*While flower seeds are not specially mentioned in the tariff bill, it is the belief of those well informed on tariff schedules, that they are covered under our heading in the item, "all other garden and field seeds not specially provided for, 20 per centum ad valorem."

GRASS SEEDS.

Paragraph 761.—Grass seeds: Alfalfa, four cents per pound; alsike clover, four cents per pound; crimson clover, one cent per pound; red clover, four cents per pound; white clover, three cents per pound; clover, not specially provided for, two cents per pound; millet, one cent per pound; timothy, two cents per pound; hairy vetch, two cents per pound; spring vetch, one cent per pound; all other grass seeds not specially provided for, two cents per pound: Provided, That no allowance shall be made for dirt or other impurities in seed provided for in this paragraph.

FIELD SEEDS.

Wheat, 30 cents per bushel; oats, corn and rye, 15 cents per bushel; mustard, one cent per pound; sunflower, two cents per pound.

Peacock Indicted.

Everette R. Peacock, president of the Everette R. Peacock Co., Chicago; Albert Sporleder, former president of the Milwaukee-Irving State bank; Harold W. Anderson, former cashier; Charles Gascon, and Axel Setterberg, former officers of the seed concern, were named in indictments returned April 17 before Judge Scanlan. The indictments charge conspiracy to loot the Milwaukee-Irving State bank. Peacock's bonds were fixed at $25,000, those of Sporleder at $10,000, and the other three at $5,000 each. The men, it is alleged, manipulated the finances of the bank by means of loans to the extent of almost $400,000.

Potato Shippers Must Pay for Heat.

Maine railroads were found justified May 2 by the Interstate Commerce Commission in making special freight charges against shippers of potatoes to cover the cost of heating to prevent freezing during winter months, and a complaint made by the Aroostook county growers was dismissed. The commission held that the special type of cars used for the shipment of potatoes in winter required the extra charge.

Thuya Winter Damage.

It has been reported from various sources all over the country that thuyas (arbor vitae) have suffered seriously from the past winter. This seems to have been caused by the warm, sunny days which started the sap in the branches, followed by freezing temperature at night. The outer branches have killed out and the foliage has turned brown in many cases. A close examination of these trees shows that while some of them are dry and brown, they will no doubt grow from the live buds below the line of winter injury and satisfactorily recover after the present growing season. There is not so much cause for alarm as it might be expected from a casual observation of this damage.

Thuyas were damaged the worst of all evergreens, although some damage was noted on some other varieties also.

"Plan to Plant Another Tree."

FUNDS NEEDED.

The "Plan to Plant Another Tree" campaign, born at an executive committee meeting of the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, February 10, and originally intended to stimulate tree planting in Illinois during March and April, has not stopped at the boundary lines of that state. More than 100 nurseries and seed houses in other states have purchased the rubber stamp: "Plan to Plant Another Tree" for use on their mail, and newspapers and clubs in Iowa, Indiana, Ohio, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and even South Carolina have become enthusiastic and have expressed a desire to get behind a programme of such merit. The executive committee of the association now realizes that "Plan to Plant Another Tree" is not for March and April, but for all the year. The newspapers and clubs are doing their part and with the financial help of the nurserymen "Plan to Plant Another Tree" will go forward in a nation-wide movement to make America a better place in which to live and all nurserymen will benefit.

A careful estimate recently made by the executive committee indicates that it will require $2,000 to continue the good work for the balance of the year. A. H. Hill, Dundee, Ill., chairman of the finance committee of the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, states that this will amount to but a small sum if each member of the association and other interested nurserymen contribute either $10, $25, $50 or $100, to insure that there will be sufficient funds in the treasury to carry on this most important work. The following firms have given $100 each: Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill.; The D. Hill Nursery Co., Dundee, Ill.; Klehm & Son, Arlington Heights, Ill.; Swain, Nelson & Co., and Peterson Nursery, Chicago.

The nursery interests have already received many thousands of dollars' worth of free advertising space in the newspapers and splendid editorials have been written commending the work of the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association. Nurserymen cannot afford to discontinue, at this time, the splendid efforts made or lessen the good work for lack of funds. So be as generous as possible, write a check at once, addressing Miles Bryant, treasurer, Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, Princeton, Ill.,

REDUCED RATES TO DETROIT CONVENTION.

The railroad passenger associations have arranged a one and one-half fare for the round trip for attendance at the annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, at Detroit, Mich., June 28-30, based on the following conditions: Certificates for 250 tickets must be presented to the secretary at the convention in order that one-half fare for the return trip will be granted.

One way tickets going to the convention will only be sold, June 24 to June 30, inclusive, but be sure when purchasing your going ticket to request from the agent a certificate. Do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt. Certificates are not kept at all stations. Inquire from your agent several days ahead of time and if he has no certificates request him to get several, but if unable to do that simply purchase a local ticket to the nearest station where certificates can be secured, and then buy your one-way ticket and ask the agent for a certificate.

As soon as you arrive at the convention be sure to deliver your certificate to the secretary in order that he may ascertain if the necessary 250 certificates have been received in order to get the one-half fare for the return trip. A special agent of the railroads will be in attendance at the convention, June 28-30, inclusive, from 8:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m., to validate your certificate. If the necessary minimum of 250 tickets is presented to the special agent and your certificate is duly validated, you will be entitled up to and including July 4, to a return ticket via the same route over which you made the going journey at one-half of the regular one-way tariff fare.

The return ticket issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which reduced fare transportation is not honored.

Cleveland Horticultural Society.

The monthly meeting of the Cleveland Horticultural Society was held April 9, President R. P. Brydon in the chair. A. D. Taylor, landscape architect, gave a very interesting address on "The Problems of the Landscape Gardener in Relation to the Private Gardener." His talk was thoroughly enjoyed and a closer insight of that branch of the profession was gained by the members. Three candidates were elected to membership in the society.

The exhibits, staged in connection with the meeting, were exceptionally fine. J. H. Francis was awarded a certificate of merit for eight vases of sweet peas, which he had grown for the W. Atlee Burpee Co., of Philadelphia, Pa. The colors were white, pink and lavender and the stems averaged 20 inches, carrying three to four beautiful flowers, far superior to the older winter flowering kinds. Mr. Francis explained that he had grown them cool, planting them in the ground in 18 inches of well mixed soil, adding well rotted manure and bone meal. He thinned them out to eight inches apart, all lateral growths being pinched out, the single stems remaining. The varieties exhibited by Mr. Francis were: Early Lemon Beauty, Early Fire King, Mrs. Kerr, Early Pink Beauty, Early Lovliness, Early Fairy Queen, Early Exquisite, Early Rosebud, Early Bluejacket and Early Daintiness.

R. Broadfield showed some very good Clarksias, Sweet Williams and Antirrhinum giant white, the latter being awarded a cultural certificate, his two other displays receiving honorable mention. Mr. Broadfield, in telling of his methods of antirrhinum culture, stated that he grows them very cool in the usual depth of benches. The stems of Vegetable Movement.

The movement of fruits and vegetables continued heavy during the week ending April 29, shipments being nearly 10,000 car loads. The demand seems fairly active and prices have recovered considerably. Values advanced sharply on potatoes, onions, cabbages and tomatoes, prices remaining firm on most other items.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, May 2.—Cucumbers, per crate, $1.50 to $2; lettuce, per crate, $1.50 to $2.25; carrots, $5 to $5.50 per barrel; cabbage, $2.25 to $3.25 per crate; cauliflower, per crate, $1.50 to $3.25.

New York, April 28.—Cucumbers, $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen; radishes, per bunch, 3 to 4 cents; tomatoes, per pound, 12 to 25 cents; lettuce, per barrel, $4 to $4.50; beets, per hamper, $1.75 to $2; cauliflower, $1.50 to $3.50 per dozen.

Sorghum Syrup.

The sorghum syrup industry has gained a new impetus, according to Dr. J. J. Willaman of the University of Minnesota, St. Paul, through the perfection of a cleaning machine, which takes the whole sorghum plant, removes the seed heads, and then separates the leaves from the stalks. This machine can be adjusted so as to remove the suckers also, providing a mill juice of uniform maturity. It does away with handwork in harvesting and cleaning the cane.

Potato Production and Fertilizer.

Why do the worn-out acres of Maine average potato yields of 199 bushels to the acre, while from the comparatively virgin acres of Ohio the average yield is only 79 bushels? This is a question raised by Earl Jones, crops specialist of the Ohio State university, Columbus, in a four-page pamphlet just issued. He calls the publication, "The Intensive Use of Fertilizer" and this he believes, sums up the answer to the question.

Maine is farther north, and the climate is somewhat better suited to potatoes; growers there have made the crop their specialty, and they use somewhat more advanced methods of seed selection, culture, and spraying; but the main difference is that Maine potato farmers, particularly in Aroostook county, apply about a ton of complete, high analysis fertilizer to the acre, says Mr. Jones, who was crops specialist in Massachusetts before coming to Ohio.

The potato plant, he says, has a big appetite and lazy roots. Plant food must be put right to the spot, and in forms readily available. He cites recent New Jersey experiments to show that, in large measure, "potato profit is in the fertilizer sack."

Rather than the 4-8-7 fertilizer standard in Aroostook, the banner potato county of Maine and of the nation, Mr. Jones inclines toward a 3-10-4 or 2-12-2 mixture for Ohio conditions. He does not hold that Ohio farmers ought to use a ton of fertilizer to the acre, but he does remark that, "as the culture of the crop becomes more highly specialized, it will probably be found that 800 or 1,000 pounds of high analysis fertilizer to the acre will prove profitable."

Columbus, O.

STOCK IN FAIR DEMAND.

Trade has been steady the last week. Funeral work has been rather brisk and this has sustained the market to a large extent. There is a good call for flowers and corsages from the university district, as many student functions are being scheduled. The staple lines are roses, carnations, sweet peas and snapdragons, the former bringing $3 to $8 per dozen, retail. Premier, Butterfly, Columbia and Mrs. Aaron Ward are the principal rose varieties. Fine sweet peas are in good supply at $1 to $1.50 per bunch. Carnations of the white and pink varieties sell for $1.50 to $2 per dozen while snapdragons are quoted from $2 to $4 per dozen. Bedding plants such as geraniums, begonias and similar garden flowers are finding a ready sale. Shrubbery is also selling well and a few growers have been specializing in landscape work. Lilies are a thing of the past although Tiger lilies will be in the market soon. Bulbous plants are also about out of the market for the time being.

NOTES.

Through the efforts of the Flower Growers' and Retailers' Association, a film showing the Fifth National Flower Show, at Indianapolis, will be displayed at the Majestic theater the week previous to Mothers' Day. In addition there will be a display of flowers in the lobby of the theater placarded with references to the day and the fact that flowers are very appropriate for that occasion. The display will not bear the names of individual growers or retailers but will be furnished by all of the members of the organization.

The Munk Floral Co., with greenhouses on West King avenue and a retail store at 19 South High street, reports a steady demand for carnations, roses and sweet peas.

The Neil House Shop, Herman Kropp, manager, is having a good trade as a result of a number of recent conventions, where flowers were used extensively.

Carnations, snapdragons, roses and other flowers sell well at the W. J. Brunst store.

Bedding plants are in good demand at the Franklin Park Floral Co. establishment.

The Indianola Florists report a fine call for seasonable flowers. J. W. L.

Louisville, Ky.

EASTER BUSINESS SATISFACTORY

The Easter business was fully as good as a year ago and most of the florists cleaned up on stock, sweet peas alone running short. Geraniums, bedding plants and ferns have been selling well considering the unfavorable weather and some of the retailers have disposed of nearly all their plants. The recent heavy rains have hindered the outdoor planting of carnation and other plants.

NOTES.

H. G. Walker has a lot of 40,000 peonies in bud, which will be in just right for Mothers' Day, it is hoped. Two houses of Bonny Best and Cracker Jack tomatoes are about ready for the market.

C. Leaming, landscape architect for the Hert estate, resigned recently and will re-enter the nursery business, specializing in evergreens.

Herbert Rayner, formerly with the Anchorage Rose Co., now has charge of the nursery department of H. G. Walker's.

Wm. Walker is cutting fine delphiniums, belladonna and beautiful Clark-sias at his Ormsby Station greenhouses.

The Market Flower Shop, D. Walker, proprietor, is disposing of quantities of cut flowers and plants.

Fruit trees have not been selling nearly as well as shrubs, shade and evergreen trees.

Henry Fuchs had a big lot of cut roses that came into bloom too late for the holiday.

WINDOW AND PORCH BOXES.

A Profitable Field.

With all danger of frost past, it is now time to look to the decoration of the window ledges. The supplying and filling of window boxes is a department of the business that is a comparatively undeveloped field. If handled in a thorough, business-like manner, a great trade can be worked up in these summer window gardens that will bring as good returns as any other line.

The first and greatest factor is publicity. Customers, and the general public as well, must be told so much about window boxes that the dwelling will be found bare without them. It should be made a regular campaign. First engage the entire list of customers. Then go carefully over the ground desired to be covered and select the names of all likely prospects.

In addition to the circular matter, which should be illustrated, live and compelling personal letters detailing a plan of decoration for all or a portion of the vantage points, as window ledges, over doorways, balconies, or on top of walls, etc., offering several plans, with prices, should be sent out. Some trouble;
yes, but well worth while. Some responsive chords are sure to be struck, and there is always a possibility in the follow-up. After a start has been made and examples of the work are seen, then is a good follow-up time, as there is something to refer to. "We will furnish and fill such boxes as we have just erected for your neighbor, Mrs.
Smith, for $15.00." Some will then consider a proposition who would not like to be the first, but will join with others in the movement for a city beautiful.

To push a campaign of this sort, one must be well supplied with stock. A full line of boxes is a great help; the rustic and bark-covered wooden boxes are the cheapest and are easily made to fit any sized window. If well painted inside, they will give good service for several years. The newer cement patterns are coming rapidly to the front, as are the terra cotta. These are very ornamental, often conforming to the architecture of the building. Cast iron, and others of galvanized sheet iron, having reservoirs for water in the bottom, styled "self-watering" boxes, are all good, and if kept well painted last a long time. For all metal or stone boxes there must be adequate support, as when filled with soil and plants and saturated with water they are very heavy.

Precautionary Measures.

From the fact that in many cases, particularly in new work, that the boxes are experimental—on trial, as it were—every care should be taken to make them satisfactory. It is necessary that the right kinds of plants are selected for the sunny and shady exposures, and that until well established they do not suffer from neglect. Servants, as a rule, do not know how to care for them and do not look with favor on extra duties such as the care of the window boxes. A little encouragement and explanation to the parties in charge is a great help.

From spring to fall boxes can be filled three times—first with pansies or daisies, to be followed by geraniums and other blooming stock and vines, and from August to October Scottiferns are most satisfactory. In many cases the first two fillings, particularly in built-up residential districts, suffice —April to May 10 for the pansies, and then the geraniums, which are kept going until the house is closed for the summer. In one of the "city beautiful" campaigns in a section of Philadelphia an effort was made some years ago to have the boxes cared for after the houses were closed, but by many the expense and the danger of having strangers about the property was considered too great, and after one year it was discontinued.

Good, rich soil is essential to success, and a top dressing of bone meal occasionally is a great help. A combination box that will last the entire season is filled with geraniums and vincas and along the front edges, just back of the vines, a row of small Boston or Scotti ferns. These will come along nicely and by the first of August will take the place of the geraniums, which can be then cut down, as their foliage in the hot, dry weather gets covered with red spider, turns yellow and is unsightly.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

With the trees all in leaf shrubbery coming into flower and all nature looking its best, the store should reflect this seasonable change and blossom out with all the new material at its command. The shop must present a bright inviting appearance that greets the visitor favorably or holds for a moment or more those who are continually passing, each of whom is a possible customer.

Snowballs are now in; a large vase or vase basket of well flowered sprays makes a fine display for the window. These are soon followed by the early flowering hardy white hydrangea which can be shown in window and store in various decorative schemes. A large

Do not neglect the possibilities in a good pavement display, as many sales are made when the goods are attractively shown to people who had no thought of purchasing until the beauty of the plants caught their eye, and the garden and flower beds at home soon had important additions. Pot roses or the dormant stock from the benches of the growers, who are putting in new varieties for the old, and which at one time they had to burn up to get rid of, are now to be had in quantity and can be sold at handsome profit. The display and the descriptive card bring to mind the vacant space in the garden that is soon filled, but which for the suggestion, would have been overlooked.

Hanging baskets will sell if shown in good condition. Swing one at each end of a cord over two pulleys, one balancing the other, showing how easily they are cared for in this way when one pulled down to be watered is held in place by the other. Such little novel points often make the sale.

There should always be sample boxes of cut flowers nicely arranged and on view in flower case or window. Many sales are made when the prettily arranged box suggests to the observer how it would cheer up a friend who is ill, or be just the thing for an anniversary gift such as they had been looking for.

Boxing cut flowers so that they show to the best advantage is well worth the little extra time it takes, which, when one gets in the way of doing it right, adds much to their appearance. A dozen roses appear much better if half are placed at each end of the box, their stems overlapping in the center. Crumpled wax paper should be placed under the buds to hold them up. Other shorter flowers are then laid over the stems and finished in the center with a little green and a scattering of pansies or other small flowers to give a finish. It is well to tie the rose stems to the bottom of the box with tape; this will then hold all flowers from sliding to one end should the box become tilted. A little nosegay on the outside makes a finish that is always appreciated and sure to be spoken of.

MEMORIAL DAY PREPARATIONS.

Memorial Day which in some localities is the greatest flower event of WINDOW BOXES OF GERANIUMS AND MARGUERITES.

For all shaded locations palms, Pandanus Veitchii, aspidistras, ferns, Asparagus Sprengeri and vincas will be found to be very satisfactory. Crotons, acalyphas, Pandanus Veitchii, with varieties of the Boston fern and tradescantias and vincas for vines, will make very showy boxes for sunny exposures, but should have ample room for roots, and with good drainage must not suffer for want of water. Watering, it is perhaps needless to say, should be done in the late afternoon. An extra drink in the early morning in extreme hot weather is also beneficial.

All boxes should rest perfectly level on strips of wood, to raise them about an inch above their foundations, leaving an air space, which permits of better drainage and at the same time protects the wooden porch box and also the floor on which it may be resting. Porch boxes, which are at times used to cover long distances, should never be of extreme length. They are then awkward and heavy to handle. Four feet is a convenient size.

Wherever possible, all boxes are best filled at the greenhouse; plants that have a week or so to get set and start a new growth have a much better chance than in the box filled and placed at once in position.

show magnolia wreath, sprayed with such flowers and a ribbon finish, is sure to attract attention.

Rush the window box campaign; every early box that goes into place is a great help in securing other orders. Keep the boxes that decorate the store front at their best all the time, as they are a great factor in showing the way.

the year will soon be here. Why it should be so generally celebrated in one section of the country more than another is something that the trade should look into. Enterprising florists who extensively advertised Memorial Day wreaths and sprays made of magnolia leaves and artificial flowers are said to have greatly increased the demand for all kinds of flowers throughout the New England States, where the demand now always overtakes the facilities of the trade.

There should always be on hand a quantity of magnolia and other prepared foliage wreaths which can in a few minutes be decorated with garden shrubbery and touched up with a few of the greenhouse flowers. Sprays made of various sized, prepared sago palm leaves, can be quickly decorated with shrubbery and a tricolor ribbon. Small tricolor, wood, chinelle wreaths tied in with the ribbon are in keeping with the occasion. Being prepared with a good stock of all the staple things that can be gotten ready in advance, is of the greatest importance and every spare minute should now be devoted to this work.

School commencements will soon become a factor. In spite of the movements that at times are made to discourage the use of flowers at these events, they are inseparable and will always continue as most suitable gifts for the fair girl graduate. Very much can be done by the enterprising florist in working up trade for these events. Advance plans of decorations for the hall are always well received. Getting in early touch with committees, class presidents, lists of scholars and their home addresses, which can then be circulated, is good propaganda and calculated to secure a major portion of the trade.

Plan your summer trip to take in the Kansas City, Mo., convention of the Society of American Florists, August 15-17. Aside from the importance of the convention itself there will be found much of great interest to be seen in this wonderfully progressive western city. It is predicted that this will be one of the largest conventions in point of attendance ever held, it being convenient to all the large cities of the central west while the trade of Kansas City is well organized and has arranged a splendid programme of entertainment for the visitors.

Austin Floral Co., Inc.

The Austin Floral Co., Inc. 722 Congress avenue, Austin, Tex., was recently reorganized with E. Paxton Daviss, Jr., formerly of Waco, Tex., the new manager. Mr. Daviss has had many years' experience in the florist business, at one time being associated with Wolf The Florist, Waco. He also conducted a retail shop of his own at Dallas, Tex. Mr. Daviss was formerly a student at the university at Austin and the company is especially desirous of catering to the needs of the students. As the originator of the "Pax" basket for elaborate weddings and other occasions, Mr. Daviss has aided considerably in giving increased prestige to the firm.

Many improvements have been made in the company's retail store, including a newly arranged stock room for the numerous designs, boxes and baskets, and a customers' rest room, equipped with an ivory finished wicker set, writing materials, large mirror and telephone.

In addition to its downtown store the firm operates two finely equipped ranges for the production of plants and flowers, the one at Floweracres, near Austin, comprising five acres of irrigated land, mainly devoted to Shasta daisies, gladioli, dahlias, Asparagus plumosus and seed stock. A full complement of greenhouses, large elevated water tank, lath houses, complete engine and pumping plant for an inexhaustible supply of water, electric lights and other modern improvements make Floweracres an ideal establishment. The firm recently leased the plant owned by Mrs. A. J. Seiders, 1106 West Thirty-eighth street, Austin, consisting of three houses, 21x100 feet, another 15x50 feet and a boiler shed, producing principally pot plants and sweet peas.

The Austin Floral Co., Inc., is a member of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, and has for its slogan: "Satisfactory Service to All; For Florists Fone 8261."

Spring Weddings.

Look out for your share of the spring weddings; always have some feature connected with these events in your window display, at times more than others, but always something. The slightest hint may sometimes lead to an order.

See that the pens and blotters are changed daily at the customer's writing desks with a fresh vase of flowers. Such little attentions are appreciated.

Have you noticed the spring advertising of the national publicity committee of the Society of American Florists? Columns of well written matter have appeared in a number of the best magazines the past month which are a great credit to the committee. It is, however, but a tithe of what should be running all the time, and if every florist would invest but a "dime a day" in this advertising, which with its "Say It With Flowers" slogan has given such publicity to the business, the committee would have a fund of over $300,000 at its command. What a grand sum and what a trifle it would take to make it up. What say you, brother, will you not lay it aside?

PLANT NOTES.

Asters.

The early and midseason asters should be planted out as early as the season will allow. If the plants are hardened off for two or three weeks in a cold frame and gradually given night air as soon as safe, they will endure the outside temperature much better than those carried directly from the warm greenhouse. The land should be prepared at once, and while asters will grow on almost any piece of ground, success or failure depends much on the proper preparation of the soil. Land that was manured last fall and plowed is by far the best, and all that will be required in the spring is a shallow plowing or disking and then leveling. It is well not to level off too large a tract at once, for heavy rains occur at this season which pack the soil down hard. Before planting give the young plants a thorough watering, and if in boxes or the bench, cut through the rows with a knife a day before planting. Lay the field out in rows from 25 to 30 inches apart, giving the branching varieties the greater distance, with a wider space every fifth or sixth row to provide a walk when cutting the flowers, and set the plants from 12 to 18 inches apart. Plant with a trowel, for the plants set in a dibbled hole will not take hold as quickly, and with the early asters the slight difference in time taken in planting is more than made up in the early blooming; the dibble packs the soil around the plant and the roots do not grow into it as freely, and the roots are also contracted in the small hole made by the dibble. As soon as the field is planted, if possible, give the plants a good watering and then cultivate lightly with a wheel hoe to loosen up the soil.

Rambler Roses.

The rambler roses for Memorial Day will demand constant attention, for at this season of the year aphids and red spider increase very rapidly if the conditions are propitious. It is far better to keep these insects down by proper culture than to be obliged to resort to measures to kill them. Give the plant all the ventilation possible, but drafts will often cause mildew on the soft foliage, so these must be guarded against especially, and low ventilation such as open doors with the wind drawing through the houses. Syringe thoroughly on bright days. There is no better prevention for red spider than a good syringing that will reach the under side of the leaves, which will quickly break up the colonies of spiders that gather there. If the plants require fumigation, it should be light, for often the young foliage is very tender and heavy fumigation with smoke quickly burns it. When the pots are full of roots a watering with liquid manure or a mulch of sheep manure mixed with sifted soil will be found very beneficial and will add a lustre to the foliage and deepen the color of the flowers.

Primulas

For plants of both P. sinensis and obconica, for blooming next spring, May is the best time to sow the seed, which germinates very readily at this time, but if this is delayed until June it will often be found quite difficult to get the seed to start well, and as the young seedlings grow very slowly they will require constant attention during the warm weather, for a few hours' sun when they are dry will cause the loss of all the plants. The soil should be sifted in a fine sieve, as the seeds are very small, and they should not be covered with the soil, but sown thinly on the soil when loose and then pressed flat with a board. Watering should be done with a very fine rose on the can, so as not to wash the seeds or soil. At this season of the year the seed will germinate readily in almost any greenhouse, but it is well to cover the seed pan or box with glass to prevent too rapid evaporation, and until the plants begin to make growth, keep the pots well shaded. Many growers wrap a piece of paraffin paper around the glass that is placed on the seed pan. This allows plenty of light to germinate the seed and will prevent the direct rays of the sun from burning up the young seedlings when they start to grow. As these young plants grow very slowly, some soils will often become caked or scaly, and if this occurs the top should be carefully broken up to allow the air to enter. As soon as three or four leaves are formed, pot in 2½-inch pots, not too deeply, but yet deep enough to have them stand erect. They should then be placed in a cool house, and much of the success of their culture depends upon the care and watering in their early growth. They are a moisture-loving plant and should never become dry, yet they are easily overwatered and will not make a good growth if continually kept soaked; frequent and light waterings are the best. A lightly shaded frame with the pots plunged in the soil and the sash lifted at top and bottom for free circulation of air is the best location for summer culture.

Pansies.

The sale of pansy plants will soon be at its height, and there is nothing that the florist or grower sells upon which more time is wasted than in selecting a small order of pansies if the customer is shown a frame of a few thousand plants. The better way is to have boxes or baskets holding a dozen plants all made up for the customer. It is not necessary to put up more than will be required for one or two days' sale, but as fast as sold keep the stock replenished. There are many patrons who will be well satisfied with a good selection already placed in a basket who will take an hour of a salesman's time in making their choice out of a frame. Any late seedlings should be planted in the frames at once, and these will make fine plants for late May or early June planting when the older plants are either sold or have become too large for bedding purposes.

Gladioli.

The gladioli that are being forced for spring blooming will soon begin to open their flowers, and to have good clean stock they will require attention. The spikes should first of all be kept erect, for if they get bent and crooked half their value is gone, and this will occur very quickly on the bright, sunny days when the plants lean over, so they should be kept tied either to stakes or wires to prevent this. The spike should be cut when the first flower opens and placed in water and the other flowers opened in the office or store-room. These flowers spot very quickly if water is sprinkled upon them in the greenhouse, and at this season of the year syringing on bright days is a necessity or the red spider is sure to obtain a foothold, and if these pests become once well established it is almost impossible to eradicate them. Considerable discussion is often heard as to whether the corms of gladiolus forced are of any value another year. If the plant is not cut too far down on the stem and the corms are given an opportunity to thoroughly ripen, there is no doubt but that the bulbs may be grown another year and good results obtained, but if the plant is cut off clear down to the ground the corm has no chance to make its full growth or to ripen, and the corms will be practically worthless. Corms that are forced this year and the spike cut so as to leave three or more leaves, if properly ripened, can be planted outside another year and the following year first-class corms will be the result. The Gladiolus Colvillei can be forced year after year if grown properly.

Asparagus Plumosus and Sprengeri.

Small stock of Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri are now a necessity with all plantmen, for they are freely used in fern dishes and in plant baskets, being very satisfactory plants for house culture. Fresh seed can now be obtained and the stock grown on through the summer, which will make fine stock for the next winter. The seed will germinate more readily and evenly if soaked in lukewarm water placed in a warm location for 24 hours before planting. Instead of sowing the seed broadcast, it is better to sow them about three-quarters of an inch apart, and they can then be allowed to remain in the flats until they are strong enough to transplant. Do not cover the seed too deeply; an eighth of an inch of soil sifted over the seed is ample. The first potting must be carefully done, for they make a long tap root, with very few small roots, and the soil does not adhere to it, and in the young stage this root is easily broken. A warm house with plenty of moisture and careful watering with a slight shade is all they require after being potted. Over-watering will always cause the fronds to take on a yellowish hue.

Lorraine Begonias.

The plants of the Lorraine begonia and its varieties, both the young rooted stock and the older plants, will now begin to make active growth. There is still time to propagate much stock; many growers prefer the May-rooted plants to those propagated earlier, for the plants start right off into growth at this time, while those rooted earlier grow very slowly during the late winter and early spring months. The young shoots that break from the old plants make fine cuttings at this time, and if the plants are in good health are just as good as the leaf cuttings made earlier. As soon as rooted they should be potted in a light, fibrous loam in 2½-inch pots and placed in a light, well ventilated house, but should be protected from all chilling drafts. They cannot be successfully grown in a stuffy, moist temperature, and to have strong, healthy plants, should not be forced in too warm a temperature. They will require a house in which the temperature does not fall below 60 degrees and should be given all the air possible without chilling during pleasant, bright days, carefully avoiding drafts. They will need to be watered carefully, for the roots are very fine and are growing slowly yet, and over-watering quickly shows in the growth of the plant. It is now a good time to procure young stock if the grower is not supplied, for those making a specialty of this plant will have the best of stock at this time.

MOTHERS' DAY BASKET OF SWEET PEAS.

American Orchid Society.

The annual meeting of the American Orchid Society was held at Horticultural hall, Boston, Mass., May 6, President Albert C. Burrage in the chair. A good attendance of members was present. The secretary's report showed that the society's activities were principally directed towards building up the membership, as a substantial basis for more important matters which will naturally follow increased interest in the work of the society by a larger membership. The treasurer's report was read and accepted and showing a balance to the credit of the society of $3,163.92, a very favorable record for so young a society. A beautiful and dainty volume, containing the names of the 100 founders of the society, the by-laws, and a brief foreword by President Burrage, was presented by him to the society and read as follows:

"It is hoped that this little pamphlet giving the names of the 100 founders of the American Orchid Society, the by-laws under which they are governed, and the officers who represent them, is the forerunner of a long line, each of which will portray in some way, one of those lovely members of the great orchid family which are native to this country, and which have so much interest not only for our ever increasing number of orchidologists but also for flower lovers throughout the world." A vote of thanks was extended the president for his beautiful gift.

A committee was appointed to formulate plans for a great orchid exhibition in 1924 to be held in Boston. A committee was also appointed consisting of H. Walter Child, Oakes Ames, and W. H. Lincoln to try and locate colonies of the almost extinct Orchis rotundifolia and Pogonia affinis. The question of offering a gold, silver and bronze medal for orchid exhibits of superior excellence at the leading horticultural exhibitions of the country was considered and left in the hands of the trustees to formulate details. It was also decided to issue an annual report in condensed form covering the activities of the society during the past year for distribution among the members.

The secretary reported 108 members, 25 being life members, membership being distributed among the states as follows: Massachusetts, 46; New York, 17; New Jersey, 16; Pennsylvania, seven; California, seven; England, three; Canada, one, and the following states one each: Michigan, Illinois, Connecticut, Delaware, Vermont, Nebraska, Indiana, Maine, Missouri, Kentucky and Florida. It was decided that any foreign firm can become a member of the society, as such, but only one representative of such firm shall be eligible to vote at the meetings.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Albert C. Burrage, Boston, Mass., president; Theodore H. Wickwire, Jr., Buffalo, N. Y., Oakes Ames, North Easton, Mass., W. A. Manda, South Orange, N. J., vice presidents; Louis Burk, Philadelphia, Pa., treasurer; Alfred J. Loveless, Lenox, Mass., secretary; Thomas Roland, Nahant, Mass., Oliver Lines, Pittsfield, Mass., F. E. Dixon, Elkins Park, Pa., trustees for three years. George W. Butterworth was appointed to audit the treasurer's account. The meeting then adjourned.

Before the meeting President Burrage entertained the members of the society at a luncheon given at the Algonquin Club, and a very enjoyable time was spent after which a vote of thanks was given Mr. Burrage for his kindness.

WILD FLOWER EXHIBITION.

Those attending the annual meeting had the privilege of viewing the wonderfully unique and educational exhibit of native flowers, arranged in natural positions, growing on rocks, in ferny ravines, in dells, and along a watercourse, the overflow from a very beautiful waterfall of magnificent proportion which banked the end of the hall, and gushed down in large volume into a large pool and under a rustic bridge down the length of the hall winding its way in a very natural manner, making the whole exhibition a work of art, that art which "mends nature," bringing together many native flowers who for the first time were able to look their neighbors in the face, for flowers of various seasons were blooming together in perfect harmony. Many favorable comments were heard, and Mr. Burrage, who is president of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, received many congratulations for the successful culmination of his ideal.

Chicago Florists' Club,

The regular May meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club gave way to a party and reception tendered the past presidents of the club at the Hotel Randolph May 4. The famous Bluebird room of the hotel was attractively decorated for the occasion by the George Wittbold Co. and flowers of all seasonable kinds from the wholesale houses filled the tables. The attendance numbered close to 200 and it was a gay time for the ladies and the young people, who greatly enjoyed the fine music and dancing to a late hour. In the prize contest A. Lange was awarded first prize for the Mothers' Day arrangement of cut flowers, showing a fine table arrangement of sweet peas and a well displayed basket of old fashioned flowers. For the best corsage bouquet, or flowers otherwise worn for the occasion, such arrangements left entirely to the discretion of contestants, costume, general appearance, and deportment of wearer to be considered, Miss Eleanor Pagels was first, Mrs. Peter Pearson second, and Mrs. T. Cuneen third, the merits of the exhibit being decided by acclamation.

Past President W. N. Rudd sent a letter regretting his inability to attend, and a similar letter was received from Frank F. Benthley, who was unable to be present on account of illness. Mr. Benthley served as president in 1887, and Mr. Rudd in 1896, 1903 and 1904.

Among the past presidents in attendance were George Asmus, 1909-10; P. J. Foley (represented by P. J. Foley, Jr.), 1912; Fred Lautenschlager, 1918; Allie Zech, 1919; T. E. Waters, 1920, and Joseph Kohout, 1921.

Chairman Waters of the good-of-the-club committee certainly deserves the thanks of everyone concerned for this charming occasion of great pleasure to all the participants, the coarseness of some previous events being entirely eliminated.

President Kohout announces the appointment of A. Henderson to represent the club and allied trades at the Federal Horticultural Board hearing, Washington, D. C., May 15.

Basic Principles of the Successful Florist.

Address By President S. S. Pennock, of the Society of American Florists, Before the Florida State Florists' Association, Lakeland, May 5, 1922.

In asking me to talk before this body on the "Basic Principles Governing the Successful Florist," you have given me rather a hard subject, and one that can be looked at from a great many different angles. Every one has his way of running his business. Some reach success through one method and some another, and the few things that I am going to set forth are mostly along the lines that we have followed in our business in Philadelphia, Pa., and our branch stores in New York, Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C.

The flower business in the past has been conducted more or less along lines of the least resistance, a great many florists simply knowing how their business stood by the amount of money they had left in bank after the bills were paid. Today this is practiced to a much lesser extent, as almost every florist, who wishes to make a success of his business, realizes to do so he must practice up-to-date methods, and conduct his business in a systematic way—a way that will give only the best results.

It is oft times a good plan for a florist to bring in a certified public accountant and start his books out in the latest and most up-to-date methods of book-keeping. By this, I don't mean an elaborate, complicated system, but a simplified manner of keeping books, in order to know definitely how the business stands each month, and have it arranged so it will be known what branch or department of the business is making money, and what part isn't. The sooner the part not making money is cut out, the better. Of course, at times there are certain things that one would have to handle in order to cater to a general trade, even if the immediate returns are not discernible. In other words, it may be a deficit which would be chargeable to advertising.

Another thought is that a great many times a person running a business is overimbuied with some pet scheme that he has, and doesn't realize that that particular end of the business is losing money, but if he had the figures each month showing a loss, then it would probably be cut out very much sooner than if he went on without knowing just how he stood. In fact, it may be carrying the whole business down, and eventually the business goes bankrupt, whereas if this part had been stopped in the beginning, the rest would have gone on successfully. This brings us back to the old saying, that if you take care of the pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves, and that's only too true in many instances of this kind.

COLLECTIONS AND CHARGE ACCOUNTS.

Collections and charges are also very important features of a business. In granting credit, be very careful to grant credit only to those who you feel reasonably sure will pay. Oftentimes a moral risk is far better than a risk where there seems to be plenty of money, but very little principle. This kind of credit is more dangerous than giving credit to one starting out with a small capital and a good moral reputation. It isn't always safe to give credit simply on morality. At the same time, it's a splendid guide, and many a successful business has gotten a good start by the fact of getting credit on its moral reputation, and the effort always to do business along straight lines. The unprincipled dealer is almost always sure, sooner or later, to get into trouble, and sometimes such serious trouble that it will carry him under, as unprincipled methods cannot succeed in the long run. The man who builds up a first-class reputation is building along with it stability, which in the end will count for more than any other one thing that he can do. It may take years to build up a reputation, which can be lost by a single act of dishonesty or unscrupulous dealing.

I think that I have noticed a more general change for the better in methods of doing business in the last 10 years than any time during the time that I have been in the business, and more florists have realized that it is necessary for them to pursue up-to-date methods. The younger generation as they come along, with their modern methods of training, realize this more than the older generation.

Courtesy is another thing that it isn't possible to have too much of, in one's business. Always being courteous to customers, under all circumstances, no matter whether the customer is wrong or right, builds for better business, and leaves a feeling that will bring back a customer, where discourtesy is sure to drive that same customer away.

When it comes to the growing end, I am not quite as familiar with that as a grower would be, but I believe any one starting out in the business is pretty nearly as well off to start with a new place, even if it is in a small way, and plan his building for the future. If the business prospers, and it's far more apt to, with a well-laid plan, then each succeeding house is built according to this plan. In looking at some of the larger places that we have in our business today, one finds that they are more or less haphazardly built. Of course, they were built under strenuous circumstances, lack of capital, oftentimes, and other times lack of knowledge, but altogether they were not built as they would if there had been a well-laid plan made in the beginning, with the idea of making a large place of it. All these large establishments started in a small way, and had they realized they were going to be large concerns, then, of course, they would have made plans better suited for large places. I can recall one or two places that were very prosperous and became large establishments and big factors in the trade, and when the original owner gave up the management, it was a hard matter for his successors to continue and make it a successful business. Had these places been thought out more carefully as to their planning and not been built in such a haphazard way, they could have gone on almost indefinitely. These cases are, of course, more or less isolated. No one who starts in business but feels eventually he will have one of the big businesses of the country. Even the smallest grower starting out with only one small greenhouse feels that he is going to grow, and if he starts out with always this idea in mind, of a plan for a bigger business, he will be pretty sure to make a success as he goes along.

PUBLICITY.

In comparing our business with other lines of enterprise, it is very evident that we are not suffering the way many other lines are and have suffered. The farmer, for instance, the past year, has marketed most of his crops either at a very big loss or so near a loss that there has been no profit at all, and looking at the various lines of our trade, we find the unsuccessful firms are very few and far between. I think this better business condition, which the flower business, in general, is, and has been facing, is due primarily to publicity, which has been carried on in its various branches.

We have before the public a slogan, which is conceded by advertising authorities to be the best slogan that has ever been introduced in any business in this country. "Say It With Flowers" is known from one end of the land to the other, and the continual bringing of this slogan before the public has, without a doubt, helped every grower, wholesaler, and retailer in every line of the business, whether plants, cut flowers, or whatever it may be, and it is certainly up to every florist to back this national publicity campaign.

While it may seem like getting back very little immediate return where a contribution of $50, $100 or $500 is given towards the national publicity campaign, yet the results are sure to be far reaching and make for future business all over the country.

Probably a number of you have noticed, recently, in the trade papers, the story of the co-operative advertising of the St. Louis, Mo., florists. They came out just before Easter with a double page spread in the St. Louis newspapers, and all the St. Louis florists are very enthusiastic about the results that this brought them, in increased business. They feel it was money very well spent, and was more than a paying investment for them. Collective local advertising cannot help but repay every city or town that takes up publicity of this kind.

A recent advertisement came out from one of the large national advertisers of this country, and illustrates very clearly this situation of contributing money towards the national publicity fund, "Say It With Flowers."

A LESSON FROM THE STARS.

In the garden of a country home, two men were talking. Near them sat a small boy, looking at the stars.

Said one of the men: "I am making a product that I know is the best in its class—and still I can't sell it."

There was a moment of silence. Then the second man called to the boy who sat near them: "Son," he said, "if you had your choice of any of those stars up there, which one would you choose?"

The boy promptly pointed to the brightest star in sight. "That big one over there!" he said.

The man who had addressed the boy turned to his companion. "As a matter of fact," he said, "there are other stars in the heavens, which the boy cannot see, that are far brighter and bigger than the one he chose. But he didn't know the other stars were there so he couldn't choose them. That's why your product isn't selling. People simply do not know it exists."

"I know what you mean," said the first man, "advertising. But I have tried advertising in the past, two or three times, and it didn't work."

His companion seemed preoccupied with the stars. "If we stand here and watch the sky for a few minutes," he finally said, "we shall see a shooting star. It will spurt across the heavens for a second, and then it will die out. There are thousands of shooting stars every night. People pay little attention to them and they are instantly forgotten. That's the kind of an advertiser you were."

"The Pole star," continued the speaker, "has stayed on the job so long and so faithfully that its very name has come to mean 'a guide, a controlling principle.' And that's the way to advertise. There are certain products today whose names are regarded as a guide to satisfaction and a controlling principle of quality. They are the pole stars. In this present economic situation it is the pole stars that are doing the business."

Another illustration of what publicity can do and is doing is the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, which has become one of the strongest affiliated societies of the Society of American Florists, and, today, is really a tremendous power and is bringing the florist more business probably than any other one of the affiliated societies. I think we all want to take our hats off to this organization—the way they have been handling and showing the possibilities of transmitting orders from one town to another. There certainly is many a dollar saved for the florists through a possibility of their customers being able to supply friends in a distant city, and the F. T. D. business, which is backed by clean, clear cut methods, methods that make for ever increasing possibilities, is becoming not only national but international, and will be more so as the years go by.

SPECIAL FEATURE DAYS.

All holidays or special days are days that the florists want to encourage, as this brings in extra business, creating a market that otherwise would not be possible. Such days as Christmas and Easter do not need to be pushed nearly as much as some of the other holidays, but we have other days that can be made better florist days than they are at present. Christmas and Easter the florist, as a rule, has pretty nearly as much as he can handle and handle satisfactorily.

Mothers' Day is, in certain localities, fast approaching in volume Easter and Christmas. To a great many florists it is a more satisfactory day. In Chicago, for instance, and other cities of the west, they feel that Mothers' Day is a better day than Easter, which is very surprising considering the short time that Mothers' Day has been in existence, they claiming that the day appeals more to the masses than to just flower buyers, and that is what we want to strive for, more days to sell flowers to the general public.

You will probably remember that I spent about six months in Germany, last year, in child welfare work, and there a birthday is the big day of the year, of every one's life, and means more to them than any other day. Flowers are one of the things that are given more than any other one article. At one of the places where I boarded, the lady was the recipient of flowers from a great many of her friends, on her birthday, and I think that she appreciated the flowers more than any other one thing that she received, and there's no reason why the florists in this country shouldn't encourage birthdays more, reminding their customers not to forget the birthdays of those they love, by sending a few flowers. Then they would have more business every day in the year and not a spasmodic business, as holiday business is at present.

Armistice Day.—Armistice Day is another occasion that can be made a florist's day, and with the united efforts of the Society of American Florists and the florists' state organizations, eventually be as popular and as good a day for the florists as Memorial Day is now, which in many localities is a splendid florist's day.

The Society of American Florists has a national charter, which is the only trade organization that is honored with a charter of this kind. By having this charter, it is given a standing that is invaluable in many ways—a prestige that could not be obtained if an ordinary trade body. This charter was granted on account of our business being educational, and our aim is to carry out not only the educational idea but to create a love for one of God's greatest gifts to humanity and help make for better citizenship.

In the United States there are 15,000 or more florists, and only about 4,000 of them members of the Society of American Florists. The dues are not very much, $5 a year, $50 for life membership, and I feel sure every florist who joins will fully realize that he couldn't spend $5 better than by joining the Society of American Florists.

The Society of American Florists with the backing that they are giving to various branches of the business—publicity in all its phases; advertising in a national way; then the national flower shows which are a tremendous help to the business and a revelation to the public in the cities where they are held, helping the flower business as hardly any other of the society's backings help.

Now I want to say a word in regard to a state movement of this kind, where all the florists in the state are getting together. In union there is strength, and that is illustrated very truly if you look back to the Society of American Florists, what they have represented and what they have stood for in horticulture, and are doing today. They are now the parent body of many other organizations which have meant a wonderful lot for the flower business. As an example, I might mention a few of the affiliated organizations: the American Rose Society, the American Carnation Society, the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association and many others, all these doing their part to help push the flower business along.

The cities have their florists' clubs, which are very excellent in themselves, but when it comes to state legislation, it's almost impossible to get state legislation through, of any kind, without having a state organization to back them. The local towns have their representatives who are willing to do all they can, but it almost stops at that point and the state representatives from other sections are not interested, but if backed by a state organization, that means a power that cannot be wielded in any other.

Then, too, as in Florida, there's hardly any city that would be large enough to support a florist club. Probably Jacksonville would be the only city. I suppose that there aren't enough florists to support a club, so the state organization is the thing for you to have, and the thing for you to work through when you want to accomplish anything either inside the state or outside, and it seems to me that the state organization would be a great help to your State Agricultural college, in backing it up in many ways. Several of the states say they would never have had the floricultural experiment stations and floricultural courses at the state colleges that they now have if it hadn't been for the state florists' organizations.

The officers and directors of the Society of American Florists feel that it is a great benefit to the society to have these tie-ups with the various state associations, and if there's anything to be handed in a national way it can be done a great deal better by having these state organizations back of them.

GARDEN BEAUTIFUL.

Mr. A. T. De La Mare, owner of the Florists' Exchange, has had in his mind, for some time, a scheme to help the prisoners of our country by making it possible for them to have gardens.

You possibly noticed in the April 8 issue of the Florists' Exchange, and if you haven't, you should read it, an article on the "Garden Beautiful," telling how a scheme of this kind was created in the prison on San Francisco bay, near San Francisco, Calif., and Mr. De La Mare's idea is to have the Society of American Florists back the creation of gardens among the prisons of the different states, with each state vice-president as the official Society of American Florists' representative.

The details, of course, will have to be worked out later, but the general plan of trying to help our fallen fellowmen is a very worthy and very excellent plan, as we certainly want to elevate humanity instead of bringing it down to lower levels. At present, the prison laws governing the prisons are anything but helpful in elevating them. In fact, a great many times prisoners come out of prison far more a criminal than they go in, and with this suggestion of Mr. De La Mare's to have flower gardens in connection with the prisons, with the prisoners looking after them and taking care of them, certainly would create in them a love for flowers, and bring them out better citizens, and I hope that Florida will do her share along these lines.

In closing, I want to make an appeal for the Society of American Florists and its membership. I think that every florist, not only in the state of Florida but every other state, as well, should be a member of the Society of American Florists. I have noticed with regret that Florida is credited with only 10 annual members and six life members. I fully realize that Florida is not a large state from a florist standpoint. At the same time, I know there are a great many florists in the state of Florida, and it would be a great pleasure to me to have a larger membership from your good state.

Olmsted Centenary.

Today is the centennial of the birth of Frederick Law Olmsted, the great landscape architect, especially endeared to the citizens of Boston, Mass., as the designer of Franklin park. Born at Hartford, Conn., and privately educated, he became a farmer by profession, interested in rural improvement and the landscape development of his estate. He traveled extensively in England and the United States, recording his observations of rural life in several books, of which "The Cotton Kingdom," an account of the condition of slavery in the south, is perhaps the most widely known.

In 1857, almost by chance, he became the superintendent of the new Central park just being created in New York, the first landscape park in America. In partnership with Calvert Vaux, an English architect in New York, he won the competition for a design for the park, and was made its responsible chief, continuing in this capacity with a few interludes until 1878.

The firm of Olmsted & Vaux soon became established in the new profession of landscape design, in which Downing had been their most notable precursor. During the Civil war Mr. Olmsted was one of the leaders in organizing and directing the United States Sanitary Commission, out of which later came the Red Cross. After the war Mr. Olmsted's professional practice grew extensively, embracing park and land subdivision work in both east and west.

About 1875 Mr. Olmsted was consulted concerning the development of parks for Boston and worked out the design for the Back Bay Fens and, in conjunction with Professor Charles Sprague Sargent, for the Arnold arboretum. In 1880 he removed his headquarters from New York to Boston, settling finally in Brookline, Mass. In 1886 Mr. Olmsted designed Franklin park, and his firm continued for many years at work on designing and improving the parks which make Boston one of the most notable park cities.

From 1891 to 1893 he co-operated with Daniel H. Burnham and other artists in designing the World's Fair at Chicago, Mr. Olmsted's most notable opportunity to express his appreciation of civic beauty. At the dinner of the artists of the fair, held in New York, Mr. Burnham paid this tribute to Mr. Olmsted:

"Each of you knows the name and genius of him who stands first in the heart and confidence of American artists, the creator of your own parks and many other city parks. He it is who has been our best adviser and our common mentor. In the highest sense he is our planner of the exposition—Frederick Law Olmsted. No word of his has fallen to the ground among us since first he joined us, some 30 months ago. An artist, he paints with lakes and wooded slopes; with lawns and banks and forest-covered hills; with mountainsides and ocean views. He should stand where I do tonight, not for his deeds of later years alone, but for what his brain has wrought and his pen has taught for half a century."

Charles Eliot Norton said of him on the same occasion:

Sidney H. Bayersdorfer
Of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

"Of all American artists, Frederick Law Olmsted, who gave the design for the laying out of the grounds of the World's Fair, stands first in the production of great works which answer the needs and give expression to the life of our immense and miscellaneous democracy."

Mr. Olmsted did more than any other man to establish the profession of landscape architecture in America, to calculate ideals of orderly city growth, and to bring to urban populations the refreshment afforded by the landscape beauty of large parks. To his artistry there is no more worthy monument than our own Franklin park, conceived 40 years ago and now coming to a rich maturity. As Mr. Olmsted himself said five years before he undertook the work for Central park or ever thought of becoming a landscape architect: "What artist so noble, has often been my thought, as he who with far-reaching conception of beauty and designing power, sketches the outline, writes the colors, and directs the shadows of a picture so great that Nature shall be employed upon it for generations before the work he has arranged for her shall realize his intentions?"—Boston Transcript, Issue of April 26.

Florists' Trade Conditions in Europe.

Address by Sidney H. Bayersdorfer, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, May 2, 1922.

I have been asked to give a review tonight of my trip abroad. Those who heard the talk I gave in Memphis, Tenn., two years ago, no doubt remember my telling of the conditions that existed in Germany then; of my living mostly on chocolate and that the railroads were so terrible that to go a distance from Philadelphia to New York, took about 12 hours, changing trains three times. But today conditions are back to normal. They are able to get all the food they want, and the railroads are giving the service they did in pre-war times.

I will start from the beginning on my trip. I sailed on the S. S. Aquitania, my room being filled with flowers, gifts from friends. I wish to state that flowers are sent to steamers in great abundance, and if I were a florist I would advertise by placards in my window: "Flowers Sent to Steamer." We passed the three-mile limit and there was a rush for the bar. The first night out, the ocean was a little rough and I became a bit sick, so I drank a bottle of champagne; after that I did not know whether I was sick or what happened.

I arrived in Paris, France, February 14, stayed there but one day, going directly to Nice. Nice and vicinity is the winter resort of Europe, where the wealth and royalty of the world spend their winters. They have spring while we are having winter. I don't think anyone who has not seen the Riviera, can imagine its beauty. The water is bluer than sapphires; the grass, emerald green, all houses are of white stucco with a frieze of fruit or flowers stenciled or inlaid in tiny blocks just below the roof of red tile. There the mountains meet the sea. We reached Nice in time for the carnival. The streets were packed with people in masks and costumes; everyone had a spirit of good fellowship and confetti fell like rain. The floats were comic and massive. Another day, there were flower floats on which they used fresh flowers, instead of paper maiche. Some wonderful sight! Flowers grow in abundance there. I went over to the flower market and saw gorgeous flowers, among them the mimosa which is a variety of the acacia and grows in great abundance. I have here a miniature hamper, which is used down there in shipping the mimosa all over Europe. All the fashionable hotels, one of whose 'circulars' I have here, sell it by the five kilo lot, which is 11 pounds, costing fr. 15, which is today about $1.40. This is the retail price. This circular was taken from the Hotel Ruhl, while I was there. Beautiful wild flowers grow about Nice.

From Nice I went to Naples, Italy, and the old saying "Go to Naples and die" is true, for the view across the bay to Vesuvius, in constant eruption, is one of the most marvelous sights in the world. The city itself is very dirty. There are many beggars. I learned from a very reliable source that there were 100,000 deserted children in Naples, who had never slept under a roof. Caruso was one of these. In Naples I had the opportunity to see a small piece of sculpture to be dedicated to Caruso and placed in a church there. The sculptor has been working on it for a year and expects to take another year to complete it. I merely mention this to give you an idea why Europe makes perfect goods. They strive for perfection no matter how long it takes, while we Americans want effect, speed and quantity. That is why European articles are permanent. For example in our own florist line, I bought baskets for next fall that takes a man nearly a whole day to make. Imagine the cost of such a basket made by an American, but there they are willing to take time to make an extremely beautiful basket, and do not expect such high wages. There still exists a love of craft.

From Naples I journeyed to Rome. Rome and Milan are the only two up to date towns in Italy. In Rome I had the opportunity to buy some flowers for an attention to a friend. I picked out some beautiful lilacs and roses, the latter being $1 each, but had a very heavy stem and were a lovely light pink. I have forgotten the name of this rose, but it is something I have never seen in this country. I handed the florist the flowers I had selected and he wrapped them in a piece of paper just as a grocer would wrap cheese. I protested "Have you no box?" "None, we don't use them." So, as the only box he had was a hamper in which to ship mimosee, he used that, and I showed him how we sent flowers out. I had a sample of the butterfly box, of which you have heard, with me, which I'm having made in Europe for next fall delivery, and he was astonished at the expense we go to, to pack flowers. This florist was so pleased with the result that he said he would give up his store in Rome and come to America, if he could get a position here. They also use for delivery a the streets. I have imported them for thin wooden box, very light in weight; this is just a delivery box, 20x30 inches. You will see them carrying these in our florists, for delivering. All that is used in the best florists' shops is the Italian porcelain. This is very fine ware and I have imported some this year.

WINDOW BOXES POPULAR IN VENICE.

From Rome I went to Florence. At this city and vicinity is the place where all the Italian grasses, wheat, thistles, and things of that sort are obtained. From Florence, I went to Venice. Venice, as you have heard, is a city built on water, which is perfectly true. At the station I was met by a gondola, which took me to the hotel. Although there are no grounds in Venice, they have window boxes filled with plants and flowers.

From Venice we journeyed to Milan and Switzerland. One hates to leave Italy in spite of its poverty and dirt. There is a charm which makes one long to return. Each city has an individuality of its own, such as no other country can boast of. Florence is mediæval; Venice, unique; and Milan quite modern. Italian trains never run on time, but as soon as one passes the Swiss border, there comes a change. At Chiasso, the Swiss frontier, the Swiss clean and do all but fumigate the train. They are electrifying all railroads, utilizing their water power for this purpose. One also marvels that human beings could build such tunnels without which one could not travel in Switzerland during the winter. Switzerland is the home of the Edelweiss. I had the opportunity of picking some of these, in the snow.

Next I came into Germany, and was very pleasantly greeted by a rude policeman on the train who told me I was traveling in Bavaria, a state of Germany, without a permit, was under arrest and must report to the police station in Munich the next morning. There, they asked numerous questions took six hours of my time and charged me mks. 720. An amusing little incident occurred in the diner as we were traveling to Munich. My wife and I had a dinner which cost us mks. 35, and at that time I had mks. 3,000, with me and my wife said "How will you ever spend mks. 3,000?"

Mks. 35 is about 12 cents, but however when we reached the hotel an illuminating incident occurred which showed us how we could spend it. I got to the hotel late at night and found no room had been engaged. The clerk knowing I was an American asked me first what I wanted, and the Germans who were around there trying to get rooms also, said in German: "De auslander kumpt erst", which means "The foreigners come first" and they made quite a howl. I asked the clerk how much he wanted for a room, and he said he had a suite for mks. 1200, so I said "Any of you Germans who want the room at mks. 1200 can have it." This at the former rate of exchange would be $300 for one night. In our money this sum is $4. A mark is a mark to a German and mks. 1200 means a lot of money to them, naturally none cared for the room at this price.

You can readily see what has happened in Germany. The man who had retired before the war has found his income so diminished that he is almost forced to beg. If he had mks. 50,000 before the war he was a wealthy man, for although the mark was only 25 cents, it bought as much as 50 cents, and he had an equivalent of $24,000. Now this income today, the same number of marks, is worth about $170. It is impossible for him to support a family on that, and he is practically a beggar. The only people in Germany who are wealthy are the merchants and manufacturers. Their goods have advanced enough to make up for the difference in exchange. In some of the smaller places they do not seem to know that the mark is valueless. I paid mks. 50 a night for a room. But in the large cities they are well aware of the difference, and the foreigner gets well charged. I paid mks. 2500 in Berlin per night. The German government is beginning to make foreigners buy their goods in their own currency. I purchased 60 per cent of my goods in dollars and while the prices were high, heard that they have advanced much more since I left. You can buy retail cheaper than wholesale. They must get a tax to send goods out of the country. Some say goods are so cheap in Germany; that is true, but to get them out, it costs so much.

From Munich, I went to attend the Leipzig fair, which is held twice a year and shows every class of merchandise made in Germany, from heavy machinery to the finest of ribbons. The whole town is turned over to the fair and every store is fixed up as a stand. This is only wholesale business, and you see people there from all over the world, India, South America, etc. The Americans have a conceited idea that they are buying out Germany. This is untrue. England is buying far more goods from Germany than we are.

FINE CARNATIONS AT WEIMAR.

From Leipzig we went to Dresden, Berlin, Hamburg, etc. In Weimar I saw the most wonderful carnations I have ever seen. They had stems three feet long, were all colors including lavender. They were grown by Donner who used to work for H. A. Dreer in this country. Over there these sell for mks. eight a piece, which the Germans consider high, but which is for us about three cents. Now I wish to tell you a little about the florists in Germany. Although they have the opportunity to buy novelties, etc., which are manufactured in Germany, they haven't them in their shops. I presume they haven't the call for them. Almost every florist has his window filled with funeral wreaths. They are compact and ready to take out for a funeral. The reason for this is that they do not hold the bodies there as we do here, but bury the day after the death. Some of these wreaths are beautiful. Many are as large as five feet, some with fresh cut flowers in them. They are compact and mostly on wooden hoops, but are very thick and have much work on them. I have imported a number of these, and will be able to show them in a month or so.

As in Italy, they do not use paste board boxes for wrapping their flowers and when they use baskets, they do not put pans in them, but put the flowers down in moss. In making up a basket they pack the flowers, giving the basket an even appearance and they are not arranged artistically as we arrange them.

The florist business was originated mostly in Germany, but we have gone far ahead of them. This is also true of florist supplies. These are not obtained from the florist supply house in Germany, but are secured from numerous houses, such as porcelain manufacturers, basket makers, or confectionery houses. When I go into these, they have no idea how or what I can use in the florist business, so they allow me to go through their place and select what I need.

There is something Germany has that we haven't, namely, liquor. A bottle of champagne costs over in Germany about 70 cents; a bottle of wine about 35 cents; a mug of beer, yes, much more than I could drink at one time, costs about 14 cents. I notice that you are all smacking your lips, while I would like to have one tonight myself.

From Germany I traveled through the devastated area of France to Paris. The Germans are fostering a bitter hatred against the French, because they think that the rest of the world would forget the reparation except for the constant French reminder. However, anyone who has traveled through the devastated area and has seen the temporary shacks in which the French are living can see their point of view. Germany has everything, so the French think. Why shouldn't they pay?

In Paris I went to see a number of florists and there they arrange their flowers very loosely in baskets. They do not use the time there either. Prices are very high in Paris. There is very little new, except they are using in making up baskets, natural grasses dyed pale green among the flowers. This is very pretty and effective. In France they use for the cemetery beaded wreaths. I visited some of the graves, these flowers were packed on top of each other. Their cemeteries are not as pretty as ours, although their age and history make them interesting.

Soon I sailed for home on the good ship Resolute of the United American line. To give you an idea of the modern ship, I will say we had broiled live lobster nearly all the way. There is a newspaper printed on board of the news of both continents and I kept a daily communication with Philadelphia. The modern ship has large rooms. We had beds and bath as large as a hotel room. There was a greenhouse on board. The florist brought a quantity of lily of the valley, rose plants in buds, forget-me-not plants and azaleas. The boat was marvelously decorated with azaleas, acacias, hydrangeas and enormous palms, making the vessel look like a big hotel in spring. This being the first trip, every room had a growing plant of azaleas, etc., flowers being so cheap in Germany the company could afford this.

On Easter Sunday I started a little, "Say It With Flowers" campaign. Early in the morning, the florist and I arranged an American corsage of orchids and lily of the valley for my wife. We promenaded the main deck. I could hear wives of different men saying: "Dear, this is Easter Sunday; Mrs. B. has flowers," so there was a run on the florist. That afternoon every woman had her corsage and promenaded just as you people did on Fifth avenue, or in Atlantic City, N. J. As we left the boat everyone marveled that the ladies wore fresh flowers.

Outside the three-mile limit we had a farewell drink, but in spite of the closing of the bar we were glad to greet Miss Liberty. One parting word is that the foreign florists do not stick together, or have Society of American Florists and Florists' Telegraph Delivery Associations as we have, which makes for close union, like our union of the United States.

Florida State Florists' Association.

LAKELAND MEETING, MAY 5.

The first annual convention of the Florida State Florists' Association was held at Lakeland, May 5. An interesting programme had been prepared for the occasion, touching on the possibilities of Florida as a floricultural and seed growing center. S. S. Pennock, president of the Society of American Florists, presented a very able address on "The Basic Principles Governing the Successful Florist."

The following subjects were discussed by the members: "Bulb Opportunities in Florida for Cut Flower Purposes;" "The Asparagus Growers' Problem;" "Florists' Planting Calendar for Cut Flowers," and "Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-two Novelties." A practical demonstration of the various methods of floral designing was given by M. Whipp, of Mills the Florist, Inc., Jacksonville.

Telegraphing Flowers.

Arthur Newell, the well known florist of Kansas City, Mo., says they have the F. T. D. idea out in Kansas to such a degree that they believe it possible to send by wire the flowers of their gardens, which have been raised with such tender care, to any part of the country.

One day last summer a station agent in a small Kansas town was directed by an old lady to send a bunch of flowers she had gathered from her garden, to her daughter in Philadelphia, Pa., by telegraph. He declared this to be impossible, but she insisted, stating it was being done in all the large cities everywhere and he ought to know how and should try to keep his home town up to date. She finally left with her civic pride much hurt in finding her town so much behind the rest of the country and the agent wondering what was coming next.

Society of American Florists.

NATIONAL PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN.

It is noticeable that with the recent resumption of magazine advertising the outside use of our slogan is rejuvenated. In the rotogravure section of the New York Times, of May 7, a photograph of a society lady who took part in a function in aid of a charity appeared in a setting, "Say It With Flowers," the slogan prominently featured; the lady evidently took the slogan as a pleasing theme for a character part, which she portrayed to excellent advantage. Even the stately Congressional Record, it is said, features the slogan in its report of a discussion. The Washington Times refers to the fact as follows:

"The difference between an 'alliance' and 'entente cordiale' is all in how you say it, according to Senator Reed (Dem.) of Missouri, one of the senate's most formidable foes of foreign treaties. If you 'say it with flowers' it's an 'entente cordiale,' according to Reed, while if you say it 'with force' it's an 'alliance.'"

There is no doubt whatever that it pays handsomely to keep our slogan going. The more it is seen, the more use made of it is just what is wanted. Who shall say that it cannot be made the most popular slogan of the times? Has anyone ever thought of the tremendous price the florists could obtain for it were it possible to transfer it, with all its prestige, to a different line of trade?

OBITUARY.

Anton Wojtkiewicz.

Anton Wojtkiewicz, 26-year-old son of Felix Wojtkiewicz and wife, well known florists at 3016 Waterloo court, Chicago, died Sunday evening May 7, from injuries received when he was kicked by a horse while serving with the colors during the world war. It was at first thought that he was suffering from appendicitis and he was operated upon the previous Thursday, but the trouble was found to be the result of the injury sustained in the army. Mr. Wojtkiewicz was recovering nicely when pneumonia set in and he passed away the following Sunday. He was a brother of Edward Wojtkiewicz, with Kennicott Bros. Co., Chicago, and Miss Anna, who has a position at the Congress Flower Shop, of the same city.

The funeral services were held at St. Joseph's church May 10, interment being at St. Adalbert's cemetery. The floral offerings were many and beautiful.

John H. Patterson.

John H. Patterson, founder of the National Cash Register Co., Dayton, O., who entertained the members of the Society of American Florists, during the convention in that city, August 21-24, 1906, died May 7, age 78 years. Mr. Patterson was a liberal patron of horticulture.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The greenhouses and residence of Andrew J. Lepper were recently sold at public auction.

HUTCHINSON, KANS.—Harry Smith, proprietor of the Smith Flower Shop, has built greenhouses to supply his local trade.

MERIDEN, CONN.—D. Grillo is adding four new houses to his establishment on North Broad street, to be completed about July 1.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA.—The Kemble Floral Co., of Oskaloosa, has purchased the greenhouses and flower shop of I. N. Kramer & Son, with William Kemble, Jr., as manager. The Kemble company now operates seven establishments in Iowa, located at Ottumwa, Centerville, Grinnell, Chariton, Fort Madison and the two mentioned above.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—The Wm. Blackman Floral Co. advises that the volume of its Easter business was fully as large as in 1921, with no decline in prices for individual items. Lilies and hydrangeas were the best sellers in the plant line. In cut flowers, roses and sweet peas led, which were of fine quality and sufficient for all purposes.

MT. VERNON, O.—The greenhouses, office and boiler shed of Chas. E. Sharp, 203 South Main street, were almost totally destroyed by fire recently, the damage being estimated at $12,000 to $15,000, with no insurance. All of the Easter stock was ruined but Mr. Sharp has made arrangements to supply his customers from neighboring establishments until his own plant can be rebuilt.

PORT CHESTER, N. Y.—The Westchester and Fairfield Horticultural society listened to an interesting talk at its recent meeting by John H. Troy, who told of the horticultural features of his trip to Australia and New Zealand last winter. The displays, consisting of stock of excellent quality, were as follows: Geo. Hewitt, hunnermannias and yellow callas; W. J. Seeley, hydrangeas in tubs and mixed roses; Wm. Smith, a fine cherry colored sport of Carnation Lad-die; Alex. Greig, lupines; H. F. Bulpit, colored freesias; John H. Troy, Kurume azaleas, in pots.

THE American Window Glass Co., reduced the price of glass 21 per cent in April, 1921, and again 23 per cent in January, 1922.

THE Chicago Tribune in a recent issue makes vigorous protest against the commercial use of wild flowers in florists' stores or elsewhere, and suggests restrictive legislation.

VICTORY FOR THE CREDITORS.

Some time ago two suits were begun by the executor of the estate of Charles Willis Ward to foreclose two mortgages, each in the sum of $200,000. The mortgages covered real estate and personal property. The actions were resisted by G. Van den Abeele, receiver. Through his attorneys, Putter & Quinn, it was shown to the court that prior to the execution of the mortgage, on March 12, 1918, the stockholders of the company increased the capital stock $300,000 and asked permission of the corporation commission to issue 3,000 additional shares of stock at the par value of $100 per share. The evidence introduced in the case showed that on March 13, 1918, the board of directors authorized the execution of the $200,000 note and mortgages which were executed March 15, 1918. On March 21, 1918, the corporation commissioner objected to the execution of the mortgages on the ground that it was in excess of the amount allowed by law. Mr. Ward wrote the commissioner that as soon as he would grant permission to sell the increased capital stock that he would accept such stock in lieu of his $200,000 mortgage. On November 7, 1918, permission was granted and immediately thereafter Ward accepted 3,000 shares of the capital stock. It was shown that he had subscribed for this amount and that he accepted it and cancelled the debt. There was a mass of correspondence introduced in evidence. At the conclusion of the hearing Judge Sevier rendered his opinion in favor of the defendant and holding that the mortgage was fully paid. This means a great victory for the creditors of the Cottage Gardens Nurseries, for now they will receive all of the funds of the receivership, otherwise about five-sixths of such funds would have gone to the Ward estate.

The Cottage Gardens Nurseries will continue as one of the big industries of this section of California. David Ward is now the owner of the entire plant and all the difficulties of maintaining this big industry have been overcome. Great credit goes to G. Van den Abeele, the receiver. It was through his untiring efforts that this splendid industry was maintained during the past three years. If it had not been for him the entire industry would have ceased and one of Eureka's most attractive places would have no longer continued.

Mr. Van den Abeele is one of the best nurserymen in California and through his skill and energy and perseverance he kept the nursery up to a high standard of production and maintained it as a going business concern. During his administration he has paid from $80,000 to $100,000 per year for labor alone.—Humboldt County, Calif., Newspaper.

New York Florists' Club.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held on the night of May 8. President Roman J. Irwin in the chair. The secretary read the minutes of the April meeting, which were approved. On the call for committee reports, C. H. Totty, of the flower show committee, stated there was nothing for him to report at this time. Clifford Lowther, for the transportation committee, reported progress relating to reservations for the Society of American Florists' convention at Kansas City, Mo., August 15, and the meeting of the American Association of Nurserymen in Detroit, Mich., June 28.

Suitable resolutions on the death of Selah Van Riper, who had been a member of the club, were read and adopted, the members standing during the reading. A. M. Henshaw, president of the Allied Florists' Trade Association of this city, reported rather disappointing results in getting the retailers to attend the recent florists' mass meeting. He stated that $2,000 had been allotted to the retailers to be raised for publicity and said that $15,000 had been collected to date from all sources. The rose growers alone had contributed $4,187, and the present balance in the treasury totaled $4,393. Wm. Saville, speaking for the exhibition committee, promised a fine show for the June meeting.

Secretary Young called attention to the presence of James McHutchison who had a message for the members. Mr. McHutchison spoke on the approaching hearing to be held May 15, by the Federal Horticultural Board at Washington, D. C., relating to Quarantine No. 37. He was opposed to that quarantine and said in part that the matter was of such importance that as many as possible should attend the hearing. Chas. H. Totty re-inforced Mr. McHutchison's remarks. Both speakers were emphatic in their opposition to present methods. John Watson, Princeton, N. J., former secretary of the American Association of Nurserymen, asked for 15 minutes in which to read a paper. He began by disclaiming any financial interest on either side of the quarantine question. He reviewed the restrictions and their effects and as we understood him, believes to some extent in quarantine, but in reply to the remarks of a member disclaimed any favor for Quarantine No. 37 and said his object in reading the paper was to show the official attitude.

M. Outerbridge, of Bermuda, was introduced to the members and spoke on "Bermuda Lily Bulbs," saying in part that he was confident that their bulbs were not diseased. F. F. Rockwell gave an illustrated lecture on the developments in connection with the Seabrook Farms, conducted at Bridgeton, N. J., by P. M. Koster. Nursery and vegetable work is carried on at this farm on an extensive scale. The motion picture of tractor plowing and the automatic potato diggers were especially interesting. There were also a number of general views of the farm and nursery.

The following were elected to membership in the club: Joseph Hahn, 30 Barclay street; Emil Bartels, 43 West 18th street; Morris Gross, 40 Crescent street, Long Island City, L. I.; Frank Valentine, 165 East 110th street; Geo. A. Burnett, 92 Chambers street, Walter H. Barnwell, 92 Chambers street. Emil Bartels and Jos. Hahn were present and spoke briefly.

All of the amendments of the Florists' Club's by-laws were adopted, which were put through after recess when the majority of members had left the hall, not over 25 being present at the time. The death of John I. Raynor, a life member, was reported and a committee appointed to prepare suitable resolutions. The meeting was adjourned.

Union Hill, N. J.

The postoffice department clings to historic names. The local postoffice is named Weehawken, possibly in memory of the dueling ground that once existed, although it is doubtful if any living man can point out just where the duels were fought. To be explicit, what is now called Weehawken is near to the Hudson river and includes the station of the West Shore railroad and several manufacturing plants. This city, true to its name, is at the summit of the Bergen hills that extend through a chain of towns and cities from Jersey City to Hudson Heights. Bergenline avenue, the principal thoroughfare, has many good business houses and the retail florists are well represented.

A few months ago Mrs. Freda Busch opened an attractive shop at 134 Bergenline avenue. She reports a fine Easter trade and says business has been holding up well since then.

For several years the Vrana brothers have conducted a good store at 294 Bergenline avenue, but they now have ambitions along the line of the silk business and would sell their establishment.

The Steinhoff Flower Shop, 426 Hackensack Plank road, is conducted by Miss Steinhoff, a daughter of the late Herman Steinhoff, who was well known in the trade.

The flower department connected with the Neckor undertaking establishment is conducted by C. G. Cosmas, and he seems to have plenty of work.

What has been named the Margaret Flower Shop, 12 Bergenline avenue, is operated by Otto H. Roller and is an attractive and well ordered store.

P. Reis is located in the business area at 513 Humboldt street. He has the florist germ in his blood, being of a family of florists, and is a constant buyer in the New York market.

W. G. Bergland has a neat establishment at Fourth street and Bergenline avenue and seems to have good prospects.

Dreer's Pot Grown Hardy Perennials

The Stock here offered, all of best planting size, is pot grown unless otherwise noted. It is superior at all times to field grown stock and particularly so late in the season, there being no risk of loss even under unfavorable weather conditions. Extensive planters, among these the leading Landscape Architects, have for many years shown their appreciation of the Dreer Pot Grown Perennials.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE

NEW YORK

Newark, N. J.

The Broad street retailers are unanimous in stating that they had a good business in both plants and cut flowers.

NOTES.

Plant growers of the city and suburban towns seem to do a good business at Centre market, where they sell outside. We notice a fine collection at the stand of Harry H. Cook, who is located at 92 Hill street, Orange.

Henry Hernecker, who has a good shop and a number of stores on Central avenue, has an immense stock of budding plants in fine condition and reports good business in the plant line.

A. B. Hoffman, well known in the wholesale district of New York, who opened a store at 657 Bergen street about a year ago, has been quite successful.

The Rosery Floral Co., 167 Market street, reported an excellent business for Easter and seems to have a steady run of trade.

George Penek is well known in the trade and has a store near the market. He seems to be doing a fine business.

John Crossley, Belleville avenue, who is a constant buyer in the New York market, has a good spring business.

Philips Bros. had a better business for Easter than ever before and they anticipate an excellent Mothers' Day trade.

Manager Strachan, of Wolfinger's, is looking forward to good Mothers' Day business.

James Plunkett is making a success of his retail business in Branford Place.

F. A. Kuehn, 621 Central avenue, reports trade brisk.

A. F. F.

Rochester, N. Y.

BUSINESS EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD.

Business has been exceptionally good the past two weeks, funeral, wedding and counter trade making up the bulk of the sales. Sweet peas are unusually fine although the price received is low. Bulbous stock is still very plentiful. Columbia, Ophelia, Mrs. Aaron Ward and Francis Scott Key are in the best of condition. A choice lot of gladioli, delphiniums, snapdragons and gypsophillas are arriving. Lily of the valley is scarce but carnations are plentiful and of fine quality. A heavy supply of Harissii and calla lilies is arriving. Asparagus plumosus is scarce at this writing. The recent warm days have brought out vegetation profusely and there will soon be an abundance of all outdoor stock.

NOTES.

Owing to the great demand for carnations of excellent quality Hugo Teute has let a contract to the American Greenhouse Construction Co., for a house 40x300 feet and a conservatory in front of the range. Mr. Teute has 8,000 cyclamen plants in four and 5-inch pots ready for the autumn trade. He is still marketing fine Darwin tulips, cut gladioli and sweet peas.

Geo. T. Boucher was very busy last week, having had the decorations for the policemen's ball, May 1, at the State armory. Jos. Weruein has been assisting at the store. Mrs. Alma Keyes, of the firm's sales force, is spending several days in New York city during her spring vacation.

The greenhouses and residence of Andrew J. Lepper were sold at public auction recently.

H. E. Wilson is making a specialty of hardy herbaceous plants for spring planting.

CHESTER.

North Bergen, N. J.

George Schubert and Jos. Schubert, who a few months ago succeeded their father, Geo. Schubert, Sr., who retired in the management of the fernery, are not confining their efforts to ferns, though they have a great stock of their new kind, Nephrolepis Schuberti compacta coming on. This range has long been noted for its palms grown from seed. Thousands of Kentia belmoreana, in small pots, are now in stock. Another feature is the large supply of ferns suitable for dishes. The young men had a fine lot of Easter lilies that sold out well for the holiday.

Geo. Schubert, Sr., and wife, who spent the winter in Florida, returned home recently.

HEAVY DEMAND FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

The early demand for stock for Mothers' Day is heavy and while the supply is large it will not be at all surprising if the market cleans up completely before the rush is over. Roses are in strong demand and there is an extra heavy call for carnations and it is almost a certainty that these two items will be sold up early. Gladioli from the south and choice local indoor grown stock are quite a factor in the market, not to mention the unlooked for supply of iris which is attracting the attention of the buyers. Peonies are in large supply and will come in handy this week. Sweet peas are plentiful and the supply of tulips, lupines, jonquils, snapdragons, calendulas, daisies and pansies is quite heavy. Lily of the valley, orchids and gardenias appear to be holding their own. Lilies, callas, trailing arbutus, narcissus, lilac and other miscellaneous seasonable stock is included in the offerings. The out-of-town demand is very heavy and many buyers have been seen in the market the past week from distant points arranging for their supply. The local call for stock is good and while the heaviest demand is not expected until the end of the week many of the buyers were placing their orders early, figuring that the demand will absorb the supply regardless of its size. All the retailers have made big preparations for Mothers' Day here as well as elsewhere and the trade as a whole will admit that the demand for stock for this occasion is equal, if not greater, than any other holiday. THE AMERICAN FLORIST was the first to see the great possibilities of the day and featured it prominently in its reading columns as early as 1908. For the benefit of those who are in doubt who boosted the big day from the first it may not do any harm to reprint the following extract at this time which appeared in our May 16, 1908, issue: "The feature of the week was the rush of business on Saturday. It had been quiet all week but, almost without warning, a demand sprung up on Saturday morning which continued and kept the boys on the go all day long. Everything in white flowers sold out clean, the principal demand being for white carnations. It was the first celebration of Mothers' Day, when everyone, man, woman and child, was to honor the 'best mother in the world, their mother,' if happily they still enjoyed her companionship, by wearing a white flower or, if she had passed away, wear a white flower in memory of her. It is proposed to make this an annual event to be commemorated on May 10 each year. This custom is said to have originated in this city, being the idea of a lady resident, which was taken up by the city press and spread in a few days so that it is said to have been observed quite generally in many of the adjacent states. Owing to the short time or notice that was given to it, its observance was not at all general here, when one takes into account the whole population. Yet the demand was enough to use up every white carnation in sight and was a godsend to the commission houses, where the whites had been hanging fire and had, for a long time, been the hardest to sell. It is hoped that with the favorable way in which the idea of Mothers' Day was received that it will become, in time, one of the great flower days of the year. Why could not the idea be carried out so that the last resting place of those who have passed away should have placed thereon a bunch of white flowers? It would be a beautiful custom and much might be done by the craft in an unostentatious way to bring it about."

NOTES.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is in splendid crop for Mothers' Day and is pleased with the demand. The shipping trade is exceptionally brisk and a heavy local demand is expected later in the week. The supply department is enjoying a good season and the call for special boxes for Mothers' Day exceeded all expectations.

Mrs. John Worthy, widow of the late John Worthy, who was one of the first Lincoln park commissioners, died May

8. Mrs. Worthy was greatly interested in the planting of trees along the Lincoln highway.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is receiving large quantities of peonies from Villa Ridge and Carbondale.

Vaughan's Seed Store reports local counter demand well ahead of a year ago.

YOU CAN ALWAYS RELY UPON US FOR YOUR SUPPLY OF CUT FLOWERS

Remember when ordering that our line is so complete that it includes every item offered in the Great Chicago Market.

A. Henderson, of A. Henderson & Co., A. Miller, of the American Bulb Co., and Ralph B. Howe, of the W. W. Barnard Co., expect to attend the Federal Horticultural Board hearing at Washington, D. C., May 15. Mr. Henderson will represent the local club and allied florists.

The Herald-Examiner says, some North Shore women who have no sunny porches, are planting vines that grow in shade and, when the vines are grown sufficiently, stick artificial geraniums, bought at a 10-cent store, into the foliage.

Zech & Mann are busy with Mothers' Day orders this week and report a heavy call for stock from out-of-town points. Stock in general is in large supply here, especially roses, but is cleaning up nicely each day.

The Wojtkiewicz family have the sympathy of the trade in the loss of their loving son and brother, Anton, whose death occurred this week, an account of which appears in the obituary column.

Wietor Bros. are well pleased with their Mothers' Day business so far and while they are cutting heavily in roses and carnations stock is moving surprisingly well owing to the heavy demand.

The J. A. Budlong Co. is having its share of the business for Mothers' Day, especially in the shipping department. Stock of all kinds is in large supply here, especially roses of splendid quality.

The Central Floral Co. has a very attractive window display for Mothers' Day that is most appropriate for the occasion, with one's best friend occupying the centre of the setting.

James R. Paul & Son, well known landscape planters, report a very busy season in their line and much work yet to be done. The firm's new address is 6225 Glenwood avenue.

A. E. Turner, well-known fern man of Mosinee, Wis., called on the wholesale trade here this week, leaving May 11 to visit the dealers at St. Louis, Mo., and Cincinnati, O.

R. H. Wells, manager of the Detroit-McCallum Company, Detroit, Mich., was a visitor May 4, attending the Florists' Club meeting the same evening.

E. F. Winterson has been unable to resist the call of the soil any longer and is playing "hookey," with headquarters at Highland Park.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are well pleased with the early demand for Mothers' Day, with the call from out-of-town points exceptionally heavy.

Joe Steckal, who is in the florist business at Beverly Hills, is lending a hand to the sales force at the Joseph Foerster Co.'s store this week.

Joe Marks, of A. Henderson & Co., has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his mother, whose death occurred May 4.

Peter Reinberg, Inc., is pleased with the Mothers' Day business so far and the outlook is bright for a late city demand.

Al Campiche is giving the regular force at A. T. Pyfer & Co.'s store a lift during the Mothers' Day rush.

W. L. Rock, of Kansas City, Mo., was a visitor at the Chicago Flower Growers' Association's store May 9.

The Joseph Foerster Co. is offering a large supply of iris in addition to its usual complete line of stock.

Tulips outdoors in Washington park and elsewhere in the city, have made a good showing this season.

A number of changes will take place in the local wholesale cut flower market in the near future.

Erne & Co. supplied their trade with some of the finest lilac of the season this week.

Ed. Goldenstein, of Vaughan's Seed Store, has returned from the east.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

Since May 1 the weather has been very warm and carnation growers began to move young stock into the field. The call for bedding plants has been quite brisk, the demand starting earlier this year than last. As we often have frosty nights before May 30, duplicate sales often result. In light of last year's experience an exceptionally brisk demand is expected for Mothers' Day. Especially plants, it being so near Memorial Day, will be plentiful and cut flower offerings, with the possible exception of carnations, will be liberal.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING, MAY 4.

The members of the Florists' Club listened to a most interesting and instructive illustrated talk by Huron N. Smith, curator of botany at the Public museum, on plant life, from the lowest to the most highly developed flowers, at the May 4 meeting, held in the Museum building. Mr. Smith was elected an honorary member of the club at the April meeting. It seems a pity that more of the members could not have heard his address. The entertainment committee, consisting of Walter Halliday, Henry Wilke, S. Hare, have completed elaborate arrangements for the annual May ball to be held at the Calumet Club, May 17. While everyone of the local craft is welcome, the club would be pleased to greet and entertain out-of-town florists. The meeting was adjourned.

NOTES.

Since April 30 this city is again governed by daylight saving time, which is more agreeable to the florist's employees than the proprietor who continues work an hour or more longer, especially during the busy month of May.

The Florists' Association is pushing the Mothers' Day publicity to the limit which ought to bear results. Preparedness and co-operation will do the trick.

Fred H. Holton and Roy Currie returned from New Orleans, La., April 30, where they attended the Shriner's convalescence the week previous.

The Bradish Floral Co., successor to F. W. Ernst, has been using a new Ford delivery car since the first of the month.

BUSINESS FAIRLY BRISK.

Business last week was steady, with funeral work fairly active. Active preparations are being made for Mothers' Day, which is expected to be one of the big events of the year. Indications point to an advance in the price of carnations, but other stock will remain the same, it is believed. Carnations, roses snapdragons, sweet peas and pot plants are the leaders, the former bringing $1.50 to $2 per dozen. Roses are of excellent quality, at $3 to $7 per dozen. Premier, Sunburst, Mrs. Ward and Columbia being the most popular. Snapdragons are not as plentiful as formerly and prices are slightly higher. Sweet peas are in good supply and pot plants are selling well. Garden flowers are now in the market, shrubbery goes briskly and landscape work is one of the big features of many local establishments.

FLOWER GROWERS' AND RETAILERS' ASS'N.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the Flower Growers' and Retailers' Association was held at the Chittenden hotel, May 2, with a good attendance. The feature of the meeting was a talk on greenhouses and supplies for growers, by Mr. Frey of the McCallum Co., Pittsburgh, Pa. Steps have been taken to have a flower show week some time in the fall, possibly in October, when all of the florists of the city will be asked to make special displays in their store rooms. The advertising for Mothers' Day was arranged and steps have been taken to present the film of the recent Fifth National Flower Show, in Indianapolis, at the Majestic theater.

NOTES.

Walter Stephens of S. F. Stephens & Co., reports a number of improvements at the company's plant at Greenlawn cemetery. A new building, for the filling of cemetery vases is being erected in order to take care of that class of business better. The concern also installed a new bookkeeping system and new filing cabinet for the more efficient handling of orders and correspondence. A plot of Darwin tulips, containing 10,000 plants, is attracting attention. Business with this concern is now above normal and the volume is the same as during the war period, it is said.

The Wilson Seed Co., at its new location on East Town street, has started a society department, which has been placed in charge of Mrs. Grace Moon, who is called upon to keep posted on approaching society events, such as weddings, receptions, dinners and banquets, for the purpose of giving the sales department a chance to get in touch with the people. The department is proving a good success.

Mrs. Williams, manager of the local branch of the Zettlitz Floral Products Co., with greenhouses on the Groveport pike, has resigned and returned to Lima, O., where she may continue with the Zettlitz interests. She left April 29 and up to date no manager has been selected. The company is making extensive improvement by tiling all of the benches, roses being grown exclusively.

A fairly good trade is reported by the Munk Floral Co. Preparations are being made for a busy Mothers' Day, although indications point to a scarcity of roses and carnations. It is believed that many sales of pot plants will be made for the day instead of cut flowers.

A good trade in roses, carnations and snapdragons is reported by the Julia Flower Shop, East State street. This concern, located near the entrance of the Hartman theater, is quite popular with theatergoers.

The annual tulip show given by the Livingston Seed Co., 59-61 East Chestnut street, held during the week of May 1, attracted a good deal of attention.

MOTHERS' DAY PROSPECTS GOOD.

Everything points to one of the largest Mothers' Days in the history of the business. The weather shows every indication of remaining good, assuring an abundance of stock. Carnations, as usual for this day, is the favored flower, and growers will not accept orders for these except from regular carnation customers, and then the supply will fall short. Orders are being booked at prices ranging from $6 to $10 per 100; Laddie carnations, $15 per 100. A large cut of roses is expected, and the stock will be exceptionally good. Prices are from $10 to $25 per 100, wholesale. Hoosier Beauty will probably lead in the darker kinds, yet Dunlop has come into popularity very rapidly and everything points to its holding its own with the leaders in the near future. The supply of sweet peas is very limited, but the stock is exceptionally fine. Prices range from $1 to $2 per 100. Asparagus Sprengeri is scarce, but A. plumosus is ample. Calla lilies and lily of the valley are on the short side. Plant growers are expecting their share of Mothers' Day business. They are offering four and 5-inch pelargoniums at 35 to 75 cents; four and 5-inch Marguerites at 25 and 50 cents. These are of the finest quality. Other plants for which a good sale is expected are Primula obconica, geraniums, Asparagus Sprengeri, A. plumosus, holly ferns and coleus. Orders for many made-up pans of Primula obconica and plumosus are being taken.

win a touchdown last week in a contest for a silver loving cup offered by the Deseret News, Utah's leading newspaper, for the best window display answering the question, "Is Matrimony a Failure?" Practically all the leading business houses in the city entered into this contest. To use the words of one of the leading newspapers, "To say that competition was keen is putting it mildly. Stores that have had the reputation of decorating exceptional windows, and were considered favorites to win the Deseret News cup, weren't in the running. In the parlance of the sporting world, it took more than a good window to win last night—it had to be a knock-out." The suggestions carried out by some of the leading windows were to "Say It With an Automobile," "Say It With a Modern Kitchen," electric ranges, etc., but the idea to "Say It With Flowers" won the judge's vote. The picture portrayed a couple who having pioneered their way to Utah in the early days, starting life here in an old log cabin, later acquiring a new home in which they are now living. The climax of the story portrays the aged couple on their golden wedding anniversary, admiring a picture of their children when a box of flowers is received from them, with card enclosed: "With Love from Daughter and Family on your Golden Wedding Anniversary." In the foreground their newly married grandchildren have just stepped from their car to inspect their new home, a modern bungalow. A card in front of the new home states: "We will make a success of it as Dad and Mother did."

FINE PROSPECTS FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

Business has shown some improvement the past week, starting off somewhat slowly, but winding up with a rush. The supply of American Beauty roses has increased, but the call is light and the quality is of the best. The list price calls for $7.50 for specials on down to $4 per 100 for shorts. Other roses are of good quality and the supply has been top heavy, but if Friday and Saturday can be taken as a sample of what is coming for the balance of the month, the oversupply is over. Carnations are holding firm at $6 per 100 for good stock and $10 to $12 for Laddie. Of course there are quite a few that are not of good quality, and these have to be moved at much less. Some fine snapdragons are seen and move quickly at fair prices. After two weeks of a glut, both Easter and calla lilies have tightened up and are again cleaning up at a price to let the grower out with a little profit. Some fine Darwin tulips are seen and there is no trouble in moving them at $8 per 100. Sweet peas have been very poor and the most of them are not fit to send out. Yellow daisies are popular, but the quantity has been so large that prices have remained low. Lily of the valley cleans up daily at $6 and $8 per 100. A few southern peonies are coming in, but the quality so far has been poor. Mothers' Day will soon be with us and it looks like a big day with the carnation—the popular flower of the day—scarce and high in price, but with prospects of plenty of other stock at reasonable prices to take its place.

NOTES.

The Retail Florists' Association meeting Thursday evening, May 4, was poorly attended, as only seven members were present and four of them were wholesalers. It seems too bad that more retailers do not interest themselves in these meetings, as they are for the good of the trade in general, and the only way the association can be a success is by everyone pulling together, which seems to be impossible in this section.

The McCallum Co. has purchased a new delivery truck which was needed badly. This gives them four trucks, which are kept busy all the time. They have also added another man to their force in the cut flower department in the person of Jack Martin. Mr. Martin worked for them several years ago, but left on account of bad health. He is again in good health and should prove a valuable addition to the force.

Harris Bros. are enlarging their store and when alterations are completed they will have at least twice as much room as they have at present.

Business must be picking up all over the country, as the supply houses report that they are forced to work overtime to keep up with the orders.

STAMFORD, CONN.—At the monthly meeting of the Stamford Horticultural Society, May 1, good exhibits were made by the following: A. Geddes and J. Baddley, pansies; G. C. Boone, rhubarb. The summer flower show of the society will be staged June 23.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING, MAY 6.

For the May 6 meeting the Florists' Club met in new quarters, one of the rooms of the Central Young Men's Christian Association building, which was placed at the disposal of the club. Only a small number were present, however. There were two proposals for membership. A. J. Hilton, 28 Market street, Amsterdam, was elected a member. The club will hold its June meeting in the same building, and in the autumn will select a meeting place for the winter. A new meeting place was made necessary by the removal, May 1, of the Albany Cut Flower Exchange, Inc., where the club has met for some time, to 664 Broadway.

NOTES.

In a communication to Mayor William S. Hackett, T. Harvey Holmes, secretary of the Market Gardeners' Co-operative Association, submitted a set of suggestions for the improvement of the public market to go into effect this season. Mayor Hackett has not given his answer to the suggestions. The co-operative association asked for the following: Better lighting facilities, a comfort station, a news service to enable the producer and consumer to know the selling price of produce, better police protection, market hours from 7 p. m. until 1 p. m. (18 hours), market stalls to be 8x12 feet each, rent stalls from 7 p. m. to be free after 6 a. m. unless occupied by the lessee at that hour, and all producers to vacate stalls after selling out. The city administration is to determine the price of stalls and to have them assigned by lot, producers to have the right to exchange stalls with producers.

Among the changes with the retailers May 1 was the removal of the Rosery, Edward P. Tracey, proprietor, from 23 Steuben street to 70 North Pearl street, the Hotel Kenmore block. The new location is in the shopping district.

"Eberle's Tested Seeds" is the caption of a large illustrated advertisement being run in the local newspapers by F. W. Eberle, who announces that his seed annual is ready for distribution.

Gloekner's For Flowers, 97 State street, is featuring an attractive Mothers' Day advertisement, 4¼x5¼ inches, in the local newspapers.

SHARP DECLINE IN PRICES.

Business has been fairly brisk all week, the market being well supplied with nearly all kinds of stock. Roses are arriving in a flood on a declining market. Premier, Columbia, Mrs. Chas. Russell, Mrs. Aaron Ward, Sunburst, Milady, White Killarney constitute the bulk of the offerings. Carnation prices are extremely low but values are expected to improve by Mothers' Day. Indoor lily of the valley has been crowded off the market as the outdoor material is swamping it, at $1 per 100. Snapdragons, delphiniums, cornflowers, yellow daisies, German irises, peonies and stocks are plentiful and clean up. Orchids are meeting a fair call at $1.25 to $1.50 per bloom. Sweet peas are in oversupply at very low values. Callas are used in funeral work, and calendulas move readily. A brisk call is reported for southern gladioli.

NOTES.

Double larkspur is being sold by Grimm & Gorly. The firm's Mothers' Day window depicts an elderly lady dressed as a grandmother, knitting. There are several artistic cards reminding the people of the date and some gift suggestions neatly placed about the window. Last Saturday's special consisted of sweet peas and pink roses.

A record breaking Mothers' Day is expected by the St. Louis Wholesale Cut Flower Co. Trade has been very good the past week at this establishment.

The street venders seem to be doing a good business, selling roses, carnations, sweet peas, and gladioli.

The Ayres Floral Co., 315 North Grand avenue, featured a Saturday box of two dozen roses.

Business continues good at the Fred H. Weber shop and a fine Mothers' Day trade is hoped for.

PROSPECTS GOOD FOR MOTHERS' DAY.

The market opened up this week at the same prices as the previous one, but slowly gained strength, and at the close values were fairly good and stock cleaned up well. Carnations were the leader, the price doubling from mid-week to the close, May 6. The annual sale of carnations at Salem, Mass., was the principal factor in the upswing of prices. There is yearly at this time 40,000 to 50,000 pinks taken out of the local market for this sale, which shortens the carnations considerably, at the same time bringing prices of other stock up. Business in general is rather quiet, prices being so low at times as to hardly pay for sending the stock in. Lily of the valley and orchids are the only flowers which have not felt the depression of the past few weeks the prices being as good as they were at Easter. Indications are that business will open with a good show of strength next week. Mother's Day, coming May 14, will probably hold prices up during the whole week.

BUSINESS UNSATISFACTORY.

From the standpoint of business, the past week has been anything but satisfactory. Shipments have been greatly in excess of the call and one day's stock piled on that of the day before, until finally the ice boxes were jammed to the doors. Every effort was made to move the surplus but price reductions meant nothing, as nobody seemed to want the flowers or plants at any price. There was a little activity early in the morning, but after that nothing. Some dealers say it was the worst week of the season, but there has been so many in this class that it is a question. The stock has been quite up to the standard for the season with quantities of fine roses, carnations, sweet peas, snapdragons, white and yellow daisies, Darwin tulips, southern gladioli, Easter and calla lilies, other smaller items and wagon-loads of outside lilac. In all the wholesale houses the display tables were filled with stock of various kinds invitingly shown and offered at prices in quantity that ordinarily would tempt buyers to take a chance, but to which the retailers turned deaf ears, saying there was nothing doing in the stores. Friday and Saturday things picked up a bit and on Saturday particularly, with lighter shipments and job lots to the street men, the market cleaned up fairly well.

May 8.—The trade generally has taken hold of the Mothers' Day advertising as if to give it a fair trial, something over $1,200 being in hand today, and it was thought the sum would total $2,000 by Thursday. Of this $1,000 was to be spent in advertising the American Legion's card and the balance is to be used for simply worded ads, with plenty of white space calling attention to the day and the use of flowers in its observance. Gold star war mothers are also to be remembered with plants, each

Three thousand American Legion posters have been distributed, and these with the advertising and press notices which have been arranged for, will furnish data for future campaigns that are almost sure to follow. The market opened with large shipments, but demand was very light. The weather is cool but bright, and all indications are for large crops of flowers.

MOTHERS' DAY.

That Mothers' Day is coming was quite apparent in the price of white carnations. On Saturday for good high grade flowers $10 was asked, while ordinary stock was going slow at from $4 to $6. One dealer said it was astonishing what a lot of white carnations were wanted for early Sunday and Monday morning work, while on the other hand, one grower whose daily shipments averaged four boxes of carnations a day sent but one, saying the cool nights was holding them back. Another dealer said good fresh Matchless would, with the proper facilities, easily keep for a week and he believed some growers took chances on 14 days. It is estimated that there will be about the same quantity of carnations as last year, with the whites bringing $10 to $12, while a few fancy may reach $15. As the day bids fair to be more generally observed there is likely to be an increased demand with slightly higher prices for all stocks. Very little has apparently been done to further the sale of plants, in fact outside of bedding stock, there is little in flowerers save calceolarias, baby rambler roses and a few left over hydrangeas. For the first time since the day has been celebrated the craft of this city is taking a hand in its publicity. In answer to the circular letter of the national publicity committee which was read and discussed at the last meeting of the Florists' Club, Edward Reid was appointed chairman of a committee consisting of A. A. Niessen, James Heacock, Mark Mills, W. K. Harris, Ralph Faust, Charles H. Grakelow, Charles Henry Fox, with Robert Kift secretary. A meeting was held at Mr. Fox's store May 5, when about $500 was in hand almost without solicitation. It was proposed to raise $2,000 to be spent entirely in running the Mothers' Day advertisement of the American Legion. Several novel publicity methods of fea-

CANDY MEN WAKE UP.

The Confectioners' Association of this city has started an effective campaign to turn Mothers' Day to account in the sale of candy. Pound and larger boxes are seen decorated with two white carnations on a green background. There is also printed on the box a tribute to mother. A well gotten up poster reads, "Do not forget Mother on Mothers' Day." In the center of the poster is a good sized figure of an elderly lady seated in a large cane chair at a table with a vase of flowers and an open box of candy in her lap. Beneath in quite large letters are the words, "Send her a box of candy." The whole poster, 10x24 inches, is well printed and is seen in all shops where candy is sold. This publicity will certainly help to popularize the day and is not likely to interfere with the sale of flowers.

BAYERSDORFER IN NEW YORK.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have opened a new florists' supply house at 146 West Eighteenth street, New York, in the heart of the wholesale cut flower district. The constantly growing business of this house in the metropolis has necessitated the opening of a branch store that will be first class in every way and capable of catering to and supplying the most exclusive trade. The store opened for business May 8.

NOTES.

The republication in last week's issue, page 780, of the account of the first celebration of Mothers' Day copied from our news letter in the May 16, 1908, issue of THE AMERICAN FLORIST, was read with much interest. It was period, in order to combat the cries of profiteering that have by designing persons become connected with Mothers' Day.

The baseball situation of the wholesale cut flower houses is daily receiving more attention. It is reported the S. S. Pennock Co. team will make its first appearance in uniforms, which the Mole street team declare will have no terrors for them. The opening games of this Florists' League will be watched with interest.

The Leo Niessen Co. hopes to have its usual large stock of flowers for Mothers' Day. From advance orders they are assured of a strong demand and hope the weather will bring along a record supply. Mrs. Chas. Russell roses, gladioli, yellow daisies and fine snapdragons are this week's features.

Edw. Reid is much pleased with the way the financial support is coming to back up his committee in the Mothers' Day advertising campaign. He thinks this will put all flowers, not just carnations, in the running and greatly widen the demand.

S. S. Pennock gave a dinner to his office staff and employees May 1 in the large second floor show room. This was followed by his illustrated lecture of the work of the Friends' Relief Association in Germany, in which he took such a prominent part.

William Dunning or "Billy," as the boys call him, has opened a flower shop in his own name on Columbia avenue at Carlisle street. William is an old hand at the business and ought to make it a go. His many friends wish him every success.

Miss Margaret Fare has purchased the business of the Durant Flower Shop, 1410 Susquehanna avenue. This business was conducted successfully by Anna E. Biester for a number of years, but has changed hands twice recently.

The Jos. Heacock Co. has discontinued Dunlop and Crusader roses, which are being replaced with Double White Killarney and Pilgrim. There is prospect of a very good supply of roses for next week.

Jos. G. Niedenger is expected back from his quick trip to Europe in time for Mothers' Day and to direct his immense Memorial Day business. His ship is due in New York May 12.

John Berger reports the past week as a struggle, but they managed to wind up in pretty good shape. Mr. Berger expects a record Mothers' Day business and a fine supply of stock.

Samuel Sproul has opened store No. 4 at 63rd and Race streets. He feels sure these will all be permanent and become quite a factor in the retail business.

The Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market is handling a full stock of roses and carnations. Outdoor lily of the valley is also a feature.

There was an immediate call for the American Legion poster, all florists being anxious to get it for display in their windows at once. K.

SUSANVILLE, CALIF.—Fuller & Mason are increasing their glass area and installing a pumping plant.

GRIDLEY, CALIF.—The Silva & Bergtholdt Co., Newcastle, Calif., has purchased 160 acres of land near here.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IA.—J. P. Duffy formally opened his redecorated establishment April 29, giving away over 5,000 roses.

VERY POOR TRADE REPORTED.

Business was extremely slow during the past week. An out and out optimist, such a one for instance who believes he can buy something from a Jew and sell it to a Scotchman at a profit, might argue from precedents that the dullness of the past week was a logical precursor to a great Mothers' Day trade. We will acknowledge that there are some grounds for hopefulness. In this market business has always been quiet for about two weeks before the Christmas or Easter trade began. In past years the retail trade in this city for Mothers' Day has been light, particularly so in what are generally spoken of as the leading shops. From the fact that many of the patrons of such stores have already sailed for Europe or other points there is little reason to believe there will be much improvement over former years. If there is to be good business for the day in the retail line it must come from the great body of plain people, that in the final analysis, are depended to act the part of good citizenship, and it has been noted that the retailers in the plain residential sections are the most hopeful. The wholesalers, like Mr. Micawber, we believe it was, "are waiting for something to turn up." In some quarters great expectations are based on large orders from other cities and towns. It remains to be seen to what extent the expectations will be realized. Reports from various sections indicate that the whole country is fairly well supplied with flowers, and only a heavy demand can bring about a cleanup. This is based on the presumption that there will be a good demand for all flowers and not for carnations alone. It is unnecessary to go into a detailed account of the wholesale transactions of the past week, enough to state that compared with the past few months there was no life in the market and all kinds of low prices. The number of growers and dealers in American Beauty roses is smaller than in any other greenhouse product, and even that rose became a drug. While there was necessarily a greater call for tea roses, they too kept piling up and fading away. Carnations, sweet peas, gardenias, yellow daisies, calendulas and snapdragons were all most plentiful and cheap. Lilacs seemed to sell about as well as anything. Cool and dark weather has given the bulbous stock a long lease of life, tulips and narcissi being yet noted.

May 8.—The arrivals are light this morning, but with clear weather there is likely to be a continued heavy supply throughout the week. May 10.—The best carnations are bringing $12 per 100, common grades at $8 to $10 per 100, with Laddie selling at $12 to $15.

THE annual convention of the Southern Seedsmen's Association will be held at the St. Charles hotel, New Orleans, La., May 29-31, and an excellent programme has been prepared for the occasion. Mayor McShane will welcome the visitors to the city, at the opening session, Monday morning at 10 o'clock. D. R. Mayo, of Knoxville, Tenn., responding. President Jos. Steckler, of the convention city, will read the president's address followed by the report of the secretary-treasurer. H. W. Newman, president of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, will tell of "New Orleans and the Mississippi Valley." At the afternoon session the visitors will be the guests of the city on a boat trip on the Mississippi river. Announcement will be made at each morning session of the several forms of entertainment in the city.

THE Tuesday morning, May 30 session, commencing at 9:30 o'clock, will be taken up by the presentation of many instructive papers, including: "Resources of Louisiana and the Value of Good Seed from the Farmer's Standpoint," by Hon. Harry D. Wilson, commissioner of agriculture; "Relation of the Seed Laboratory to the Seedsmen," by J. L. Burgess, of the state department of agriculture, North Carolina; "The Essentials in Building a Mail Order Seed Business," by H. G. Hastings, Atlanta, Ga., and "Advertising," by Fred I. Meyer, New Orleans.

AFTER adjournment at noon the members will be taken by automobiles, leaving the St. Charles hotel at 12:30 p. m., to the Southern Yacht Club, on Lake Ponchartrain, where luncheon will be served at 1:30 o'clock. A very enjoyable trip through the French quarter of New Orleans has been arranged for the ladies the same day, at 9:30 a. m., a competent guide being provided for the occasion.

THE afternoon session will consist of a general discussion of the seed business, election of new members and committee reports. The concluding feature, Tuesday, will be a banquet at the famous Louisiane restaurant, at 8 p. m.

The final session will be held Wednesday morning, at 9:30 o'clock, and will be an executive session, when the election of officers for the coming year will take place. After a discussion of general association business, the convention will adjourn at 12:30 p. m.

The officers urge the attendance of all the members as they feel sure that certain matters to be discussed are of great importance, not only to individuals but the trade as a whole. Secretary-Treasurer F. S. Love, P. O. Box 27, Montgomery, Ala., has sent post cards to the membership, which, if filled out and returned to him at an early date, will enable the local committee at New Orleans to make arrangements to entertain the delegates and have badges properly printed for them.

Grass Seeds.

During the week ending April 22, timothy was 10 cents lower in several markets and about 10 cents higher in one or two other markets. The price trend in general was downward because the big demand for this seed has been satisfied. Redtop and orchard grass seed prices were mostly unchanged, but Kentucky bluegrass and Canada bluegrass were higher. Mostly all dealers are sold out of 21-pound Kentucky bluegrass seed and stocks of light-weight seed are nearly exhausted. The carryover of this seed probably will be the smallest on record, and growers already are reported to be showing some disposition to take advantage of this situation by forming pools for the purpose of selling their prospective 1922 crop. During the week about 48,000 pounds of grass seed (kind not specified) was exported from New York to Russia.

Corn Acreage Reduction.

"It would seem that a policy of sharp reduction of South Dakota corn acreage would be of doubtful advantage to the farmer this year," says M. R. Benedict, in charge of agricultural cost production and price investigational work in South Dakota. As a basis for this opinion, Mr. Benedict, quotes the following facts and figures: "The corn carry-over on farms March 1, 1922, is estimated by the United States department of agriculture at 1,300,000,000 bushels, compared to a surplus March 1, 1921, of 1,600,000,000 bushels. The average carry-over from 1907 to 1916, inclusive, was 1,000,404,000 bushels. Thus the country has on hand this year about 30 per cent above the prewar normal carry-over, but 300,000,000 bushels less than last year's surplus. The 10-year average production is 2,799,000,000 bushels, which added to the present carry-over and counting a normal surplus next spring would amount to about 3,099,000 bushels for use during the year, whereas we apparently used and sold last year 3,380,000,000 bushels. Whether we raise a normal crop or not this year, is of course, anybody's guess. But the fact that our crop has averaged 10 per cent above the 10-year average for the last four years would indicate quite a possibility of lower yields in the next year or two. The fact that South Dakota acre corn yields vary less than those of the United States, should cause us to profit in case of a low acreage yield for the United States. Suggestion for acreage reductions in corn should be for those sections and farms where costs per bushel are exceptionally high as a rule."

American Association of Nurserymen.

M. R. Cashman, Owatonna, Minn., President; Paul C. Lindley, Pomona, N. C., Vice President; Charles Sizemore, Louisiana, Mo., Secretary; J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Iowa, Treasurer.

The forty-seventh annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June 28-30, 1922.

VISITED CHICAGO: Otto Speidel, City Forester, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE BROWN BROS. Co., Rochester, N. Y., report a very heavy season, with business still good.

FORSYTHIAS have made an excellent showing by their prolonged season of bloom in many places this spring.

LAKE FOREST, ILL.—William Barnard, landscape gardener here, has been chosen as juror in Governor Small's trial.

CAIRO, ILL.—One hundred acres of land surrounding old Fort Masaac on the Ohio river, near this city, was purchased by the state of Illinois, April 27, for use as a state park.

Nursery Business Satisfactory.

The Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, O., writes May 8: "Demand for nursery stock, both fruit and ornamental, again equal to supply. It has been a cleanup of all desirable stock in small fruit plants, shrubbery, roses and fruit trees, any over-supply lay in climbing roses, climbing vines and small evergreens. We can see no reason why anyone supplied with the right items, should not have enjoyed a satisfactory spring season, and with the resumption of home building, we anticipate an increased demand for landscape material for fall."

Quarantine No. 37.

JACKSON & PERKINS' VIEW.

So many have asked for our views on Quarantine No. 37, and, in the trade there has been so much said pro and con on the subject, we have decided to write this letter in order that our position may be entirely clear. We are in favor of Quarantine No. 37:

First—Because it is a protective measure, and prevents the further introduction of dangerous insects, pests and diseases, harmful to horticulture, agriculture and forestry.

Second—Because it has made the nursery and florist businesses in America distinctive American industries. This would not have been possible without the quarantine for, with their cheap labor, Europeans can deliver nursery stock in this country at very much less than the cost of production here. Practically all lines, formerly imported, are now being produced in the United States in sufficient quantity to supply the needs of the trade, or such stocks are in the process of development. It has given the horticulturist in this country a stimulus and incentive to produce. With it he has also reasonable assurance there will be a market for his product at a price which will give him fair remuneration for his investment.

There will be a Hearing on Quarantine No. 37, in Washington, D. C., May 15, next, the results of which vitally affect you and the future of your business. Should the quarantine be rescinded and federal control abolished, we fear there is grave danger that each state will eventually establish its own quarantines, which, without doubt, would greatly restrict interstate business.

We are informed that the Federal Horticultural Board is working for a uniform inspection law, the intent of which is to make uniform the inspection of interstate shipments throughout the country. Without the protection of Quarantine No. 37 against the introduction from abroad of diseases, pests, etc., the various states would probably not concur in such arrangement.

We have confidence in the Federal Horticultural Board. It is working for real American interests. If you agree with our position, it is important that you make your views known. You should also attend the hearing at Washington, May 15, and get your opinion on record. If it is impossible for you to be there, do not neglect to write or telegraph the Secretary of Agriculture, H. A. Wallace, Washington, D. C., expressing your desire that Quarantine No. 37 be kept in force. Give this your quick attention, as immediate action is necessary.

JACKSON & PERKINS Co.

Nursery and Fruit Growing Industry.

Prof. H. V. Gould, pomologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, who appeared before the interstate commerce commission, Washington, D. C., relative to the recent hearing on nursery freight rates, recorded in our issue of March 11, page 322, presented some very interesting data about the nursery and fruit growing industry taken from the fourteenth (1920) census, as follows:

"I desire to call your attention to the fact that the nurserymen's business is not an end in itself. It is merely a beginning. He produces what may be correctly termed raw material. The consummation of the nurseryman's business, the finished product, is the fruit that was on the breakfast table this morning, or that which goes into the apple pie awaiting consumption at dinner time tonight; or it may be the ornamental trees and shrubs which adorn the street or the park you most admire; and it is because of the beauty of that adornment that you admire it.

"Very briefly I want to indicate the vastness of the fruit industry which is dependent on the nurseries for its normal expansion and for its perpetuation. The figures of the fourteenth census and certain crop estimate figures are a means to this end. Of the deciduous fruits—apples, peaches, pears and plums and prunes, there were on January 1, 1920, about 216,000,000 trees in bearing and about 73,000,000 trees not of bearing age. Of the citrus fruits—oranges, grapefruit, and lemons, there were more than 17,000,000 trees of bearing age, January 1, 1920, and nearly 7,000,000 not of bearing age.

Of our two leading deciduous fruits—apples and peaches—the fourteenth census showed a decrease of about 36,000,000 bearing apple trees during the decade of 1909-1919; and nearly 30,000,000 in the number of trees not of bearing age; a decrease of about 29,000,000 peach trees of bearing age and more than 20,000,000 in peach trees not of bearing age, as compared with the corresponding figures of the thirteenth census.

"I hasten to say, however, that these very material decreases in both bearing and non-bearing apple and peach trees may not have as much significance as might appear from a purely statistical standpoint. For instance the decrease of a few millions of trees in home orchards, farm orchards, and other places where they are not cared for, has no very material effect on actual crop production; and it is assumed that a very considerable part of the large reduction in the number of bearing apple and peach trees during the census decade consists of such trees; including also the going out of many thousands of trees in commercially but unwisely planted orchards.

"When we attempt to show the magnitude of the fruit industry large numbers must be used. For instance, as nearly as I can estimate it the fruit crop is annually worth to the farmers of the country a half billion dollars. Something like 5,000,000 acres or nearly 8,000 square miles of land are devoted to fruits in bearing. This does not include the fruit trees not of bearing age. The crop requires something like 400,000 to 500,000 cars to move it to market.

"A crop of 26,000,000 barrels of apples (the estimate approximate average annual commercial apple crop, not the total farm crop, for the past five years) if actually packed in barrels and the barrels placed end to end would extend for a distance of more than 10,000 miles. To expand the industry, to maintain it even at a parity, the nurseryman is an essential factor; and if he plays the game fairly, as of course he does, whatever concerns the nursery industry is thereby a concern to the fruit industry.

"This is illustrated in part by the large decrease in the number of apple and peach trees not of bearing age reported in the fourteenth, as compared with the thirteenth census. The nursery business was affected by war conditions as was every other business. Material, labor, everything was high and the prices of nursery stock have been correspondingly high. Then, too, they had frosts and freezes over in France where the most of the seeds are grown from which the French and the American nurserymen as well, grows seedling apple stocks used in propagation; they also had frosts and freezes in the mountains of western North Carolina and adjacent regions where most of the peach pits come from that that are used by nurserymen in growing peach seedlings used in propagation. As a result of killing frosts in France and in North Carolina for several seasons the nurserymen have had short supplies of very essential materials. This has had its influence on the price of apple and peach trees. The prices have been more than many prospective or would-be planters could or would pay.

"In the present connection the trees not of bearing age are of particular interest. For instance, as nearly as I can estimate, there are planted annually: Apple trees, 5,000,000 to 8,000,000; peach, 5,400,000 to 10,000,000; pear, 1,000,000; plum and pears, 1,800,000; citrus trees, 1,800,000; grape vines, 8,000,000. Here are an estimated 15,000,000 to 22,600,000 trees and perhaps 8,000,000 grape vines planted annually not to mention the lesser fruits and nuts such as cherries, figs, apricots, walnuts, almonds, pecans, and others and all the tens of thousands of berry plants that are handled each year.

"The point I would make is that the nursery is the fountain source of all this stream of 15 to 20 or 25 millions of fruit trees and unnumbered other fruit-producing plants. The fruit grower rarely produces trees for his own planting, but depends almost entirely on the nurseryman for them. Without the nurseryman's products the fruit-grower stops planting. All these factors are inter-related and suggest how the nurseryman's interests are likewise fruit grower's interests."

DEMAND is active for fancy canned peas for immediate shipment. Wisconsin pea canners state that planting of peas is at least three weeks late and that this means that fancy grades will be scarce and higher and lower or standard grades abundant and cheap.

"BETTER Methods of Tomato Production," is the title of Bulletin 194, recently issued by the Missouri Agricultural Experiment station, Columbia. The bulletin has many fine illustrations and treats of the subject both from the cannery grower's and home gardener's viewpoint.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, May 9.—Cucumbers, per crate, $2 to $3.50; lettuce, per crate, $2 to $3; carrots, $4 to $5 per barrel; cabbage, $2.25 to $2.75 per crate; cauliflower, per crate, $1.50 to $3.

New York, May 5.—Cucumbers, $1.25 per dozen; radishes, per bunch, three to four cents; tomatoes, per pound, 35 cents; lettuce, per barrel, $4 to $4.50; mushrooms, $1 to $1.25 per three-pound basket; cauliflower, $1.50 to $3.50 per dozen.

Vegetable Movement.

WEEK OF MAY 1-6.

Receipts of all vegetables were heavier with lower prices. Old potatoes continue to arrive in the consuming markets in large quantities and shipments of strawberries are heavier than a year ago at this time, values declining one-third to one-half over the previous week. General declines throughout the country were noted on sweet potatoes, tomatoes and asparagus. Spinach, cucumbers, cauliflowers and onions, however, remained firm in price.

Lettuce Mildew.

An illustrated bulletin (No. 196) recently issued by the Agricultural Experiment station, Iowa State college, Ames, entitled "Controlling the Downy Mildew of Lettuce," is by Prof. A. T. Erwin, well known to the trade. The bulletin is summarized as follows:

1. Lettuce, the most important vegetable forcing crop grown in Iowa, is in some seasons seriously damaged by a disease known as downy mildew.

2. Continued periods of cloudy weather, which often prevail during the forcing season in this section, are highly conducive to the growth and development of the mildew.

3. Wild lettuce plants often afford a breeding ground for the disease. They are, therefore, likely to prove a source of infection and should be destroyed in the vicinity of forcing houses.

4. This downy mildew is primarily a seedling disease. Control measures, to be effective, must be focused upon the seedling stage of the plant.

5. Bordeaux mixture of the standard formula, 4-4-50, is recommended for its control. The first application should be made as soon as the plants are up; a second application should be made a day or two before they are "pricked off." In some instances a third spraying before the plants go into permanent beds may prove advantageous.

6. Proper ventilation and a dry foliage in periods of dark, cloudy weather are important in preventing the growth and spread of the disease. These operations must be co-ordinated with the control measures indicated above.

Montclair, N. J.

F. W. Massmann, Inc., has a strictly up-to-date retail store with a conservatory attached. Mr. Massmann and wife recently sailed for Europe, where they will stay for several months, and the shop is now being conducted by their son, W. H. Massmann, an active and energetic young man. The firm has issued a Mothers' Day card, in part as follows: "Special Mothers' Day baskets and boxes of choicest cut flowers. Mother's favorite ornamental or blooming plant. Boutonnieres for Mothers' Day wear." That seems to us to be the proper way to encourage buying for the occasion.

This city, according to population, is reputed to be one of the wealthiest in the United States. When one views its public buildings, many fine homes and business enterprises there are sound reasons for such a belief. Many wealthy men who do business in New York have homes here. It may, therefore, be supposed that its florists are prosperous and such seems to be the case.

A. S. Wallace is a veteran florist and nurseryman, being about 70 years old, but his friends say that he does not look more than 50. He produces a variety of stock, has a supply department and a good retail business.

The Rosery, Miss Rose, proprietor, has a considerable glass area, grows numerous kinds of plants, and does a good retail business. A. F. F.

Nashville, Tenn.

STOCK CONTINUES IN GOOD DEMAND.

Trade continues good and prices rule at about the same levels, roses and carnations being quoted at $3 per dozen, retail. Plants sales are becoming an increasing factor, the stock being held back somewhat because of the rainy weather. Hydrangeas, in pots, move well, as do dormant roses. A considerable demand has developed for birch boxes and hanging baskets.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

In order to give their employees a little time to themselves the following notice has been inserted in the daily newspapers: "We, the undersigned, florists and nurserymen, agree to close our greenhouses and nurseries every Sunday, beginning April 30. Signed, Joy Floral Co., Geny Bros., C. H. Trichter, McIntyre Bros., L. Haury & Sons, Chas. O. Green, Ernest Sawyer, Campbell Bros., and J. F. Corbitt." The Sunday closing applies only to greenhouses and nurseries, as it is not possible nor desirable to close the stores all day, which keep open until 1 p. m. The habit of local automobilists driving out to the greenhouses has grown to such an extent that it was quite a tax on the employees and, since relief was necessary, the ruling was put in force.

NOTES.

The ladies comprising the City Beautiful organization recently staged an iris show, consisting of all the newest and finest kinds.

A department store that recently added flowers to its stock is selling roses at $1 per dozen.

Miss Lillian Joy has returned from a visit to Atlanta, Ga., where she attended the opera. M. C. D.

Plant Quarantine Conference.

Washington, D. C., May 15-16.

Serious Problems Ably Discussed.

The hearing of the Federal Horticultural Board, held in the auditorium of the National museum, Washington, D. C., May 15, was undoubtedly the largest of all the conferences held in connection with Plant Quarantine No. 37, embracing as it did the leading craftsmen of the country, and special delegates from England, Belgium and Holland, who were present to ask that the quarantine be so modified that the plants and bulbs of their different countries may be given entry. The auditorium of the Museum building, in which the meeting was held, was admirably adapted to the purposes of the assemblage. The rear of the platform was decorated with a number of charts or maps of the states to show with colored markings the quantities of the various plants imported under permits last year, peonies, rhododendrons, gladioli, spireas, irises, dahlias and orchids, as cited and described by Prof. Beattie at the evening session, gave very interesting information. The meeting was called for 10 a. m., standard time, when there were over 250 present at the opening, a splendidly representative gathering of the trade. On the platform were seated all the members of the Federal Horticultural Board, Hon. Henry W. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, and a committee of three judges consisting of Prof. Whitten, horticulturist of the University of California; Prof. A. F. Woods, of the University of Maryland, and President M. R. Cashman, of the American Association of Nurserymen, which Secretary Wallace had appointed to make a separate report of the meeting.

Secretary Wallace opened the meeting by saying that ever since he had come to Washington he had heard again and again of Plant Quarantine

No. 37 and this gathering at which he was asked to preside had been called to give every interested person a chance to be heard. In order to conserve time, leaders of groups, such as nurserymen, florists, importers, horticulture bodies, garden officials, etc., would be first heard through their various spokesmen.

Dr. C. L. Marlatt as chief of the board, was asked to give reasons for the call of the meeting, which he did, reviewing the transactions of the board, referring frequently to a pamphlet which described the proposed work of the conference in detail. The board and the quarantine were up for discussion and criticism, which he welcomed, and hoped some of it would be of a constructive character. He assured his hearers that all would receive courteous treatment from the board in the future no matter what their criticism was. Describing the large list of dangerous pests with which the country is afflicted, he said that Plant Quarantine No. 37 was absolutely necessary, but that if in the discussion by the many interests involved it could be changed in any way to advantage this is the time to do it and arrange for several years ahead. He declared no important insect pests or diseases have come into the country since the quarantine was put in force. He hoped that through special permits new and scarce varieties of plants could be brought in and propagated in such numbers as to be sufficient for our needs without further importations. The various requests for permits for importations were passed on by the Bureau of Plant Industry, the Federal Horticultural Board having no jurisdiction in this matter. The secretary of agriculture had in his department the largest group of capable plant specialists in the world and all who applied would be assured impartial treatment. Amateur importers were shown to be divided into two classes, those who made a semi-public display of their plants and flowers and others whose use was purely personal, the first being favored. New varieties of plants which show merit are now admitted where before they had to have a show or newspaper record. Owing to underhand methods of some dishonest importers a bond had to be imposed so that importers could be held responsible. The name horticultural board did not imply a strict board of horticulture, 90 per cent of its work covering subjects other than horticulture. A better name would be Plant Quarantine Board. The different groups of horticulture should appoint various committees to represent them before the board and in this way much of the trouble and misunderstanding now existing would be eliminated.

Secretary Wallace in answer to a question as to the length of the conference by S. A. Anderson, said it rested with those in attendance.

J. C. Vaughan asked whether questions of protests filed would be taken up by the board. The secretary assured the audience he would continue to preside so as to hear all angles presented, which was loudly applauded.

The question of the legality of the action of the board in some of its rulings then came up, J. Horace McFarland claiming the board is without this authority to be found anywhere in the act passed by congress, and F. R. Pierson said the board's rulings were away beyond the letter and spirit of the law. How does Dr. Marlatt find his authority?

In answer, Dr. Marlatt said in sections two and seven of the law as passed on by the legal force of the department, all such points were determined by counsel.

Mr. McFarland asked whether he could have assurance that this legal matter will be discussed before a committee and Secretary Wallace said it would be provided for.

The secretary then suggested adjournment and renewal of the discussion in the afternoon.

Monday Afternoon Session.

On the opening of the Monday afternoon session J. Horace McFarland, as a representative of over 40 garden clubs and other amateur plant and horticultural organizations, made a special plea in their interest. He wanted it distinctly understood that all were heartily in accord with the efforts of the board in keeping out all kinds of injurious pests and diseases, but in other rulings especially relating to minor regulations, the arbitrary prohibition of certain plants and selection of those which may or may not be imported, the board was not in accord with Quarantine No. 37, which in no way gives it the power to discriminate against the little man with a 10-foot yard as against the owner of 100 acres. The small amateurs import plants that are of great value, Mr. McFarland continued, but which it does not pay the commercial grower to handle in that way. Such imports have been going on for 150 years without injury to anyone. He added that if his ancestors had been properly inspected he would likely not have been here. Mr. McFarland read excerpts from letters of prominent amateur societies asking relief from the rulings of the board against them. Less red tape in inspection and additional ports of entry were desired. The bond required by the board was onerous and not a word could be found in the act to authorize it. He told of the Missouri

Botanic garden having imported plants for over 100 years without injurious results and said that E. H. Wilson of the Arnold arboretum had imported more than 500 new species from China and never brought any pests. Acorns that had been treated by the department had all died, while others of the same lot which had been smuggled into the country, lived. Mr. McFarland believed that if the garden clubs of America were not able to obtain the plants they desired from other countries the interest in them would eventually die out. It was a fact that the cities with the most gardens required the least policing. High tariff and prohibition means isolation and the speaker hoped that in the matters of immigration and business intercourse the time would never come when the people of America felt they could get along without the rest of the world and that that prediction would never come to pass.

James McHutchison, chairman of the committee on tariff and legislation of the Society of American Florists, presented the views of over 10,000 men in the florist business in a carefully prepared statement that particularly desired that the florist business be handled entirely separate from that of the nurserymen and earnestly urged modifications of the board's rulings.

Orlando Harrison, chairman of the committee on tariff and legislation of the American Association of Nurserymen, approved Sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 of Regulation No. 3 of Quarantine No. 37 as now in force, except that Norway and Schwedleri maples and four to eight-foot whips for transplanting and not for sale be admitted for a period of three years.

Prof. Jones spoke of rose stocks claiming that outdoor stocks were different from those used for greenhouse culture, certain kinds doing best in parts of the country where the climate was more suitable. Florida had greatly benefited from the quarantine. At great expense the state had rid itself of the citrus canker, about 235,000 orchard trees being burned to bring it about. Prof. Jones said he did not favor giving privileges to amateurs to import stock, as they had nothing at stake, while larger interests should be protected.

F. L. Atkins said there were now more roses in the country than required or the demand called for and that thousands of unsold plants were rotting in the cellars of some of the growers.

E. G. Hill gave his experiences with manetti stocks, which he claimed were the only kind fit for the grafting of greenhouse roses. Gloriosa did not meet the requirements of the trade, while multiflora drooped in the winter months. His firm had used more than 600,000 manetti stocks this season. Mr. Hill was pleased to learn that other stocks were found reliable for outdoor roses and he declared that the quarantine had accomplished wonders for the florists, causing them to look around and grow more of their own stock. There had never been so much prosperity in the trade as was the case the past five years and he felt sure that the western florists were all favorable to Quarantine No. 37.

R. F. Elliott approved of the quarantine in principle, but desired the privilege of importing certain stocks not available in the United States.

A representative of the California state department of horticulture stated that all horticultural interests there were heartily in favor of the quarantine. The legislature, recognizing the efficiency of the state department in handling plant diseases, doubled the appropriation last year for quarantine regulations, which are now the strictest of any state in the union and has greatly benefited all fruit and bulb growers.

W. A. Sperling wanted the board to grant entry to foreign bulbs not available here.

A. H. Gardner, representing the Alabama state board of horticulture, described citrus fruit growing as an important and growing industry in that state, wherein 435 growers with an investment of over $6,000,000 were interested.

The Mississippi state horticultural board telegraphed its endorsement of the quarantine.

The Texas state department of agriculture was also in favor of the act and desired all the protection possible, hoping that the quarantine would continue in force.

Albert Ball, representing the National Spring Wheat Association, wanted to know who opened Pandora's box and let out the numerous insects and diseases the wheat men had to contend with. He said the progeny of one aphid in a season amounted to 222 septillions and all the rest of the figures down the line to 13. He claimed that a New England woman had brought a barberry bush with her when she came to the western part of the country and this had eventually brought rust to 20,000,000 acres of wheat.

Prof. J. G. Sanders, representing the Pennsylvania state board of plant industry, believed that the enforcement of the quarantine would not isolate the states, while on the contrary, but for the act and its safeguarding features, each state would at once set up a barrier against adjacent commonwealths.

Thos. A. McBeth spoke for growers of young rose stocks representing over 1,000,000 square feet of glass, and in answer to a previous speaker, he said that no one in his neighborhood had any roses for sale, in spite of a production of 9,250,000 plants. Bulbs and peonies could be grown in his district as good if not better than the imported stock.

J. C. Vaughan believed that the great and ever increasing body of people were the ones who desired the privilege of having what they desired. Not a new insect had been discovered in five years.

SOME PROMINENT MEN AT THE PLANT QUARANTINE CONFERENCE.

He wished to know where bleeding hearts, gloxinias or the fancy leaved caladiums, the most beautiful of greenhouse plants, could be procured in this country. Fine conservatories desired these plants. There was discrimination, he continued, in the permits that were being issued, one person being allowed to import large quantities while others were put off with small lots. Permits had been taken abroad and bulbs brought in by the bushel, which information he had received by word of mouth. He wanted to know how investigators could go to California and inspect stock. Spireas were allowed to be imported in quantity while other stock was cut down to the minimum.

Albert C. Burrage made one of the most logical and forceful presentations in favor of the amateur that was heard at the conference. The board in calling the conference had asked for criticism, but he had been listening to the remarks of those who set up men of straw. No one had asked for the weakening of the law, the idea of the conference being to perfect the quarantine. He had more respect for the law than for the board itself. As the spokesman for the many thousands of members of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, of which he is president. Mr. Burrage believed that the acts of the board showed them to be arbitrary. There was nothing in the quarantine that permitted the board to allow the entry of 1,000 plants by one and 100 by another. He was opposed to suggestions about doing away with Quarantine No. 37 entirely. He was for and agreed to its provisions, but he challenged the board as being against the spirit and letter of the act in its present regulations. He had suffered personally from all the various pests, a large part wholly uncalled for. Mr. Burrage desired to know that if the body before which the hearing was being held was a horticultural board why should it discriminate against such institutions as the Arnold arboretum and the Missouri Botanic garden. Why should practical amateurs be prevented from importing and what was the necessity for prohibitions? He wished to know by what right the board had set up restrictions that amounted to a tariff and believed these conditions should be investigated. Mr. Burrage admitted that the board had helped him personally, having permitted him to bring a large orchid (millionia) from Belgium which cost $600, as well as a lot of 1,000 orchids from Manila, P. I., which were frozen when received, being no fault of the board, however, as they should have come over earlier. He emphasized the need of more ports of entry and liberty to import through the mails and formally asked that the discrimination against amateurs be abolished.

Mrs. Crowninshield, representing the Garden Club of America, desired slight modifications in the board's ruling on bulbs and additional ports of entry.

Mr. McFarland, against speaking for the amateurs, stated that only 10 states had endorsed the quarantine, all of which had self interests, and these endorsements had no relation to the needs of amateurs.

Joseph Manda, spokesman for the orchid industry, said it was greatly opposed to be subject to a bond in order to be able to import, putting the growers in a class with criminals. He also disapproved of the report of the board on the orchid hearing last year, when one-half the growers were reported as in favor of the quarantine, whereas the vote was 20 to 2 against the act. In concluding Mr. Manda asked for the privilege of importing species.

The foreign representatives were then heard, the first being Hon. W. G. Lobjoit, controller of horticulture in England. He said that pests for which Quarantine No. 37 was operating were known before the act went into effect in 1912 and America had the honor of presenting this law. There was an open door on inspection until 1918 when a change of policy amounting practically to exclusion was made, as in the case of allowing no plants with soil attached to the roots to come in. At the request of the United States government, England gave certificates of freedom from dangerous pests, but later the requirements called for freedom from all insects, dangerous or otherwise. Mr. Lobjoit said there were three classes of insects, first, those natural to Great Britain; second, a small number not found in the United States and third, a class distributed by shipping. His country guaranteed the value of its certificates, British entomological authorities being second to none in the world. Their nurserymen asked for voluntary service throughout the country. Great Britain, he said, produced six tons of potatoes to the acre against three in the United States. America has given Great Britain the rhododendron fly, while there were no gipsy moths in the latter country and the brown tail moth has a precarious existence. The American pear blight is badly affecting pears in New Zealand and the apple maggot, fruit fly and San Jose scale from the United States are doing considerable damage in Great Britain. That country imports about 1,500,000 barrels of apples and hundreds of thousands of boxes of pears annually from the United States, the value of all fruits being $30,000,000. Mr. Lobjoit believed that since the two countries have benefitted from trade intercourse both should protect each other. Rather than raise barriers, his country was willing to do all it possibly could to help the situation, the best method being the common sense way of give and take. It is the duty of the United States to protect itself but absolute safety is impossible, there being too much at stake if the prohibitions are enforced. The intensive development of horticulture is advancing at a great pace in Great Britain and no one knew what the logical outcome could be unless it might mean the loss to the United States of the large fruit shipments to that country. The speaker received great applause.

Monday Evening Session.

Prof. Beattie at the opening of the evening session, explained the charts on the wall at the rear of the platform, showing the quantity of the various plants imported during the past year under permits. In speaking of the inspection service he said that nearly all delays were due to negligence of custom house brokers and the express companies in New York.

At this session Secretary Wallace, Dr. Marlatt and the three judges were on the platform, other members of the board being absent.

Dr. Van Slagteren, representing Holland, read an interesting statement presenting that nation's view of the quarantine embargo. There was no American truth opposed to European truth and every country would suffer greatly were all to establish such an embargo. Holland stocks were as free from diseases and pests as it is humanly possible to get them, there being hundreds of suspicious diseases that never turn out to be injurious. Scientific, applied pathology can reach its purpose without prohibitions. He took up the subject of the eel worm and illustrated with photographs how it was entirely eradicated. Dr. Van Slagteren claimed that Holland bulbous stocks were 99 per cent free of diseases or pests of any kind and urged that dry bulbs of all classes be admitted to the United States.

Charles Pynaert, Belgium's representative, vividly showed the plight of thousands of growers in that country because of the embargo. He pictured the great care in growing all classes of greenhouse plants, such as the azaleas and bay trees, the latter scarcely carrying any soil on the roots which were dense masses of fibre. The quarantine had been changed from its original aspect to a plant embargo. All Belgium was greatly surprised at the attitude of America. His country had always been extensive buyers of American goods, being particularly large importers of cattle. He urged that Belgium plant stocks be admitted which he would guarantee to be free from pests.

Dr. Van Poeteren also spoke for Holland. Europe, he said, would have to follow the example of America in plant embargo. Netherlands' pathological science was showing a great increase in efficiency, which was evident in their better plant stock.

Louis Sanders, of Bruges, Belgium, asked that gloxinias and tuberous begonias be admitted as they carried no soil on the roots, and suggested that the board not make a sweeping ruling for all plants. He believed that the United States should treat Belgium as she would wish to be treated and he thought there was no real danger in allowing full entry for all plants from Belgium.

Dr. Marlatt said the board was ready to consider the matter of bulbs and had asked for a committee at Detroit, Mich., to consider this subject but was still waiting for the committee. He believed that Quarantine No. 37 was legally correct and emphasized the necessity of the growers getting down to constructive work. He hoped the florists would appoint a committee on bulbs which the board would meet at this conference. Other committees would also further the work.

Chas. H. Totty urged the importance of manetti rose stocks, three firms using more than 2,000,000 a year.

SOME PROMINENT MEN AT THE PLANT QUARANTINE CONFERENCE.

E. G. Hill suggested the open entry of plants at New York city destined for Washington, D. C., such as geraniums, chrysanthemums, carnations and other soft wooded plants which could be imported with soil on the roots, and after inspection in Washington, the soil could be washed from the roots. The roots could then be covered with moss and the plants forwarded to destination.

Dr. Marlatt thought this plan was feasible. New ports of entry depended on money, $50,000 being required for establishing each additional port, and he suggested that florists should urge their congressmen to pass the necessary appropriations. In answer to an inquiry as to the board's control over a state he said that it had no jurisdiction, although local boards were glad to co-operate with the Federal Horticultural Board.

Mr. Burrage asked for permission to import hybrid orchids from England without limit, which Dr. Marlatt said he would be pleased to consider with the orchid committee. Committees to represent the various groups came up for discussion and the session adjourned until Tuesday morning.

Tuesday Morning Session.

The attendance, Tuesday morning, May 16, had dwindled considerably, but there was great interest shown by the 50 or more present. In a discussion of insect pests, the board was accused in not being sincere in listing all insects as some are necessary as being beneficial.

Dr. Marlatt stated that all insects were listed purely for the benefit of the board's inspectors as showing the flow of life. These lists were at first known only to the Department of Agriculture, but had gradually become public, although not furnished to the press. Many insects, such as the Japanese beetle, which is very destructive here, is not at all dangerous in Japan, and others had developed in the same way because of a different environment.

R. F. Elliott said that he had investigated horticultural encyclopedias and had not been able to find a native citrus and believed that if the quarantine had been in existence this tree would have been kept out.

Dr. Marlatt said that the government had brought this fruit into the United States, proving its good qualities, and the original tree was in the government greenhouses at Washington.

L. F. Carillo told of his opposition to Quarantine No. 37 when it was first enacted. As an orchid grower he was afraid he would be put out of business but he and others had found out how to save their old plants and now he hoped that the act would remain in force permanently. He thought there was too much delay in receiving importations.

Dr. Marlatt, in speaking of the man who introduced the gipsy moth, said he was an amateur professor who thought he could cross the moth with the silk worm and then take silk from the trees.

Mr. Burrage said that the orchid committee had a concrete proposition. The board agreed with the amateurs for ports of entry and would be glad to meet the committee on other matters. As the members of the board were going to California during the week they desired a conference with them as soon as possible.

The nurserymen's committee presented a report asking for Norway and Schwedleri maple whips, four to eight feet in length to grow on, for three years.

Dr. Van Poteren, Holland representative, asked if it would not be possible to have an international exchange between countries for the exchange of plants.

The suggestion appealed to Dr. Marlatt, who said he would be glad to have the board meet the various foreign delegates, now in Washington, with the judges appointed by Secretary Wallace to consider the question of an international exchange, the time being set for the same day.

James McHutchison made a final plea to have florists' and nurserymen's stocks considered separately.

Dr. Marlatt had placed bulbs in the florist group, but said he would be pleased to hear separate committees.

F. H. Henry promised to form a committee of the bulb importers.

After a discussion of the needs of amateurs not affiliated with societies, which was referred to Mr. McFarland's committee, the conference adjourned.

The S. A. F. Statement.

This committee speaks for the Society of American Florists, the national organization of florists, with which are affiliated more than 20 state and district horticultural organizations having a combined membership of upwards of 10,000 and including practically all of the leading firms and horticulturists in the United States. We approach the board in a spirit of co-operation, we offer you only constructive guidance, we seek only the best interest of our members consistent with the present and future interests of this country.

As to the purpose and scope of this conference, what subjects would be considered here, we were informed by this board and by Secretary Wallace that Quarantine 37 would be thrown open for a full and free discussion for the future guidance of the department, so we prepared to co-operate on that basis. If the board has new proposals to advance, we ask for sufficient time to consider them—thus avoiding snap judgment on important matters.

While offering constructive advice with regard to Quarantine 37 and advising changes in the board's present policy, we credit the board with the best intentions and ask that we be credited with a genuine desire to co-operate with the board in carrying out its legitimate functions. We consider the Federal Horticultural Board a necessary and useful body—providing it adheres to its proper legal function—that of advising the secretary of agriculture how to combat existing pests and plant diseases and prevent the introduction of new or dangerous ones. We believe in government control of imports and in thorough inspection and certification of imported plant products when necessary; but we protest vigorously against Quarantine 37 as administered, and which operates as a blanket economic embargo.

It is unfortunate that this board is named "The Federal Horticultural Board" for its functions are entomological rather than horticultural. It is wrong that the U. S. Customs classification of "Nursery Stock" is used by the board, for by including such classes of plant material as orchids, palms, forcing bulbs and plants imported exclusively by florists in the term "Nursery Stock" confusion is created in quite different interests. Quarantine 37 excludes a far larger volume and variety of necessary plant material from florists than from nurserymen. We urge that the consideration of "Florists Stock" imported by florists, and "Nursery Stock" imported by nurserymen, be kept quite separate at this conference as far as practicable. In this statement we refer only to florists' stock imported by florists.

Horticulture does not recognize boundaries; plants grow naturally in localities where climatic and other conditions are most favorable, so the best varieties growing in every civilized country today were imported from some other country. Our hot summers combined with our cold winters makes it necessary for this country to import more raw materials and plant products than any other, and the prosperity of our citizens creates a larger demand for the best varieties of plant life than any other country enjoys. And as the florists' industry in this country owes its enormous expansion largely to the diversified variety of plants and flowers it is able to offer the buying public, it is obvious that any restrictions on imports, especially on raw materials or plant products that cannot be commercially produced here, must be disastrous not only to horticultural trade interests but ultimately to the United States.

To see why we need government control of imports we must go back to the year 1912 just before the "Plant Quarantine Act" was passed by congress; large shipments of plant products as well as nursery stock were arriving from foreign countries under no federal control; some states had adequate inspection laws, properly enforced, other states had inadequate laws and lax enforcement, some states had no inspection law; so the department said that in view of that lack of uniformity in statute and enforcement and the occasional absence of any inspection, and considering the common interest, the department ought to be given authority to see that importations from districts harboring a pest new to this country or not generally distributed here, was given proper inspection by federal officers.

That was the whole plea at that time; for inspection. The trade organizations recognized the necessity for such a law—the florists are continually fighting insect pests and plant diseases, it is part of their business, and they wanted all the help the department could give in combatting the existing pests and of course keeping out others—so the law was passed by congress and gave the secretary, through the board, wide powers. Then the quarantine orders began to come until we now have 54 of them. This law did not give the board power to legislate, to prohibit imports because they happened to be horticultural imports, to build a Chinese wall around the United States in a horticultural sense with a few small openings, in fact it limited the issuance of quarantine orders in these four important ways:

1. The quarantine must be to prevent the introduction into the United States of insect pests and plant diseases.
2. Which are new to or not heretofore widely prevalent or distributed within or throughout the United States.
3. The order can only prohibit importation from a country or locality where "such diseases or insect infestation exists" and
4. The country or locality, and the class of plant products to be excluded must be specified in the order.

If Belgium has, say a dangerous disease which is new to or not widely prevalent here affecting araucarias, this law gives power to exclude araucarias from Belgium if that is the only way to exclude the disease; it clearly does not give the department or the board, the power or right to exclude nearly all plant products from every country or locality on the earth on suspicion, as Quarantine 37 does.

We have outlined the original plan for inspection and certification as required by the department and endorsed by the trade organizations; now let us come back to the present and see how far the board has wandered from the original plan. I quote the words of the chairman of the board as printed in the florists' trade papers:

"As to returning to the old practically free entry of foreign plants, a test over a seven year period was given to the possibility of safeguarding such plant importations by inspection and disinfection, and this test indicated the absolute inadequacy and failure of this method of excluding new pests and forced the conclusion on this department, and on the plant experts of all of our states, that the only safeguard for the future was the exclusion of all plant stock not absolutely essential to the agricultural, horticultural and forestry needs of the United States."

In other words the chairman says that having tried to do what the law authorizes, and having failed, the board decides to do something else; something entirely without and beyond the limits of the legal authority conferred by congress. We florists cannot agree with, or subscribe to, any proposition that it is necessary or effective to exclude important classes of plants and plant products because of the alleged inadequacy of inspection. If the board's inspectors cannot do the work effectively, or lacks equipment, then the department can get other inspectors and provide the necessary equipment.

When the board undertakes to say what plant materials this country needs and what it ought to be permitted to have, it wanders off into the field of economics and assumes powers it does not have and should not have; it has no present authority in law to decide such matters. The function of the board is only to advise, and on scientific matters requiring expert knowledge of pests and plant diseases, and as such it is properly limited in its personnel to expert advisers on entomology and plant pathology. When it comes to deciding what plants and plant products the country requires, the florists and nurserymen can furnish expert knowledge on that subject which the board does not claim to possess. It was not intended for this board to decide such matters, for such experts are prone to consider plants as hosts and carriers of diseases and be critical and unsympathetic toward practical horticulture.

Now let us look for a moment at the effect of the present policy of the board as embodied in Quarantine 37—and the full results are not yet visible. Belgium that shipped approximately 32,000 packages of plants and plant products annually prior to Quarantine 37 (1934 tons in 1913) now ships less than 50 packages (3 tons in 1920). One little district in Holland (Boskoop) that formerly shipped 35,000 cases annually, now ships less than 300; our entire imports of plants and plant products, excluding bulbs, from Holland in 1920 was less than 3% of our 1916 imports. The Holland-America Line carried in 1916, 81,636 cases of bulbs and 39,145 cases of nursery stock as against 14,036 cases of bulbs and 808 cases of nursery stock in 1920. Total 120,000 odd for 191 and 14,000 odd for 1920. France and Japan that formerly shipped hundreds of varieties of ornamentals, now ship none except under special permits. Out of the thousands of varieties and classes of plant products formerly imported, we can now freely import but 7, of which 5 are bulbs—and these can only be imported under permit. Of the estimated 950,000 Azalea indica formerly annually imported from Belgium, only an occasional plant is now to be seen at our national flower shows. Where are our bay trees, our araucarias? Where are our new orchids and hundreds of other exotics to come from? And yet the board's chairman says that Quarantine 37 is not an embargo and points to the stock being allowed entry under special permits—which is equivalent to limiting the waters of the Potomac to what will come through a twelve-inch pipe and pointing to the great volume of water that comes through the pipe. These conditions result in serious injury to American trade, the elimination of the ability of that trade to supply garden and flower lovers and American citizens in general with the plants they want at prices they can afford to pay, and this means practically the suffocation of horticultural development and progress.

And we are told that these restrictions and embargoes are necessary to protect the country from insect pests and plant diseases. The same argument could be used by medical enthusiasts to stop immigration to our shores to protect the country from human ills and diseases, but people would sicken and die just the same. Or the police department might shut out all immigration for fear that a criminal might occasionally come, but we would have crime just the same. Recently there was found on our eastern coasts a species of pile-worm that on western coasts has caused millions of dollars worth of damage by attacking piles and other underwater structures, it came presumably with the barnacles on ships, and following the board's reasoning it would be necessary to exclude all ships for fear they might bring the pile pest. We contend that exclusion of inspected plant materials does not exclude pests, and does not reduce the annual damage done by pests to our crops and forests. If the board follows its present policy of excluding plant materials to its logical conclusion and excludes all merchandise and indeed all ships because of the suspicion that they might bring pests, it would not, in our opinion, reduce the sum total of damage by pests by any degree visible. The gypsy moth was introduced into this country by a naturalist or entomologist at Harvard University, but the exclusion of all naturalists and entomologists in the future from this country would not reduce the annual damage done by the gypsy moth. You cannot change the course of nature by restrictions on business or exclusion of merchandise. Your purpose is laudable and right, but your method is dead wrong—the remedy is infinitely worse than the disease.

We are told that many of the pests that now plague us came in on shipments of plant products, but we contend that was before we had our present system of federal and state inspection and before the exporting nations had theirs. We admit there are pests on all plant products, on home grown as well as on foreign grown, on our incoming shipments of greenhouse products as well as on our outgoing shipments of wheat and other cereals, but so long as these pests are not new or dangerous we should expect only the same degree of reasonable freedom from other nations' products as they expect of ours. Of florists imports fully 98 per cent come from inspected establishments and 95 per cent go direct into greenhouses, so the risk of importing new or dangerous pests with such shipments is practically nil.

But if the board considers such drastic remedies necessary, why not apply them to similar products not used by florists? Why discriminate against florists? Why exclude nearly all varieties of flowering bulbs without also excluding onions and all other bulbs not used by florists? Quarantine 37 places no restrictions whatsoever on the importation of field, vegetable, or flower seeds, so why regulate and restrict the importation of palm seeds used by florists without also regulating the importation of all other seeds representing 98 per cent of total seed imports? Why exclude a few valuable orchid plants when the same ship brings in 40,000 bunches of bananas collected in the same forest? And why exclude, even on special permits, living plants which require a little soil to protect the roots while allowing shiploads of soil or earth arriving as ship's ballast to be dumped on our shores?

The florists' trade is heartily in accord with this board in carrying out the purpose for which it was created, but when the board gets into economic or tariff fields no two florists think alike for no two are affected alike, and some florists, and nurserymen too, undoubtedly are benefitted by the exclusion of plant products which compete with what they produce. As in all trades, there are selfish men in ours; a florist who grows only one variety of narcissus is benefitted by the exclusion of all other varieties of narcissus and indeed of all other bulbs, while a florist who grows only geraniums or bedding plants is benefitted by the exclusion of all plant products—but does such exclusion benefit the United States or even the majority of florists? Naturally a handler of say terra-cotta is benefitted by the exclusion of brick and lumber, but would such exclusion benefit the United States or the building industry? Every bit of comment that is favorable to Quarantine 37 we have heard or read from trade members treats only of the economic protection it gives them from competition, not one commends it for the protection it was designed to give them from pests. This seems conclusive to us that Quarantine 37 is considered an economic measure: we contend that economic protection is not included in the functions of this board—that it is purely a tariff proposition.

Hundreds of varieties excluded by Quarantine 37 are not being commercially produced in this country, while the cost of production of other hundreds will prevent their quantity sale when produced. Home production should be encouraged and protected in every legitimate way, but by the tariff, not by this board. The tariff bill now before the senate provides duties more than double those now in effect, which will give home production all the protection it needs, especially when it is considered that prices in Europe are approximately three times what they were prior to Quarantine 37 and it will be many years before an adequate supply of necessities is again available. Summarizing our deductions, we submit to the Department of Agriculture these RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. We recommend that Quarantine 37 be withdrawn; it is indefensible even as an economic measure. This will end the iniquitous system of "special permits" which is unfair, un-American and discriminatory, since the board not only decides which variety may be imported and in what quantity, but by which firms or individuals. We submit that no firm should be permitted to import the same stock that another firm is not permitted to import—we need not comment on the abuses that can grow up under such a system. If there are any varieties of plants in Quarantine 37 which carry a real risk of introducing a "dangerous pest new or not widely prevalent" in this country, the danger can be met effectively by specific quarantines as the law intended.

2. We further recommend the establishment at entry ports, especially at New York to begin with, of an inspection station where all imports of plants and plant products (excluding bulbs and seeds) will get adequate inspection. The cost of this station and its maintenance will represent but a small fraction of what Quarantine 37 costs the country in loss of customs duties on excluded products each season.

3. We recommend that the board make accessible, to persons legitimately interested, information with regard to the special permits that have been issued since quarantine 37 was promulgated, stating the class or variety of plant products, the quantity, the name of the importer and the country of origin. Secrecy in such matters invites charges of discrimination and favoritism in the issuance of special permits.

4. Should the board contemplate quarantining additional items after withdrawing Quarantine 37, it is urged that the notice of hearing state precisely (not vaguely) which variety or varieties it is proposed to quarantine, and from which country or locality, so that the trade may have a chance to present its views in accordance with the intent of the law.

There is no doubt that with a little goodwill and co-operation on the part of the board, these recommendations can be made the basis for regulations covering the importation of plant products that will give adequate protection against the introduction of new or dangerous plant pests without prohibiting the importation of necessary plant materials. This country cannot give a guarantee of absolute freedom of pests for our outgoing shipments and we should not demand it on our incoming shipments.

GERANIUMS FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

The florists want a tariff high enough to discourage importation of all but the new and expensive varieties of gladioli, freesias, ficus, hydrangeas, dwarf roses and all other classes of plant products that can be commercially produced in this country, but we cannot ask this board to co-operate with us on tariff matters even though this committee is also the tariff committee, so our recommendations on economic protection have gone to congress, as we feel that it is not the function of this board to decide such matters.

In this statement we refer only to greenhouse products or plant materials used by florists, carefully refraining from referring to "Nursery Stock" (as the term is understood in trade circles), as we leave recommendations on that subject entirely to the nurserymen.

Nurserymen Pressed Into Line.

The Eastern Nurserymen's Association convened at Philadelphia, Pa., Friday, May 12, to compare views on Plant Quarantine No. 37, and representatives of the American Association of Nurserymen met in the New Willard hotel, Washington, D. C., Saturday afternoon and evening May 13. It is reported that all dissenters, those who have always sought modifications of the act, were pressed into line and told if they did not agree to definite and unqualified support they might risk the present embargo on roses and similar plants, which has, during the enforcement of the quarantine, paid them big profits.

Wietor Bros. Retire.

Wietor Bros., well known wholesalers and growers with headquarters at 30 East Randolph street, Chicago, will retire from business June 1 which the entire trade will learn with regret, for it will mark the passing of one of the most highly respected concerns in the country and the loss of two of the warmest supporters for the betterment of trade conditions.

Nicholas and Henry Wietor started to grow flowers in the spring of 1890 and opened a store in the wholesale market with John Muno and Adam Zender in September, 1894, under the name of the Rogers Park Floral Co. The brothers took over the store in the spring of 1897 when the firm name was changed to Wietor Bros. They adhered strictly to the golden rule and the business grew steadily until their range totaled over 1,000,000 square feet of glass. Roses, chrysanthemums and carnations were their specialties and the quality of the stock they grew was equal to the best offered in the great central market.

Ten acres of land with 15 large greenhouses were sold to the Angel Guardian Orphanage, who will continue to grow roses for the market under the able direction of Nic. Schmidt. John Eschette, who has been in charge of the carnation range for many years, bought five acres of land and eight large houses which will be devoted to the same stock and shipped to the wholesale market. John Borst, son-in-law of Henry Wietor, and Mr. Wietor's sons, John and George, have rented the balance of the range of 30 houses to be devoted to roses and chrysanthemums. N. J. Wietor will remain on duty until the affairs of the company have been closed, which he figures will take until about July 1, but the last cut flowers will be sold May 31. The trade welcomes their successors into the fold and sincerely hopes that the two well-known wholesale men will have a change of heart and some time in the near future come back into the field, which they are leaving on a bigger scale than ever. THE AMERICAN FLORIST joins with the rest of the trade in wishing them continued good health and prosperity and assures them that their retirement will be the cause of much regret and the memory of their pleasant and honest business dealings will be long remembered by those who had occasion to trade with them.

KANSAS CITY CONVENTION HALL FLOOR PLAN.

The mailing of the prints of the floor plan of the convention hall in Kansas City, Mo., to the members, has just been completed. The space rental remains the same as in previous years—60 cents per square foot—which does not include tables, platform, decorations, signs or equipment of any kind. The accompanying illustration gives a clear idea of the floor plan, the letters following the numbered trade spaces designating the exhibition classes, as follows: (A) plants; (B) cut blooms; (C) boilers and heating apparatus; (D) greenhouse structures; (E) florists' supplies; (F) bulbs, seeds and garden requisites; (G) miscellaneous. Spaces one to 64 around the sides of the hall are boxes, which may be used for office space.

The cost of the official sign is $3. Rule No. 25 of the rules relating to the management of the trade exhibition, reading: "The selling of goods by persons or firms not having engaged space will be prohibited unless such persons or firms shall have secured a permit or license from the secretary, the same to cost not less than $35," will be strictly enforced, so that none other than exhibitors will be permitted to transact business on the floor until the license or permit mentioned has been obtained from the secretary.

Orders for signs should be sent to the secretary with the application for reservations of space. The rules require that 25 per cent of the total amount payable for space shall be paid upon the signing of the contract, and the balance before the exhibitor takes possession. Additional copies of the floor plan may be had upon application to the secretary, John Young, 43 West Eighteenth street, New York.

Judging from the number of inquiries received it is easy to understand that the annual meeting of the society, August 15-17, will have a record breaking attendance. Many of the members are planning their work so that they will be able to make this their vacation time where both pleasure and business may be combined.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Memorial Day.

An opportunity to add to the volume and popularity of the flower business is offered in the demand for Memorial Day, May 30, which this year falls on Tuesday. In some localities the amount of trade taxes the facilities of all branches to the utmost, while in other communities although as largely populated the demand for flowers is very light, being not much more than that of an ordinary day. In the New England states, particularly in the neighborhood of Boston, Mass., there is, for Memorial Day, a wonderful sale of designs and cut flowers as well of plants for the decoration of the graves of soldiers and family relatives. This, while a recognized custom for years, was given a further impetus some years ago when the prepared magnolia wreaths were introduced and decorated with artificial roses, carnations, dahlias, lilies, etc. Worked up in advance, they were advertised as a beautiful and lasting design for the cemetery, which would be delivered to any part of New England for the advertised price. These wreaths immediately had a wonderful sale and for a time were entirely in the hands of the florists.

The department stores, however, soon saw that this imperishable stock was merchandise which they also could handle with profit and they are now bought in carload lots, making a business that in the aggregate is immense. This competition does not appear to hurt the regular trade for they now as before have all they can do with both the artificial and natural plants and flowers, making it the best floral holiday of the year in New England.

There is the same patriotism and respect for the dead in all communities and this general and beautiful custom could be stimulated everywhere, now that attention will be centered on the departed heroes of the late war in addition to the soldiers of the rebellion. Much could be done by skilled newspaper writers, working in stories of local heroes and the beauty, and in fact duty, of strewing their graves with flowers on this, their one day of the year. Such matter well prepared would be accepted as news and get into the reading columns without cost except that of its preparation. The trade would then co-operate with well worded advertising and displays, featuring the occasion well in advance, gaining each year until the custom became thoroughly established.

Creating Demand.

Every florist should put his store in order to meet his expected demand, add to it and increase the business in every possible way. Far too many say: "We are not located for this demand, it's only the cemetery florists that are busy today." In many localities very few have the cemetery habit on Memorial Day and the fault for the most part lies with the florists themselves. No matter where the shop is located it can do its part in pushing the sale of plants and flowers for this event. Years ago the custom of decorating soldiers' graves was general everywhere, fostered for the most part by the comrades of the fallen heroes. Now there is a scant per cent of the old guard left, and if the decorative features of the holiday are to continue there must be new leaders or organized bodies to keep this great patriotic observance alive. A few progressive active florists in every community could not do better than band together and by interesting the proper people, they themselves remaining in the background, keep the spirit of the day alive and greatly increase the sale of flowers.

Working Up the Stock.

There is always a strong demand for wreaths and sprays. Progressive florists are always well stocked with a full line of prepared foliage wreaths made up at odd times, during the summer, or whenever there was any spare time. These can then be decorated with fresh shrubbery, peonies, or other flowers in a very short time, making a showing that will give a handsome profit. These wreaths also make a good foundation for a decoration of a more permanent character with small flags, red, white and blue immortelles, stars and miniature wreaths of red, white and blue chinele, small cypas, tricolor ribbon, etc. Such stock can be prepared in advance and will make a good showing in store and window in featuring and calling attention to the event as soon as Mothers' Day is well out of the way.

Memorial Day Window.

The window display at this time should, in its decorative features, recall distinctly the stirring times of the rebellion now almost unknown to the present generation. Plaster busts of Grant, Lincoln and Sherman, set on pedestals decorated with flags, with wreaths of laurel tied with tricolor ribbon at the foot. At one end a tripod of rifles supporting a drum adds a bit of reality while some music scores of the popular old war songs, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, The Boys are Marching," "Marching Through Georgia," "Rally 'Round the Flag Boys," "Hail Columbia Happy Land," "Yankee Doodle," and others will add to the picture. A few medium sized wreaths, also made-up pans of flowering and foliage plants, will give a commercial side but not detract in any way from the decorative effect.

Peonies.

Peonies have just one chance and that is on Memorial Day week when all over the country they are recognized as the flower for the occasion. They are used loosely to strew on the grave or tied in clusters by themselves or with other flowers to add variety. Southern gladioli are now being grown so successfully that they are certain to cut a figure in all future celebrations. Cape Jessamine is also a southern product that appears to carry well and is much used in decorations for the event.

For those who have cool cellars and rooms where flowers can be stored, it is a great advantage to have bunches of shrubbery that sell from 50 cents to $1 or more, made-up and ready to dispose of when the rush is on.

Interior Display.

For at least two weeks before the event there should be on display in the establishment nicely arranged groups of the permanent wreaths, sprays and samples of the pans of growing plants that are to be used for cemetery decoration; these will in no way interfere with the other trade of the store, but to all who see them will suggest their use and help along the propaganda of the event. The little pans are to be covered with crepe paper tied with tricolor ribbon and contain one or more small flags.

These little pans, if nicely featured, are wonderful sellers. As Memorial Day is generally the closing of the bedding plant season, these earthen dishes can be filled a week ahead with any of the odds and ends that are likely to be left on hand. Little chip baskets can also be filled in the same way. A week in the greenhouse brings all the plants into new growth and flower, making them so attractive that when set down on a crowded pavement they fairly melt away.

The Cemetery Florist

The week before Memorial Day is the busiest time of the year for the florists who cater to the business of lot holders in the cemetery, for every lot in their charge must be looking its very best, with the grass cut, vases and hanging baskets filled and in place, shrubbery trimmed and beds, if any, planted by May 30. Many give regular orders for cut flowers or designs to be placed on the graves at Christmas, Easter and Memorial Day, and also on anniversaries of births and deaths. All regular orders for vases and baskets are filled a week or two ahead where, in the greenhouse, they rapidly come into fine condition and when placed ready for the day, are appearing in their best. The matter of attention in watering is important; there are a number of so-called self watering appliances in vases and baskets, but they have to be filled frequently and require almost as much attention as keeping the soil damp. Watering should be done at least once a day, preferably in the late afternoon.

Memorial Day trade near the cemetery gates comes with a rush, many lot holders being sure to pay a visit at this time, and as a rule, will want something to place on one or more graves. To make the most of this business there must be a good stock of wreaths on hand with lasting decorations or such as can be sprayed with fresh flowers in a few minutes. Shrubby sprays to lay on the grave or arranged in bunches for vases, can be made up the day before and stood in buckets in a cool cellar. Such clusters, ready at once to hand out, are great time savers. The tin and glass vases to stick in the ground will be in demand as will short wood or wire easels on which to place sprays in front of headstones. The wood are best, as the wires often leave rusty stains.

The cemetery florist should have his well selected stock nicely displayed, every article large or small, so perfect as to be salable and all so appropriate that they will sell themselves. A look around the greenhouses a week before the holiday will show perhaps odds and ends of stock in small flowering or foliage plants that want moving. Gather these and fill up a number of 10-inch pans, which will make a fine showing by the holiday and just fill the bill for some one who wants something at a moderate price. Each should have its crepe paper cover.

Tricolor ribbon and miniature flags are most appropriate for all flowers for the graves of soldiers. A show piece or two of good size, well decorated with the national colors, will present an artistic finish, and if not priced too high, is likely to find a buyer.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

Make the most of the outside flowers. A very pretty decoration for the window is a garden and lawn scene. This should occupy the entire space, a good portion with a closely cropped grass plot, along the borders of which are miniature plants of all the popular shrubbery now in flower, set in concealed vases of water as if growing. A curving walk or two and a driveway leading up to a toy mansion in the background will complete a suburban scene that is sure to attract immediate attention. All parts of the picture should be in proportion. The rolling ground is first built up with sphagnum moss and if sod is too much trouble green sheet moss makes the next best substitute.

The peony season is now here and the flower should be featured in every possible way. It isn't the fact that there is so much money in them, but they only come once a year and all lovers of flowers will be certain to appreciate seeing them even if they do not buy many.

With peonies as with many other flowers it is the way they are displayed and featured that brings about their sale. A well arranged vase attracts by its beauty and suggests to those who see it that it will make a gift to this or that "shut in" or be just the thing with which to pay an obligation, and the sale is made.

Peonies have to be handled carefully; they should never be sent out or used in a decoration until the stems, foliage and flowers are thoroughly filled with water. All bottom leaves should be removed as they absorb water and prevent its getting up into the flowers. A few well arranged vases or vase baskets of peonies give an artistic appearance to the store and are most effective in church wedding and other decorations. Select flowers make up into beautiful sprays for funerals, and not infrequently are selected in showy clusters with appropriate ribbons as flowers for the bridesmaids. Customers should be cautioned to keep the flowers from drafts, when they will last much longer.

It is now high time to push vigorously for the more or less overdue accounts, "If you please" at the bottom of the bill will be sufficient for those whom you know to be good. A polite letter accompanying others of greater delinquency will often be successful or secure a promise for a certain date, that if not lived up to should be immediately called to their attention. When no attention is paid to the request there should follow with increasing frequency requests, never threatening but so often as to be annoying. Very often there is no one at home to a personal solicitation, but Uncle Sam always gains an entrance, and if the message is sent in a plain envelope, as it should be, a hearing that will in time bring results is brought about. The man who never lets any bills get old adds 10 per cent to his profits each year and also holds customers which the small amount owing would keep away.

VEGETABLE PLANTS.

This is the season for vegetable plants, which many find is an interesting line to carry. They are as profitable as other stocks, interest strangers in the store, and frequently hold them for customers later on. Of course this means a pavement display with prices. No matter where you are people will stop and have a look and if interested take a few home. One dealer made quite a hit with several well formed tomatoes which he placed in his tomato flats. These attracted attention and in this way helped sales.

The final preparations for Memorial Day should be well under way; there is much more time now than a week later. If the day is not as productive in business as you would like it, set about in the many ways possible to increase the demand. Display a well made lot of wreaths, using patriotic colors and emblems in their decoration. Feature pans of low flowering plants, the paper covering tied on with tricolor ribbon. A well worded circular exploiting the day and the beautiful custom of strewing not only soldiers', but all graves with flowers on Memorial Day, is certain to have its effect. If all the trade wherever necessary unite in such propaganda it would give a powerful impulse and build up a business of wonderful proportions.

Keep after the June weddings; orders are given out for these events weeks and often months ahead and again at times the notice is very short, particularly for the bouquets. There is no harm in being politely aggressive. The man who knows his business and shows it in his well formed plans, will sometimes win out over the fellow who had a sure thing and was waiting for it to be handed to him. Featuring such events in the window and in the store literature to prospects will often start inquiries that if followed up lead to orders, which, if well executed, will establish new family connections and widen the scope of the business.

Don't forget the anniversaries, the tin, the silver and the more rare golden wedding celebrations which occur at this season. They are generally productive of good orders and well worth the seeking. A silvered vase basket showily made up and decorated with a silvered ribbon, bearing a card "for the silver wedding" and another of gilt filled with yellow roses or other yellow flowers or for that matter they can be any color and tied with a gold ribbon and labeled "a golden wedding gift" will often be just the thing for those who have been puzzling their brains to know what to send elderly persons whose every want is supplied.

Miller Floral Co's Prize Window.

The Miller Floral Co., of Salt Lake City, Utah, won a silver cup recently offered by the Deseret News, Utah's leading newspaper, for the best window display answering the question: "Is Matrimony a Failure?" Practically all the leading business houses of that city entered in the contest and the competition was especially keen. The accompanying illustration portrays a couple, who, having pioneered their way to Utah in the early days, starting life in a log cabin, later acquired a new home in which they are now living. The climax of the scene depicts the aged couple on their golden wedding anniversary admiring a photograph of their children, when a box of flowers is received from them, with a card enclosed: "With Love, from Daughter and Family on Your Golden Wedding Anniversary." In the foreground their newly married grandchildren have just stepped from their car to inspect their new home, a modern bungalow, a card in front of which has the following inscription: "We will make a success of it as Dad and Mother did."

SAY IT WITH FLOWERS SIGN AT OMAHA, NEB.

"Say It With Flowers" in Omaha.

The accompanying illustration gives an excellent view of the electrically lighted "Say It With Flowers" sign erected on a building in the heart of the business district of Omaha, Neb., by the Omaha and Council Bluffs Florists' Club. It is estimated that between 50,000 and 60,000 people pass the billboard every day, which is only one of the many placed throughout the city in the club's vigorous publicity campaign this season.

Getting New Business.

The store with an established trade has a line of patrons that in the main depend on them for whatever plants and flowers or other floral requisites they may desire. Some come often enough to be called regulars and others are only occasional buyers when they have need for flowers for funerals or anniversary occasions. While such customers when their number has reached a sufficient quantity to make a more or less steady demand, they are not enough to tax the full capacity of the store, and a continual bid for new business is necessary. In fact, it is the new trade from transient or first buyers and added to by the regulars, all of whom are attracted by the intensive methods in featuring stock, that make up the profits of the year.

Every progressive retailer should be continually planning to add to his list of patrons to do which he must be able to create in the people within the range of his shop, and with some stores this is a very wide circle, a desire to call and inspect the beautiful stock in this attractive home of flowers. There are many ways to attract new business, one of the very best being to feature and present the stock in the best possible manner so that it cannot fail to attract attention. The most beautiful plant or flower has no chance in the market if it is not seen or called in some way to the attention of prospective buyers.

STORE SHOULD BE ATTRACTIVE.

In the first place there is the place of business, the store itself, which needs to be featured the same as the goods it contains. Hundreds of people pass on both sides of the street in opposite directions all day long, 90 per cent of whom do not know of your shop and have no interest in it whatever, although perhaps 20 per cent buy plants or flowers at some time during the course of the year. Here then is a large army of prospects that you are missing entirely unless in some way you can bring the store to their favorable notice.

The nature of the business enables a florist to make his store the most beautiful and conspicuous in the block. It should be made so attractive and stand out so from the others, that no one passing on either side but will at least give it a glance, while many will be tempted to take a look into the window, and from there it is an easy step into the store. Some flower shops are always so attractively decorated that people in the street cars watch out for them to get a passing glance of their beauty. Every vantage point from the pavement with its space for tubbed evergreens, and boxes of the same over the bulk and on the window ledges above—all of which can be made most attractive both in summer or winter. These must not only be beautiful at first but kept so continually. It will be a little trouble and expense to keep them up, but nothing in the way of publicity will pay half as well—as they are continually keeping the shop in the public eye and produce immediate returns.

The next most important feature is the window which should be up to the mark all the time. The story of the store is told in the window and it must be said in such a convincing manner that every one who sees it will believe, and as many as possible accept the invitation to step inside, for the window with a punch puts the story across and the sale follows.

When flowers are plentiful nothing quickens business like a feature sale of well displayed stock at a quick moving price. The fact alone that it is priced attracts attention, and the attractive manner in which it is presented is a strong factor in keeping it moving. People who get one bargain will be on the lookout for another and in this way become regular patrons, and tell others as well.

There are many weeks throughout the season when specials can be run with roses, sweet peas, carnations, calendulas, violets, daffodils, chrysanthemums, etc., and various plants, that if well worked up with the proper publicity will keep the store continually before the public and create the new business that is so necessary.

The power of suggestion has much to do with the sale of flowers. Anniversaries are occurring at all times, every day being full of birthday, wedding, and other like returns, that if not called to mind are apt to be forgotten. Frequent displays of boxes of cut flowers or baskets made up with various anniversary cards attached, well displayed in the window will call to the mind of the observer such an event which otherwise would have been forgotten, and the sale means new business that was created by the display.

There is the "bit of cheer for the sick room," baskets which calls to mind the friend at the hospital or at home, who has been laid up for a week and who would appreciate such a remembrance. The stork cradle basket can also be featured frequently with good results. Picturing events of a national character, such as the birthdays of Washington, Lincoln, Grant and Roosevelt, are always good publicity, as the papers make considerable of these anniversaries which are then in the public eye, and well arranged windows are sure to be noticed and considered up to date.

EFFECTIVE USE OF FOLDERS.

Snapppy post cards and folders calling attention for the most part to one of the store's feature sales, sent out frequently to the list of customers and prospects, is splendid publicity and generally productive of immediate results. All are not moved at first but the continual dropping, like the water on the stone, is sure to be effective.

Continuous advertising of one thing, such as a $1 box of flowers, or a fern at the same price, while it may seem disappointing in returns at first will in its continuity, gradually bring the people for these advertised articles and result in much new business in other lines. Every such advertised article should be the bargain that is claimed for it and there must be an assortment showing that it is a feature well worth coming after.

A plan for creating and obtaining new business, which while it requires considerable clerical work, also promises handsome returns, consists of copying the worth while family names from the daily death notices in the papers, one page or more for every day in the year. As the first year anniversary of the death draws near a circular is sent the family of the deceased calling attention to the beautiful custom of placing flowers or floral emblems, lasting in character, on their graves and a short description of those most suitable. This list could be circularized again at Christmas and Easter as particularly at Christmas when there is a strong demand for such grave decoration. Many might not have in mind this visit to the cemetery until suggested by the circular and in such cases if an order is given the trade will have been secured by one of the methods available to the progressive seeker after new business.

PORTLAND, ORE.—All horticultural concerns here have done well this season, this city growing faster than any in the northwest.

PLANT NOTES.

Ficus Elastica.

While the rubber plants do not enjoy the popularity that they did 10 or more years ago, yet there is always more or less demand for good small plants every fall, and cuttings rooted now and given good culture can be grown to fine stock at that time. Every plantsman will have plants of Ficus elastica that have outgrown the salable size or have lost many of the lower leaves, and the tops of these can be propagated during the warm weather. The best way to root the young plants is on the plant by mossing the cut. Make an incision in the stem about half way through, in which insert a small stick about the size of a matchstick, to keep the cut open. Bind around the cut wet moss, which should be firmly tied on with raffia and kept wet constantly. The plant should then be placed in a warm, moist house, kept fairly close, and in two or four weeks the roots will be seen protruding from the moss. The top should then be cut off and potted in a 4-inch or 5-inch pot and grown in a warm, close house until the roots have become established in the soil. If a number of these plants are being grown, a mild hotbed can be made up outside, built up with boards so as to allow 18 inches of room between the soil and glass, and covered with a shaded sash. Plunge the pots in the soil and if the frame is kept close, allowing air only on the warmest days, the plants will grow rapidly. As fall approaches more air can be admitted, the plants gradually hardened off and splendid stock will be the result.

Peonies.

The peony is one of the most important flowers to the florist during the early part of summer, and they are used in large quantities for decorations and other floral work. In cutting peonies for market, especially those that are to be shipped, it is best to cut them when the first petals unfold, and allow them to open in water. They ship much better in this condition and also last much longer. Where they are allowed to remain on the plant until open, the flowers not only bruise more or less in transportation, but the petals drop more easily when the flowers are unpacked if they are open when cut and made ready for shipment. In cutting the flowers from the plant, many growers make the mistake of cutting too low. The demand of the customers is, of course, for long stems, but for the good of the plant there should be left two well-formed leaves upon the stem when the flower is cut off. This will allow enough foliage for the plant to continue its growth and thoroughly ripen off. Where the plant is cut back too severely the root action is injured and a diminished number of flowers will be the result in the succeeding year. Keep the plants tied up by stakes and strings outside of the row; a heavy rain when the plants are heavy with buds will often knock them down and ruin many of the flowers.

Callas.

As the summer weather approaches the callas will cease producing flowers and will require a rest to prepare them for another year. They should be dried off gradually until they become "dust dry," when the roots will be thoroughly ripened, shaken out and stored will grow all the year around, but plants grown in this way will not produce as many flowers as those that are rested. Those grown in pots can be laid on their sides in the greenhouse until all danger from freezing weather is passed, when they can be removed outdoors, still placing the pots on the side in full sunlight. Those grown on the bench can be lifted with as much soil as possible and placed under the bench, where they will dry out gradually, and later planted in the full sun outside in a dry location, and as soon as thoroughly ripened, shaken out and stored until wanted to start for another season. The yellow calla, Ricardia Elliottiana, is being grown more largely and the blooms have been used the last winter in many elaborate decorations. The culture of these is in pots and similar to the older varieties.

Marguerites for Winter.

To have good marguerites for winter flowers the plants must have a good start in the spring. For large plants the stock should now be in 2½ or 3-inch pots and growing vigorously, but if the cuttings have not been made they can now be propagated in a cool bench and good-sized plants grown, or stock should be secured at once. Do not allow these plants to become pot-bound, but shift them into 4-inch pots as soon as they require it and pot very firmly. Keep the plants pinched back, that they may branch more freely, and keep all flowers and buds picked off. For many years these plants were grown in the open ground but in some localities they have been attacked with a club root in field culture, and inside culture has become necessary for success. A cold frame in which the pots are plunged is the culture successfully practiced by many growers. In late summer they should be potted in large pots, 8-inch or 9-inch, or planted in the bench in good, rich soil, so that they will be well established for fall and winter flowering. The plants grown in pots are more prolific in flowering, and the size of the flowers can be maintained with liquid manure. Aphids should be kept down by fumigation, while the leaf miner is a very destructive insect if once firmly established, but persistent spraying with a strong nicotine solution will eradicate this pest.

Dahlias.

Although the dahlia is of very robust growth and comparatively easy of culture, yet it is one of the most tender plants and will not stand any cold treatment, for the slightest frost will check the growth and almost invariably kill the plant back. It is then, too early yet to plant the clumps except where all danger of late frosts has passed, but the eyes may start into growth during the warm days of May, so they should be kept in safe and warm quarters. Where the grower has a good, tight frame that is from storage and placed in the frame frost-proof the clumps can be taken and the tubers will grow plump and the eyes break ready for planting as soon as the weather grows warm enough. The place selected for growing them the coming season should, however, be prepared, the ground spaded deeply and, if not manured last fall, some well rotted manure spaded in. Many growers do not advise heavy manuring when the clumps are planted and, especially no fresh manure, much preferring to get a fair supply in the ground the previous fall, so that the rankness will be dissipated in the soil, for too strong manuring causes a rank growth and the plants do not bloom as early. With enough manure incorporated in the soil to produce a good hard growth, and not too soft, then mulch with manure when the buds begin to set, is the manner of some of the most successful growers. The young stock that was propagated from clumps started in March should now be good stockly little plants, and the last of the propagating should be done early in May to have good stock for June planting. Keep the young plants under safe cover and plunge the pots in soil to keep them moist and not require too frequent nor too heavy watering.

BLOME'S MOTHERS' DAY WINDOW CHICAGO.

National Publicity Campaign.

ARE WE DOING OUR PART?

The writer recently read an article by A. D. Lasker, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, who quoted the following: "Advertising is an American product and we are the only nation on the face of the earth that knows how to advertise. Advertising, as we understand it today, is a comparatively new product, no older perhaps than 25 years, and I place that limitation upon the life of present day advertising in order that I may gracefully say that I have had the wonderful opportunity of seeing it develop from mere type on white space to its present position."

The above paragraph struck a peculiar thought in my mind as applied to florists and floral advertising, except that we have developed our own in the few short years since our national publicity campaign started. It is masterful, in its entirety, the progress we have made during the past five years when we consider our own development in this direction from many standpoints, namely, when scanning our lists of contributing members, to note the names of many who originally felt it was an unnecessary essential to help the sale of flowers, but who now have acknowledged their error and contribute and boost also; then the type who realizes the importance of selling more flowers now and considers that of late years we have forgotten the gluts we used to hear about so frequently; also the number of campaigns started locally after noting the success of other centers, so all in all, it is most pleasing to note our progress in this direction.

Most of the florists' advertisements of today have a personality of their own as against the effort in the earlier days, and perhaps "Say It With Flowers" and all its contemporary sayings have helped our brethren to bolster up more courage to attain the present result. However, we are only on the first round of the possibilities that are in store for us.

We hope some day to treat our advertising with words of instruction—how to use and keep flowers; how to grow and keep flowering plants; how to properly remember friends and relatives when telegraphing flowers to distant cities, so that our future publicity will consist of more constructive activity in the sale of more flowers.

The improvement in the kind of advertising we are all doing today is so marked that our trade as a whole is benefiting daily in the successful strides made in this direction. The florist of the west benefits by the progress made by his brother in the east, as does the florist in the north by his brother in the south, thus the entire business profits in the general success.

Now the only feature that seems lacking in this entire march of progress is the need of more funds to keep our national programme activities on the move. We are doing very well for the amount we receive, but we should have a greater number of subscribers to our fund to show real results that will advance the still further sale of more flowers to the buying public by continually reminding them that every day is a flower-buying day. This can and will be accomplished when we all contribute to the national fund. So keep our good work moving and let each of us do our part in its maintenance.

HENRY PENN, Chairman.

Hail Damage at Iowa City.

The greenhouses of Prince's Flower Shop, Iowa City, Ia., sustained severe loss from hail, May 8, when three-fourths of the lights in its range at 920 Walnut street, comprising about 20,000 square feet of glass, were smashed. The storm lasted but 15 minutes and covered the ground with one and one-half inches of hail stones. The plants in the houses were practically ruined by the broken glass and hail and a heavy rain following greatly added to the damage. Carnations and other stock being grown outdoors were nearly all destroyed. The accompanying illustration shows the extent of the damage, the south side of the houses suffering more severely than the north side. The firm seemed to be in the center of the storm and was the only establishment in Iowa City to sustain heavy loss.

Horticultural Education.

Address of Peter Koster, of Bridgeton, N. J., Formerly of Boskoop, Holland, Before the Florists' Club of Philadelphia, Pa., March 7, 1922.

It was with a great deal of hesitation that I accepted the invitation to give this talk tonight. If it had not been that I had been urged by my good friends W. K. Harris and Mark Mills, who obstinately pretend that I can do this sort of thing, I would not have the courage to accept the invitation. So now if you go home sorry that you came here this evening do not blame me, but blame my two friends. Fortunately, they stand so high in your esteem that they can shoulder a little blame. When your esteemed secretary, Mr. Fancourt, asked me the subject of my address I had not made up my mind about what to talk, but I told him that I would talk on "Horticulture—Its Duties and Its Future." This is a title that embraces a great deal. However, I have always tried to be logical, so I will talk about the duties of horticulture. Then the very first question to encounter is: What opportunities does this country offer to get a horticultural education? How are we prepared to meet the duties which our beautiful profession imposes upon us? Where will we get the education which will enable us to look at horticulture from a different angle than dollars and cents? We can expect this only from those who have a thorough education in the business of horticulture. We can love a thing only if we know it well. We all know that if we do not love plants it is extremely difficult to raise them well.

Slowly and surely a taste is developing in this country for plants and flowers—a love for horticulture. I have seen very great changes in the 25 years I have been coming to this country. I think, gentlemen, that it is our duty to foster and further the love for plants in this country. We must have something in the future to devote our time to. More and more the people are obtaining shorter working hours. We must try to give the people something else than going to the "movies" and a desire to speed along the roads at the rate of 50 miles an hour. This can be done only by educating the people to love plants. Allow me to point out to you what other countries are doing in order to give the necessary horticultural instruction and education. Naturally I am speaking about Holland, the country with which I am most acquainted.

In the first place, there is elementary horticultural training in the winter courses, for which the state gives a subsidy. Each course extends over the winter semesters; the teaching is done by the state school teachers who have acquired the necessary qualifications. Qualified practical gardeners are also employed to do the teaching. Students may enter every two years and must not be under 15 years of age. The course comprises: (a) The elements of natural science, including plant diseases and pests; (b) Manure, soils, treatment and improvement of the ground; (c) Forest culture, vegetable and flower culture, arboriculture and horticultural drawing.

INSTRUCTION ADAPTED TO LOCALITY.

As far as possible the instruction is adapted to the requirements of the particular kind of gardening in the locality. In 1914 there were 132 winter courses in the country and there were 12 horticultural teachers appointed by the state, who have to travel all over the country and give advice on any subject without extra charge. They deliver lectures, conduct experiments and in general further the interests of horticulture. Besides these courses there are special courses for adults. In 1914 there were 72 of these courses, all with the state subsidy.

Secondary training in horticulture is given in five horticultural colleges, one in Aalsmeer (flowers), Boskoop (nurseries), Lisse (bulbs), Naaldwyk (fruits), Hoorn (vegetables) and at the horticultural college at Frederiksoord. The object of these colleges is to give the necessary horticultural education to young gardeners, florists, nurserymen, etc. The schools are divided into two classes and the period of instruction covers two winter semesters, from October to April. In the summer months these young men work with their various employers. In this way almost everybody can afford to attend these colleges. The colleges are surrounded by more or less extensive grounds where the students receive practical instruction and where experiments are made.

Higher horticultural education is given in the high school for agriculture, horticulture and forestry at Wageningen. This is a three-year course and embraces physics, meteorology, plant physiology, mineralogy and soils, chemistry, agricultural chemistry, botanical terminology, botany, drawing, surveying, arboriculture, fruit growing, vegetable and flower culture, civil law and practical work. Besides all this very valuable knowledge, foreign languages are taught, which is a great assistance to our horticultural education as it enables us to read horticultural papers in foreign languages. It also prepares young men for their extensive travels in foreign countries where they generally go after learning their trade at home.

It is not only in Holland that this horticultural education is carried on. It is the same in England, Germany, Belgium and France. Wherever one travels, visiting nurseries, either Veitch's, Spath's, Pfitzer's, Van Houtte's, Peynser's, Croux & Son's, or Le-moines, one is sure to find one or more Hollanders working there, studying other methods of working and cultivating friendships which for years to come will be beneficial to their lives and to their profession.

That sometimes the knowledge of a foreign language is directly responsible for horticultural gains is illustrated by the way Koster's blue spruce was found. Father, who was a great, great grandson of a nurseryman very soon understood that in order to make Boskoop a horticultural center we did need a larger area than Holland to sell our products, and father did all he could to induce the government to devote time and money to horticulture and to the teaching of foreign languages. He, himself, had acquired through self study a considerable knowledge of English, French and German. One day, reading in the Revue Horticole, father saw the description of a beautiful blue spruce of the Rocky mountains and read that the botanical garden in Zurich had received seeds of some of the finest specimens. Immediately father wrote for seeds; he received some and one of the seedlings was the blue spruce which is now universally known as Koster's Blue. If father had not been able to read French would the plant have come to life? Would others have seen the great beauty of this plant and would it have been propagated? This is not the only instance. Other plants have been propagated and described in foreign papers which otherwise would perhaps have disappeared unnoticed, or a lonely plant has been found in some botanical garden.

Coming back to the horticultural education in Holland I need not explain how a vast army of well trained horticulturists create a horticultural penetration of the whole people; all buy plants and flowers, not because it is the fashion, but because they love them; they do not buy them at special occasions only, they buy them at Christmas and Easter, but also at every other time of the year and there is scarcely a house where there are no flowers before the window at every season of the year. Nearly every home has its little garden; flowers adorn the farmhouses in the country and the gardens of the rich contain valuable collections of plants which are ably taken care of. I need not say that such a condition creates a very large demand for plants and flowers; that not only the larger florists do a good business but also the smaller florists make a decent living.

In the schools a spirit of competition in growing flowers is created and the schools have many exhibitions of flowering plants which embue the youngsters with a love of plants and flowers. Who is able to grow best? and imagine the pride of the little girl from poor parents bringing in a beautiful plant and winning the first prize. I think it is our duty to help to develop this love for flowers and show each and all people what can be done and how they make our life richer, how trees and shrubbery make our homes more attractive.

Conditions have very much improved since I came to this country first, 30 years ago, but we are not doing enough. Let our horticultural societies get busy and our women's clubs create funds to appoint, let me call them horticultural preachers, who, armed with a great love for plants and lantern slides go out and show the people, not the "400," what can be accomplished with little expense and labor. Show them how the board fences may be replaced by well kept hedges; how a few climbing roses will improve the appearance of their home; how a few beds of inexpensive bulbs or some perennials will make their homes attractive, and then watch how their surroundings will make for a happier life. We all know that in these days there is a great deal of dissatisfaction everywhere. People are no longer contented. We must try and bring them something that will interest them. In the two years I have been in this country I have become acquainted with different classes of people and I have found out that in many cases people do not plant for the simple reason they do not know how to plant.

I have seen attempts to beautify the surroundings, but mainly through lack of knowledge the attempt was a failure; how such failures keep others from beautifying needs no illustration.

AROUSING PUBLIC INTEREST.

An excellent speech was lately made by Clarence Siebenthaler, of Dayton, O., explaining more eloquently and in better English than I am able to that we must awake the vast multitudes to the realization of the needs of plants and flowers and shrubs; we must create in the mind of everybody a desire to improve themselves, their properties and their communities. This cannot be done by lectures before horticultural clubs and societies. Those present there do not need to be awakened. It is the daily newspaper, the small local paper which must take this task to heart and this idea has been very ably taken up by the publicity campaign of the American Association of Nurserymen.

In not less than 4,000 newspapers seasonable articles appear on planting and beautifying the home, articles ably written by F. P. Rockwell, which will greatly contribute to the development of horticulture. These articles improve every paper they are printed in. Let us hope that in a few years they will replace the space now devoted to all kinds of subjects which should not even be mentioned in a newspaper at all.

The other day a well known newspaper owner asked me to advertise our products in their publication, stating they were entitled to our advertisements because they were printing the articles of the market development. I wrote back that in publishing Mr. Rockwell's articles they helped to make better citizens and that in this way they were already immensely benefitted more than the financial gain which our advertisement could bring to them.

STREET TREES LACK CARE.

One of the saddest features of the lack of horticultural training is the condition the trees are in, lining the streets of the cities. The authorities in charge evidently do not see the need of pruning when the trees are young, and many trees could still be saved if they were treated right. If I compare the almost loving care which is bestowed upon the trees in foreign cities, how they are summer and winter pruned, until such time as they can take care of themselves, I feel really sorry for their American brothers and sisters, which once planted do not get any care thereafter.

Many of you have seen the beautiful elms lining the streets in Holland; the linden in Berlin, the planes in London, the horse chestnuts in Paris all well shaped, symmetrical trees, stems the same height, forming beautiful avenues, a sight to behold. Would we not all gladly pay a couple of dollars more taxes if we could have the same in this country? Here again it is the lack of horticultural knowledge and trained help. This lack of trained help is also seen in the way the shrubs are pruned in private gardens; in city squares and thousands of roses only bring insignificant flowers because they are not treated correctly.

Now, what is the remedy for all this? Horticultural instruction. We must demand that horticulture be taught in schools and high schools and that a number of horticultural colleges be established. We must ask everybody to help in this movement, the state and the federal government, and if I am not mistaken we may expect to accomplish something in the future. We are scrapping battleships, we are limiting the building of fortifications; must we not build something else instead? We must build up the love for the country, the love for the land, the love for our homes, that love which prompts a man to stay on his own property, however small and poor it may seem to others; the property where he saw his children born, the property where he planted the trees when he was young, where he raises his flowers. If we assist in this up-building we will accomplish more, create more patriotism than ever warships or armies will accomplish. It is this love for a country which makes the country safe, makes it unconquerable.

There is no nobler movement imaginable than to enable our citizens to understand nature and through that understanding admire nature. We will be repaid a thousand fold, we will sow the seeds of happiness broadcast. Such can be the influence of horticulture!

The future of horticulture? The horticulture seen from the angle of the nurseryman, there will be a bountiful future; there will be an unequalled demand for all we can produce. After educating the public will not be as easily satisfied as it is today; it will require quality more than ever, and besides quality it will require variety.

We will also have to grow more of our beautiful indigenous plants; we will have to go to the Arnold Arboretum, to the Missouri Botanic gardens, open our eyes and propagate! We must try to cultivate in this country nurseries like Veitch's, like van Houtte's, Spath's and Lemoine's, all horticultural meccas.

What is accomplished in America today with roses shows that we can create valuable novelties in this country, and let us never forget that horticulture is an international profession, let us keep closely in touch with what is done across the water. If we follow this course we will reap results.

OBITUARY.

William Mathews.

It is with deep regret that we announce the recent death of William Mathews, well known florist of Utica, N. Y., age 80 years. He was born at Taunton, Somersetshire, Eng., and in early manhood embarked in the florist business. When 27 years old Mr. Mathews came to the United States making his residence at Utica. He was employed for several years by Isaac Whiffen, Geo. Ellison, Lewis Lawrence and other florists of that city. Deciding to engage in business for himself, Mr. Mathews erected a range of greenhouses at 939 York street, in 1873, which he conducted until the time of his death.

Mr. Mathews made a specialty of orchids and achieved considerable success as an expert grower. For many years he was a frequent contributor to THE AMERICAN FLORIST, writing most instructively on this plant. He also had many houses devoted to carnations and at one time grew grapes extensively in addition to his regular business, but afterward discontinued their production.

Mr. Mathews is survived by his widow, four sons and two daughters, two of the sons, Harry S. and Charles M. Mathews, having been associated in the business.

John Loeser.

John Loeser, with the Joseph Foerster Co., Chicago, died at his home at 2053 North Mozart street, Wednesday, May 17, from pneumonia. He was 35 years old and was born in St. Paul, Minn., coming to this city at an early age. He was employed at the Western Union Telegraph Co. and later joined the sales force of Peter Reinberg. He has been in the employ of the Joseph Foerster Co. for many years and was on duty up to the time he was taken sick a couple of weeks ago. "Lizzie," as he was best known to the trade, was an obliging, good natured fellow, whose smiling countenance will be missed in the wholesale market.

The funeral will be held May 20 at 9:30 a. m. from the home at 2053 North Mozart street to St. Sylvester's church, with interment at St. Joseph's cemetery. He is survived by his wife and daughter Margaret, who have the sympathy of the trade in their hour of sorrow.

Max Ringier.

Max Ringier, brother of the late Arnold Ringier, died at Chicago on the evening of May 16 after being confined to the hospital for several months. He spent the greater part of his life in the florist business, with many years in the local market, and was well known to the trade. He was born in Switzerland and was about 45 years old. Arrangements are being made for the funeral as we are going to press and efforts are being made to locate his relatives. He is survived by a wife and several children.

Fred H. Hunter.

The death, May 3, of Fred H. Hunter, of the Hunter Seed Co., San Francisco, Calif., noted in last week's issue, page 860, has removed another well known figure in the Pacific Coast seed trade. He was formerly with the Germain Seed Co., Los Angeles, but in later years devoted his attention to growing and wholesaling seeds. He was born at Walla Walla, Wash., in 1877 and leaves a widow and two small children.

PRESIDENT BURRAGE, of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, made a noteworthy address against Plant Quarantine No. 37, as administered, during the Washington conference this week.

Personal.

Dr. C. L. Marlatt, of the Federal Horticultural Board, Washington, D. C., will go to California for a rest after the quarantine conference.

Prof. Arno Nehrling, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., sailed on the S. S. Mauretania, May 16, on a European tour.

John Watson, the well known nurseryman, is now secretary of a Rochester, N. Y. printing concern.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, Ind., will spend a 10-day vacation trip in the east.

American Iris Society.

We are in receipt of the premium list for the eastern exhibition of the American Iris Society, to be held in the Museum building, Bronx Park, New York, June 3-4. The show will be held a week earlier or later if the season is abnormal. Copies of the premium list may be had on application to Mrs. George V. Nash, New York Botanic Garden, Bronx Park, New York.

Rock Island Exposition.

The Trans-Mississippi exposition and Rock Island, Ill., pageant of progress will be held in that city June 24-July 4, inclusive. Prominent among the attractions will be a flower show, agricultural exhibition, pure food displays, manufacturers' section, automobile show and many other features. The space allotted to the flower show, in the floor plan, is very small. Further particulars may be obtained by addressing Arthur Davis, Director-General Trans-Mississippi Exposition, Rock Island Chamber of Commerce, Rock Island, Ill.

National Flower Again.

Washington, D. C.—Representative Taylor, of New Jersey, has introduced a bill in the house of representatives providing for the adoption of the Mountain laurel as the official national flower of the United States. Efforts to have such legislation adopted by congress has been made for a number of years but up to the present time little or no consideration has been given the matter. A number of flowers have been similarly suggested but thus far the Mountain laurel seems to have the most friends. Under the terms of the Taylor bill it would be included in the decorations incident to all official functions in the United States or wherever a representative of the American government is present.

Mothers' Day Business.

The Mothers' Day business shows a substantial gain in all sections notwithstanding the many influences which threaten its existence. While the orders were more numerous than last year, in most cases it is believed the money value will not greatly exceed that of 1921. The supply of stock, plants as well as cut flowers, was equal to the demand, except of course in the case of carnations, which as usual were short at some points. Many cold storage or "pickled" carnations went to loss in the hands of the dealers, and most of these flowers could have been sold at fair prices when cut eight to 10 days previous.

There is considerable complaint of the small size of many of the telegraph orders, most of which run $2 to $3 in value and some less than that.

Giganteum Lilies in Summer.

The forcing of cold storage giganteum lilies during the hot summer months has not been attended of late with success, so many of the bulbs coming blind or carrying but one or two flowers. It is an old axiom, well known to gardeners, that there must be roots before foliage, or disaster follows. Bulbs from cold storage during midsummer when potted and placed in a temperature of 80 or 90 degrees will start a top growth before there are sufficient roots to support it, which is the cause of so many bulbs coming blind as they do not receive the necessary nourishment to produce the flowers.

Every grower of L. giganteum for a summer crop should start his bulbs in a temperature of not over 60 degrees. A cold room fitted up with double board sides, as used for refrigerators, to hold quite a lot of freshly potted bulbs which can be piled in a number of layers, one on top of the other, will in this or even a lower temperature start a root action considerably in advance of the foliage. When after two or three weeks, these plants are brought out into the greenhouse they will be found to be in much better condition to stand the extreme heat as the roots are there ready for the demands made upon them. It will be necessary to use ice to get the temperature down in the cold room but the cost will be trifling compared to the advantage gained.

New York to Kansas City.

The transportation committee of the New York Florists' Club under the chairmanship of Paul Rigo, has accepted the itinerary in connection with this journey to Kansas City and return this coming August, as submitted by the Lackawanna railroad.

Briefly, the party, which is fully hoped to be 100 strong, will leave New York, Sunday, August 13, for Chicago, where a stopover will be made to take in the famous Lake Shore drive and other principal points of interest, returning to the Hotel La Salle for dinner. Departure will be made from Chicago that evening and Kansas City reached on the morning of Tuesday, August 15. While in Kansas City during the Society of American Florists' convention, August 15-17, and the day following, hotel accommodations and three meals per day will be provided. On the afternoon of August 18 the party will leave Kansas City, arriving in St. Paul, Minn., Saturday morning, where points of interest in the Twin Cities will be viewed, leaving St. Paul in the afternoon and arriving at Duluth, Minn., on the evening of August 19.

The Great Lakes steamer trip will commence Saturday night and continue through to Wednesday morning. This sail through the lakes provides the most enjoyable feature of the trip and undoubtedly will prove the greatest incentive to many. Arriving at Buffalo, N. Y., Wednesday, August 23, special cars will be waiting to whisk the party to Niagara Falls where lunch will be provided at the Hotel Imperial. A tour over the Great Gorge route will be made in the afternoon returning to hotel for dinner. At 7 p. m. the party will start for home, arriving in New York Thursday morning, August 24, at 8 o'clock. Breakfast will be provided for in the Hoboken terminal.

The cost covering all transportation, lower berths on Pullmans and outside staterooms on boat, also three meals per day, will be $220.

All those intending to go, please notify Chairman Paul Rigo, c/o Henshaw Floral Co., 35 W. Eighteenth street, New York. The earlier the reservation, the choicer the accommodation.

HOLIDAY TRADE SATISFACTORY TO ALL.

Mothers' Day has passed and the trade is in a happy frame of mind, for it exceeded all expectations and in some instances will rival Easter in dollars and cents. And it is more surprising in the fact that there was no effort made by the trade to advertise the day except by a few individual firms. The weather was ideal, which, of course, helped to make the occasion a success. More plants could have been sold, but the growers did not have much to offer, due to the fact that it was so close to Easter that they did not have enough time to prepare for it. The carnation as usual was the favorite flower, but not to such an extent as in former years, and it looks as if the call would decrease in years to come so that it would be more equally divided among all the flowers. But that is up to the florists themselves to educate the public that any flower will do and that is going to take time. As stated before, the carnation was mostly in demand and fresh stock brought $15 per 100. More could have been realized, as some retailers bid up the price hoping to get more, but the wholesale houses stopped at $15 and divided up what they had among their regular customers. Of course there was a lot of stock shipped in that had been held too long and was sleepy on arrival which did not bring anywhere near top values. Roses were next in demand and there were plenty for everyone. At the end there were a few fancy ones that had to be moved at a reduced price, but the number was small. In spite of the warm weather the quality was never better and no pickled stock was in evidence. Prices ran all the way from $8 to $35 per 100 according to variety and length of stem. American Beauty was not much in demand except in the shorter lengths. Peonies came in at the right time to fill in the carnation shortage and more were moved this Mothers' Day than ever before. With few exceptions they arrived in good shape and sold at $10 to $15 per 100. Snapdragon was also plentiful, especially in the shorter lengths, which could be sold cheap and proved very popular. Sweet peas were good and bad. The good ones brought a satisfactory price, but the poor ones had to be jobbed and sold at any figure. The demand for Easter and calla lilies was light, which was just as well, as the quality was not of the best, callas in particular showing the effects of the warm weather. Lily of the valley proved a disappointment, as it was in competition with a large crop of outdoor stock which could be sold much cheaper than the greenhouse stock.

Yellow daisies were popular and filled in nicely for those who wanted something cheap. Taking it all in all, it was a very satisfactory holiday, but in future years the florists will have to watch that other lines do not steal the day from under their noses, as the candy people advertised extensively and from all reports did a large business and the electric goods firms advertised and sold many sweepers and irons and other useful items to make mother's work lighter, so it behooves us all to keep it before the public that flowers are a Mothers' Day necessity regardless of anything else which they decide to buy.

TRADE EXCEEDS FORMER YEARS.

Never in the history of this market has there been such a call for cut flowers and plants as was the case this Mothers' Day. The supply just did meet the demand and all kinds of stock went rapidly at good prices. Many retail shops were compelled to increase their sales forces, one concern taking on 20 temporary employees. Sunday deliveries were huge and all available trucks were kept busy. The cut flower demand exceeded somewhat the call for pot plants. Roses seemed to be the best seller in the former class, while ferns led in the latter, hydrangeas and Lorraine begonias closely following. Hanging baskets filled either with ferns or bedding plants were easily disposed of. Many florists had special Mothers' Day boxes, made up of roses, carnations, sweet peas, daisies, etc., which sold at $2 to $7 each. In individual items roses brought $5 per dozen and up at retail, Columbia, Premier, Milady, Mrs. Chas. Russell, Sunburst, Ophelia, Butterfly, Mrs. Aaron Ward and White Killarney going rapidly. Carnations had second place in popularity and sold up closely at good prices. Lily of the valley and orchids were hard to sell. The call for gladioli, delphiniums, snapdragons, yellow daisies, sweet peas, calendulas and double larkspurs was all that could be desired. Cut ferns, adiantums, Asparagus plumosus and A. Sprengeri moved well, as did huckleberry, coontie leaves, galax and leucothoe.

NOTES.

"We were so rushed toward the end of the week that we found it necessary to greatly increase our sales force," was the good word at Grimm & Gorley's.

The St. Louis Wholesale Cut Flower Co. enjoyed an exceptionally good holiday business, a fine supply of stock cleaning up early Saturday.

Mullanphy Florists were well pleased with the fine trade for Mothers' Day.

EXCELLENT CALL FOR CARNATIONS.

Prices at the opening this week showed a slight increase and kept climbing until the top was reached Friday on all stock except carnations. They carried their strength through to the close on Saturday night, May 13. Roses, sweet peas and all other stock reacted slightly after May 12. The reason seems to be that stock was much more plentiful this year than last for Mothers' Day. Carnations brought 6 to 8 cents Monday and went to 12 and 15 cents toward the close of the week. Every carnation cleaned up and still the call continued. Roses did fairly well, though they did not come up to expectations. Snapdragons were the real glut, selling anywhere from three to 12 cents on a limited amount, the bulk of them going to street boys. General business was not as brisk as a year ago. There was considerably more stock on the market this year, but the call was not there except for carnations.

STOCK CONTINUES IN GOOD DEMAND.

Trade continues good. In addition to peonies, which are arriving in quantity, there are gladioli coming in from the far south, proving very popular at $3 per dozen retail. Roses are $4 to $8 per dozen, while sweet peas are obtainable at $4 per 100. There was a great supply of all kinds of stock for Mothers' Day. This event has become one of the best floral holidays in the state and to help give the day added emphasis, Governor Alfred A. Taylor issued a stirring proclamation for the observance of the beautiful custom. He called attention to the fact that the general assembly of Tennessee had by an act set aside the second Sunday in May to pay tribute to the patient, loving mother, now departed from among us and to honor and reverence those left with us. At this writing, May 12, the trade has booked many orders for Mothers' Day and the outlook is for a heavy business. Many of the Sunday schools will distribute carnations, both white and colored, which will not interfere with the sale in the shops. The school commencement exercises have started, and as there are a great number of institutions in this city, a fine demand for flowers for these occasions will continue until late in June. Social activities are in full swing which is causing a great deal of business, especially in corsage flowers. Street vendors are finding a ready sale for peonies at $1 per dozen, or 10 cents each, all grown in private gardens throughout the city. M. C. D.

HOLIDAY DEMAND GREATER THAN A YEAR AGO.

As usual for Mothers' Day the carnation supply was far below the demand, all being cleaned up by 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon. Roses were second in popularity. Lily of the valley and lilies, however, moved slowly. The call for snapdragons was only fair, but peonies went exceptionally well. A few hydrangea and begonia plants were obtainable. The prices received for individual items showed no reduction when compared to 1921 values, but the total volume of stock sold was a great deal larger. PAUL RICHMOND.

MOTHERS' DAY TRADE MAKES RECORD.

Mothers' Day has made a record for the business of that event in this city. Exact figures are not available but it is safe to say that the volume of sales showed a gain of from 10 to 20 per cent over 1921. Carnations still lead in popularity, good stock being cleaned up early, the demand turning to roses, peonies, snapdragons, calendulas, sweet peas, daisies and irises in the order named. Flowering plants of hydrangeas, fuchsias, lilies, perlagoniums, etc., sold well, even collections of bedding plants being disposed of. Low and medium priced plant baskets proved popular. The average value of each purchase was lower than at Easter or Christmas but everyone was a possible customer and advertising effort could hardly be misplaced. Whether conditions were ideal for the day. Spring business is most satisfactory bedding stock moving well. Vase and box plants are good sellers.

Chas. P. Mueller and W. H. Culp & Co., each had special wires and telegraph operators in their stores to handle the telegraph orders and were much pleased with the results.

HEAVY MOTHERS' DAY TRADE.

The demand for stock for Mothers' Day was exceptionally heavy and the sales in most cases were equal to or greater than those of 1921, not on account of the high prices, but more to the large supply handled. Stock was never so plentiful for the occasion as it was this year, owing to the hot weather, and it kept coming in faster than it could be moved, consequently the tables were overloaded with stock at all times. Good stock was in strong demand and cleaned up nicely, but the supply of inferior flowers was so great that the averages were low and disappointing to the growers, although the extra supply cut made up the difference in price and the checks received in reality represented more money than last year. Carnations were in large supply and fancy stock held up close to the advertised quotations and many inferior blooms were jobbed off at bargain prices or dumped. Roses were in heavy demand up to the last minute and first class stock found ready buyers at all times. Sweet peas arrived in poor condition, and while some stock brought good prices, the street peddlers had no trouble in securing all they needed at 10 cents and 15 cents per bunch in small quantities and as low as a nickel in large lots. Peony offerings were heavy and sold at prices ranging from two to 15 cents each, according to quality. Lily of the valley was in good demand and so were orchids and gardenias. Lilacs, tulips, daisies, snapdragons, irises, calendulas, lilies, callas, feverfew, stocks, lupines, jonquils and other miscellaneous stock was in heavy supply and considerable trouble was experienced in moving some of the items mentioned. The shipping trade was heavy and the city demand was very strong, but the sales to the public were not as large as the retailers expected, due probably to the unfavorable and uncalled for publicity in the daily newspapers. The department stores had special sales May 13, when roses were sold as low as 39 cents per dozen and other flowers in proportion, which were in line with those of the street peddlers and one-day stands. Considering the weather and the heavy supply of stock, including a good proportion of inferior flowers, and the general conditions, the Mothers' Day business was greater than anyone expected, and while the average in general dropped away below expectations, no one should complain, for the trade as a whole did remarkably well under such trying conditions.

but taken as a whole they were away below those of 1921, consequently the buying public was satisfied and no one had to be turned away for there was plenty of stock of some kind to meet the purse of all the customers. Stock as a whole suffered from the hot weather, but there were plenty of good flowers available for those willing to pay the price, and while some objected to the street peddlers and department stores handling stock for this occasion, the majority had their hands full to look after their own trade and were short of help to do that. Roses, carnations, peonies and gladioli were easily the best sellers, but miscellaneous stock, especially lily of the valley and sweet peas, had a heavy call and everyone cleaned up completely in practically all lines judging from the heavy buying on the market the following Monday. Prices were lower, but the sales were more numerous and the receipts greater is the general report on what was probably the heaviest Mothers' Day the city ever experienced.

NOTES.

Zech & Mann had a big Mothers' Day business and were ably assisted by Matt Mann during the rush. The shipping trade was heavy at this establishment and the city demand was very satisfactory. Otto Goerisch bumped his head on the door of the ice-box which accounts for the bandages he is wearing this week.

Chas. Cowdery, foreman for Wietor Bros. for many years, and family leave this week for Roanoke, Va., where he will enter the employ of Fallon, the Florist. Mr. Cowdery made a large number of friends during his connection with Wietor Bros. who wish him every success in his new location.

Joe Bieher will be on the job at A. I. Simmons' store all summer and will not leave for Point Place, O., as in former years, having disposed of his interests there some time ago. He is one of the old timers, but carries his age well and is as active as a fellow in the thirties.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are more than pleased with their business for Mothers' Day, when the sales were greater than those of last year. Mr. Vaughan spends his spare time cutting the grass on his lawn at his home in McHenry.

Miss Margaret and Nicholas Rozakles left for Greece last week, where they will attend school at Athens. They are children of George Rozakles, the good natured florist with an appetite.

Owing to summer heat the past week, amateur planters are insisting an immediate delivery of tomato and like tender plants as well as all flowering plants.

Howard A. Muir, successor to the Washington Park Flower Shop, 558 East Sixty-third street, reports business as good with a brisk Mothers' Day trade.

I. Bayersdorfer, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia and New York, had an exhibit of supplies at the Palmer house this week.

Erne & Co. supplied their trade with Cape Jasmine in addition to a complete line of all other stock for Mothers' Day.

Harry Papworth, of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co., Ltd., New Orleans, La., was a visitor last week.

Mrs. Charles Bond, of Naperville, will sail for Switzerland July 1, via Montreal, to visit her mother.

J. A. Karins, representing Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., called on the trade here last week.

Cliff Pruner returned last week from another business trip through the southwest.

John Poehlmann celebrated his twenty-seventh birthday, May 14.

New pickings of bouquet green are coming in.

Fred Longren is serving on the jury.

ALL OTHER FLOWERS IN SEASON

STORE OPEN ALL DAY SUNDAY, MAY 28th, TO SHIP FLOWERS.

The Mothers' Day celebration of the Chicago Lodge of Elks, one of the big days of the year for the organization, took place in Woods' theater May 14 at 3 p. m. Dr. J. H. Carpenter was chairman of the committee in charge and William J. Sinek, exalted ruler, presided. He was assisted by the other officers. Every person attending was presented with a flower to wear in honor of mother.

The city council made a vigorous attack on the Mothers' Day price of flowers, but the Allied Florists' Association, under the guidance of John Michelsen, did good work in having the wild statements in the press and elsewhere modified. The association claims to have secured free flower advertising in the newspapers during the first half of May to the value of upwards of $11,000.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. never had such a heavy supply of cut flowers to offer for Mothers' Day as this year, but the force at the city salesrooms was equal to the occasion and extra shipments were called in on Sunday to take care of the late orders. The total sales were away ahead of those of the same period of 1921.

The Joseph Foerster Co. enjoyed the best Mothers' Day trade on record and moved a large quantity of stock for this occasion. Stock of every description was to be had in quantity at their establishment but the tables and ice-boxes were cleared when the rush was over.

Gust. Alles and Charles Drissler will join the staff at Peter Reinberg, Inc., after they are through with Wietor Bros. whom they have served so faithfully in the past. Wietor Bros. are retiring from business, further particulars of which will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Bassett & Washburn's sales for Mothers' Day exceeded all expectations and resulted in a complete clean-up of stock. The shipping demand was exceptionally heavy and many orders for roses had to be refused in order to take care of their regular customers.

Edgar Winterson and Mickey Krauss are taking good care of all of the E. F. Winterson Co.'s customers while the genial wholesaler is looking after his farm at Highland Park. A large shipment of magnolia leaves was distributed this week.

The Chicago Flower Growers' Association had a brisk Mothers' Day business and handled a large quantity of peonies in addition to its regular line of stock. Both their city and shipping trade were good.

Tonner's report a heavy Mothers' Day demand with a strong call for peonies and sweet peas which this concern handled in quantity. The total sales are away ahead of those of the same period of 1921.

Henry M. Hirsch, 833 East Forty-sixth street, reports a very satisfactory Mothers' Day trade. He sends out a special plugger for all the holidays and his one last week was most appropriate for the occasion.

The E. C. Amling Co. is strong on peonies in addition to a large and complete supply of all other stock. This firm's Mothers' day business was heavy and exceeded all expectations.

Peter Reinberg, Inc., had a splendid Mothers' Day business and the boys at the store were on the job early and late taking care of the orders as fast as they came in.

The John Kruchten Co. had a splendid supply of peonies for its customers for Mothers' Day including some of the finest Felix Crousse in the market.

The J. A. Budlong Co. enjoyed a brisk Mothers' Day business with a heavy call for stock from out-of-town points and a very satisfactory city trade.

John Loeser, with the Joseph Foerster Co., died May 17 from pneumonia, an account of which appears in the obituary column this week.

Kennicott Bros. Co. had a large supply of peonies from Carbondale and Villa Ridge for Mothers' Day in addition to its regular line.

The A. L. Randall Co. will be on deck with peonies in heavy supply for Memorial Day and is busy storing same for this occasion.

George Reinberg's sales for Mothers' Day were good and kept Rob Northam and his assistants busy getting out the orders.

Weiland-Reich Co. had its biggest Mothers' Day trade this year and are more than pleased with the total sales.

It is rumored that Wietor Bros.' store will be occupied by one of the Gannons when they are ready to vacate.

Max Ringier died on the evening of May 17, an account of which appears in the obituary column this week.

A. T. Pyfer & Co. had a fine Mothers' Day business, with fancy stock cleaning up early at good prices.

D. E. Freres Co. will handle an additional supply of stock June 1.

Visitors: J. W. Davis, Davenport, Ia.; O. K. Owens, Terre Haute, Ind.

DAYTONA, FLA.—Currey the Florist, of De Land, Fla., has purchased the Daytona Cut Flower Shop from L. F. Darnell, Cleveland, O. Mr. Currey will redecorate the establishment, opening for the autumn season, October next.

Columbus, O.

HOLIDAY TRADE SATISFACTORY.

Florists experienced a good trade for Mothers' Day. All of the retailers and a big majority of the growers were well pleased with the demand, although prices were not advanced to any extent. Carnations were exhausted by noon Saturday and the call was then switched to roses, snapdragons and sweet peas. The supply of roses was quite good and the quality excellent, the principal varieties being Premier,

Columbia, Sunburst and Butterfly. Prices varied from $4 to $10 per dozen. The supply of snapdragons at $2 to $5 per dozen was sufficient to fill all orders. Sweet peas brought $1.50 to $2.50 per bunch and business in that variety was large. Lily of the valley were plentiful. Plants were in good demand. Easter lilies and hydrangeas constituting the bulk of the offerings. Funeral work has been rather brisk. The next milestone in the journey is Memorial Day, which is becoming better as the years go by.

IRIS SHOW MAY 20-21.

The second annual exhibit of the local Iris Society will be held at the Ohio State university in the Archaeological museum, May 20-21. The hours of the exhibit will be from 11 a. m. to 10 p. m. The show will be for all iris growers, either amateur or commercial, whether members of the society or not. A number of exhibits from out of town are expected. The society now has 48 members and is growing constantly. No admission will be charged for the show. Mrs. J. C. Arbuckle of Shepard is presi-

NOTES.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. had an excellent window display which attracted a good deal of attention, all of the seasonable flowers, including carnations, roses, snapdragons and sweet peas, being exhibited previous to the holiday.

Herman Kropp, of the Neil House Flower Shop spent Saturday before Mothers' Day filling orders. Mr. Kropp is also head of the Cottage Rose Gardens, which produce a high quality of roses.

J. T. Ludwig, the florist at 82 North High street, had an extra good trade in carnations and roses previous to Mothers' Day. In fact the supply of carnations was soon exhausted.

The Mission Inn, floral department, 116 South High street, had an excellent trade previous to the holiday, roses and carnations being the best features.

A fine demand for all cut flowers and plants was experienced by C. E. Wagner & Co. J. W. L.

Evansville, Ind.

VOLUME OF SALES EQUALS FORMER YEARS.

Trade during the past week has been fairly active, with funeral and wedding work holding up well. A great many weddings have been scheduled for the month of June. Mothers' Day found the local dealers unusually busy and the volume of trade reported was as large if not greater than last year. Dealers report that the supply was equal to the demand and prices held firm. Some dealers reported a slight increase in the price of carnations, but there was little or no change in values of other stock. Memorial Day is expected to find the trade in this city and vicinity with fairly large stocks on hand to supply the demand. Dealers say that taken as a whole this year has shown a little increase over the trade last year. Thus far the florists have not been handicapped for coal since the starting of the miners' strike on April 1. The large coal mines in western and northern Kentucky are being operated steadily and it is estimated that more than 700 carloads are shipped from that section daily, through this city, for Chicago and the northwest. A great many of the florists here have liberal supplies of coal in store.

DR. ADAM J. KNAPP, PEONY SPECIALIST.

Dr. Adam J. Knapp, of this city, accredited with being one of the largest peony growers in the United States, is still at Dyersburg, Tenn., where he owns a large peony farm and where he went three weeks ago to superintend the cutting of the crop in time for Mothers' Day. The crop was large this year and he took one or two assistants with him from here. Besides the Tennessee peony farm Dr. Knapp has a farm in North Carolina. Crops from these farms are earlier than that from his local place at DeGonia, being ready for the Mothers' Day market. The local crop is shipped to Chicago for the Memorial Day market. Last year the peony crop was practically a failure as a blasting wind ruined the flowers in the bud. The output was only about one-third of normal and meant the loss of a small fortune to Dr. Knapp.

Mrs. E. A. Torrance, who is also a peony grower, is busy cutting and shipping her crop to Chicago. Her farm is located near Inglefield. W. B. C.

LARGEST MOTHERS' DAY TRADE EXPERIENCED.

The feature of the past week was of course the demand for Mothers' Day. The weather was most auspicious, bright and sunny each day but cool, ideal conditions for flower production. There were flowers and plenty of them from Monday morning until Saturday night. During the first half of the week stocks of all kinds piled up except carnations, which were also obtainable but in limited quantities at advanced prices. There was much speculation as to the call for the holiday; it seemed to be in the air that it would be much larger than usual and some of the retailers actually did go to the trouble of putting in Mothers' Day window decorations, but these were comparatively few and some of the attempts very feeble. Monday and Tuesday the market was very flat, Wednesday it brightened up a bit, Thursday, with the commencement of the shipping orders, it gathered force, while Friday proved to be the largest Mothers' Day out-of-town demand ever experienced in this market. This, together with the local sales for Friday and Saturday, taxed the facilities of the wholesale houses to the utmost, particularly in the distribution of white carnations, which were sold up all the time and of which as usual, there were not nearly enough for the demand. Fifteen dollars per 100 was the standard price with a few specials at $20. Other colors brought $10. Ward in some cases bringing $15. Very little if any stock was received from New York city, as the early quotations there were $18 per 100. Later it was reported that the retailers in that city would not handle them and early Saturday they were offered to our wholesalers at very attractive values but too late to be brought over except on a gamble. Roses sold up clean at about 20 per cent over last week's prices, except for whites, which were in great demand and jumped 50 per cent. Specials in roses ran as high as $20. Ten to 12-in. stems started at six cents, whites were from 6 to 15 cents. Sweet peas were a quantity flower of very good quality though rather short stemmed, 75 cents to $1.50 per 100 being the price and many thousands were disposed of at these figures. There were good blocks of southern peonies, both white and pink, that met a fair call at from 12 to 15 cents. Snap-dragon was offered by the wagonload of very good quality. It sold from 60 cents to $1.50 per dozen. Southern gladioli had accumulated and did not look as inviting. Miniatures sold slowly at $6. Easter lilies and callas were plentiful and were not particularly in demand; prices ran from $8 to $15 per 100. Yellow and white daisies sold well at $2. Good outside lily of the valley had a cleanup at $2 to $3. Cattleyas sold up closely at $1 to $1.25. There was very little effort to exploit plants, the growers not seeming to be alive to their opportunities. Alfred M. Campbell sent in very well flowered Ricard geraniums in 6-inch pots, which made a fine showing. Hengle Bros. offered fine Canterbury bells in 6-inch pots, splendidly in blossom.

WITH THE RETAILERS.

All the stores declared their business to have been larger than last season, some claiming the telegraph business to be much better, while with others it was not as good. Many of the orders received were low in price ranging from $1.50 to $3. Several said their orders for out-of-town delivery showed quite an increase. White carnations were retailed at from $2.50 to $3 per dozen and 20 to 25 cents each. Chas. Henry Fox handled the carnation situation with a window card on which was printed "Owing to market conditions we will not sell any carnations for Mothers' Day." He found that most of his customers appreciated the situation, were satisfied and readily took something else. Artificial white carnations were sold in large quantities to the street men and the smaller stores, most of which were retailed at a dime each.

THE ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

Mothers' Day publicity, while on the "spur of the moment" kind, was most successful. Edward Reid, chairman of the committee, kept his fellow members on the jump and made a happy choice in giving Chas. Henry Fox and Chas. H. Grakelow the placing of the advertising and other publicity features. Mr. Fox bought 650 flowering plants, mostly geraniums, all of which were placed in the imitation wedgewood pots and distributed through the Emergency Aid to wounded and sick soldiers in all the hospitals. There were also 250 gilt baskets filled with flowers, which were presented to the "Gold Star War Mothers" through the same agency. Each of these carried a card with the inscription "The Florists of Philadelphia in Honor of Mothers' Day Present These Flowers to You. Distributed by the Emergency Aid of Pennsylvania." Mr. Fox gave this matter his personal attention, devoting much of his valuable time to the details. The plants were distributed on Friday and a few Sunday. At a meeting of the Emergency Aid Friday night, May 12, Miss Anna Jarvis, who was present and made an address, was presented by Mr. Fox with a bunch of 25 choice American Beauty roses, to the ribbon of which was attached a card: "With the Compliments of the Florists of Philadelphia," which the very much surprised lady received quite graciously. The amount of money collected was close to $1,700, $1,200 of which was spent in newspapers, mostly for the American Legion copy and a copy written by Arthur A. Niessen: "It will please her on Mothers' Day to Say It With Flowers," shown in good white space.

NOTES.
The candy stores made a great bid for Mothers' Day business, their combined advertising being much greater than that of the florists. Many, in fact no end of trouble. If the sale was only for all flowers it would be a great boon to the trade. It was the best Mothers' Day business they had ever experienced.

The Leo Niessen Co. handled an enormous quantity of flowers and are very well satisfied with their trade for the week. While they had a large stock of white carnations, they could have used quantities more, as it was impossible to supply the call.

Edward Reid said: "There is no question but the advertising did a lot of good, increasing the demand very materially. Every man who put $1 into the fund will get it back twice over. We sold out everything but a few sweet peas.

Samuel Sproul, with four Locust Flower Shops, hopes soon to add another to his string; this time it is to be an uptown location in the neighborhood of Broad street and Susquehanna avenue.

The Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market sold out clean; late shipments Saturday were all taken to fill accumulated orders and more could have been sold.

Jos. G. Niedenger arrived home from his European tour, May 13. He had an interesting and satisfactory business trip.

The McHenry Flower Shop, 2121 Federal street, has just added a fine new Dodge car to their delivery service.

Donald McGee is now in charge of the Sixtieth street store of Frank M. Ross. K.

CARNATION DEMAND HEAVY.

Mothers' Day trade was heavy on Saturday and good on Sunday. Carnations, as usual, sold fast and at an early hour white flowers of all kinds had cleaned up. Prices advanced the first few days of the week and held up all during the remainder. Roses here for several weeks have been off crop, and values have kept up well. Plants brought good prices, especially geraniums in five-inch pots having a heavy call. Pot lilies had a good call. Sweet peas were a good seller, the supply running short. All in all, the Mothers' Day business is increasing each year, only the public should be encouraged to buy all kinds of flowers instead of the increased call for carnations that seems to prevail at the present time. They have the wrong impression of the flowers to buy and we all should try and discourage the sale of carnations entirely. There are other blossoms that are procurable and it would help to increase sales a great deal and it would make a great difference in the quantity of flowers sold, because they could be sold at a lower price, and more of them, to a great many more customers. The wholesale prices that prevail at this holiday every year seem to be beyond the average person's purchasing power, and if we could lower prices we would eventually build up one of the finest days in the year. HALSTEAD, KANS.—W. H. Whetsel is planning to add two houses to his establishment at an early date.

MOTHERS' DAY BUSINESS A SUCCESS.

Considered as to the quantity of stock sold May 12-13 in comparison with previous days of the month, Mothers' Day business was a success. Considered from the viewpoint of those that believed all the bombastic propaganda that had previously been talked and written, it was a failure. The growers greatly overestimated what the demand would be; last year they underestimated it. There were more roses on the market than at Easter, and while many sold at reasonable figures, there was far from being a cleanup. Sweet peas also sold well, but there were enormous stocks of them and many were left over. Carnations must be differently treated. On May 12 their prices ranged from $8 per 100 for red to $15 for white. On May 13 the range was from $10 for red to $20 for white. On Sunday morning, what sold, went at $8 to $15 per 100 and many were left over. Propaganda, both for and against the use of carnations was circulated, some of it in the newspapers, and for misleading statements the two sides can be rated 50-50. Much has been said and written about educating the public in the use of flowers. Well, it is being educated all right. No one need worry along that line. The great number of flower shows in the past few years and the wide circulation of horticultural literature has convinced the greater part of the public that there are no deep mysteries in the florist business. So when one week they can buy a dozen carnations for $1.50 and the next week are charged $3 and $4 per dozen, they are educated well enough to say: "This is profiteering!" The public blames the retailers; the retailers blame the wholesalers, who pass it on to the growers. It is for us to state the facts without entering into controversy. But it has time and again been pointed out in those letters that as the public was under no necessity of buying flowers it would be a wise policy to retain its good will. It may be added that considerable stock reached the wholesale houses on Saturday too late to be of any use for the day. During the early days of last week considerable stock went out of the market on account of heavy funeral orders, but from that time till buying began for Mothers' Day, business was slow. Easter lilies accumulated and callas were near their finish. American Beauty roses were slow throughout the week, with little change in the orchid situation. Good stocks (gillyflowers) sold fairly well, but snapdragons were slow. Enormous quantities of lilacs kept pouring in. We doubt if at this time of year lilac is expected to clean up, yet much of it sells. Considerable shipments of peonies of fair quality came in from Virginia and they moved. A good quality of larkspur is arriving in limited quantity. A number of wholesalers are now handling geraniums and other bedding plants. The retail stores, so far as heard from at this writing, report good sales of boxes of roses, sweet peas and spring flowers for the holiday. While there were considerable sales in carnations, much dissatisfaction was created by the prices. We believe that some retailers sold carnations at but little above cost.

May 15.—With the arrivals this morning and the stock left over from Mothers' Day the market is well supplied, business being very slight.

NOTES.

Theodore Malandre, of Malandre Bros., states that they had a good holiday trade, both in home and out-of-town orders. In proportion to their large offerings of roses, sweet peas and spring flowers, they handled only a few carnations and sold them at little above cost.

It is said that orders received by local florists from retailers of other cities on busy days, such as Mothers' Day, amounting to less than $3 prove only an annoyance to the firm that receives them.

Secretary John Young, of the Society of American Florists, James McHutchison, F. R. Pierson and others attended the plant quarantine conference in Washington, D. C., this week.

A fine Mothers' Day trade was reported by the Fordham Florist in roses, sweet peas and other flowers, carnations, however, being nearly eliminated in their offerings.

J. K. Allen, of the Eighteenth street wholesale market, said he sold out well Mothers' Day and thought their market had the best of the trade.

YONKERS, N. Y.

Many fine designs were sent from this city for the funeral of the late Henry P. Davison of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., which was held in the Episcopal church, Locust Valley, N. Y., May 9. The family orders were arranged by Wadley & Smythe, who sent two automobile loads of flowers. The casket cover was of American Beauty roses and white carnations. Numerous orders were filled by Chas. Thorley, J. W. Hauser and J. H. Small & Sons. The church at Locust Valley is of modest dimensions and all available space was filled with flowers.

There was a meeting of the tariff and legislative committee of the Society of American Florists at administration headquarters, 43 West Eighteenth street, May 11. The principal business was a discussion on the hearing to be held in Washington May 15 as to Quarantine No. 37. There were present James McHutchison, chairman; J. D. Eisele, F. R. Pierson, Henry F. Michell, A. L. Miller, and visitors, A. T. De La Mare, C. B. Knickman and Secretary John Young.

There are a number of cemeteries in and near Middle Village, which is not far from Brooklyn, and it has many florists, whose business is almost exclusively in cemetery and funeral work. Several have considerable glass. One of these is Joseph Klingenberg, and at his office we met an old acquaintance in Harry Riedel, formerly a wholesaler, who is now manager. Mr. Klingenberg recently underwent a serious operation, but is recovering and has left the hospital.

Brooklyn, as well as Manhattan, has its Fifth avenue and there are a number of good flower shops on the thoroughfare which skirts the noted Greenwood cemetery. Opposite the cemetery are the attractive conservatories and store of John Condon, also those of the J. Ebb, Weir & Co. A. C. McCann, who succeeded the late Henry Murphy, has an attractive shop at 5205 Fifth avenue.

Max Zarnow, who conducts the Marguerite Flower Shop, is an active man and has a good business. Two of the Trepel stores, Inc., are also on Fifth avenue, Brooklyn. There are other florists clustered around Greenwood cemetery and a great amount of business goes their way, particularly around Memorial Day.

The interior of the new store of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., 146 West Eighteenth street, is being finely arranged and well cared for. Members of the firm commute every day between this city and Philadelphia. One day it is the portly H. Bayersdorfer himself that we see; the next, slender and active Sidney Bayersdorfer.

Alfred Van Praag, of the Van Praag Florist Co., accompanied by his wife, sailed for Europe on the S. S. Rotterdam May 13. They will make a three

FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

*"How sleep the Brave who sink to rest
By all their Country's wishes blest!
When Spring with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallowed mould,
She there shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.*

*"By fairy hands their knell is rung;
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell, a weeping hermit, there!*

months' tour of Holland, France, Switzerland and Germany. During their absence Louis Rossow of the firm will conduct the business.

Miss Irene Hayes, whose store is at 799 Park Avenue, will sail for Europe June 14 for a trip of six weeks. During her absence the business will be conducted by A. Alexander, who has been with her for some time and is an experienced man in the retail trade.

J. P. Gilbanks, who has a good store at 50 Broadway, which is in the heart of the financial district, had many orders May 13, but it was stated that they were for other flowers than carnations, as they were not handling them.

CINCINNATI GROWERS.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cincinnati branch of the Ohio District of National Flower Growers' Association was held at the range of John Bruckner, May 3 and brought out the usual large attendance. We also had present two of the prominent retailers of Cincinnati, W. H. Shepperd and Julius Baer, who gave us their experience along the lines of advertising, which was much appreciated by the association, in view of the fact that a great many of the retail men as well as the wholesale men have contributed to the advertising fund. The advertising fund has not grown very much since our last meeting, there being only one new subscriber to report, namely, Fred Perti, $15. The growers and retail men have been pretty well canvassed and there are but a few who are unable to see the benefits to be derived through advertising. Another new member was added to our list, and we hope some day to have a 100 per cent membership.

Regardless as to whether or not the florists hold their annual meeting in Cincinnati, our association is making arrangements to hold a florists' picnic, probably during the month of June. This idea seemed to meet with the approval of the retailers and if it materializes we hope all will attend.

The next monthly meeting will take place at L. F. Murphy's establishment Wednesday, June 7.

JOSEPH IMHOLTE, Sec'y.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Wm. F. Gude gave E. G. Hill, Chas. H. Totty and Joseph Manda, conference visitors, an auto ride to Arlington and vicinity, the forenoon of May 16.

The next annual meeting will be held at Chicago, June 19-20, 1922.

TUBEROSE and caladium bulbs are well cleaned up.

ONION SETS on South Water street, Chicago, were quoted at $15 per bushel last week.

THERE is a strong demand for Golden Bantam corn, and Stringless and Bountiful beans.

THE demand for catch crop seed strengthens as the season advances, with prices higher.

BALTIMORE, Md.—The J. Bolgiano Seed Co. has had an exceptionally good season, with counter trade very heavy.

J. CHAS. McCULLOUGH, of Cincinnati, O., and family, are still at Palm Beach, Fla., but hope to return before the close of May.

PRICES of bags at Chicago, May 17: Anchor, 16 oz., $30 per bale in bale lots or over; Royal River, 16 oz., $30; National, 16 oz., $30.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The old frame residence formerly owned by the late L. L. May, has been removed to make room for street development.

BOARD OF TRADE—Prices for grass seed on the Chicago Board of Trade this week were as follows: Timothy, $4.50 to $6 per 100 pounds; Red Clover, $12 to $22.

NEW YORK.—Carter's Tested Seeds, Inc., says the first season of the Carter-Thorburn business has been most satisfactory, in fact much larger than expected.

ALBERT C. WILSON, chief seed analyst of the Illinois Department of Agriculture, Springfield, has issued timely articles on the Canada thistle and control of weeds.

IT is reported by some French concerns that the crop of Paper White narcissus bulbs this season will again contain quite a proportion of the 12-centimeter size.

MARBLEHEAD, MASS.—James J. H. Gregory & Son have widely distributed the production of their seed specialties in other growing centers, owing to unfavorable weather here the past three years.

AMERICAN grown narcissi of the Chinese joss lily type, are maturing and will be offered about May 25. The bulbs are solid and larger, and last year gave better results than the imported stock, growing well in soil.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Templin-Crockett-Bradley Co. advise its best day was April 15, not the first of that month, as previously reported. This is the first time since its incorporation in 1912 that the big day has been in April.

LAST week California had a half inch of rain, which is rare at this time of year and good for the seed crops.

THE Federal Horticultural Board has deprived a Michigan bulb concern of the privilege of obtaining permits, for substituting in bulb imports.

VISITED CHICAGO: A. T. Ferrell, of A. T. Ferrell & Co., Saginaw, Mich., returning from Oklahoma; Edgar Bowen, of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., enroute to California; Chas. P. Guelf, of the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y.; C. J. Cherry, representing H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.

LAWRENCEVILLE, ILL. — Forage and other emergency crops must be sown in the flooded Illinois river valley to a large extent, according to a recent statement of H. C. Iowa State Seedsmen's Association.

DES MOINES CONVENTION, JUNE 7.

The annual convention of the Iowa State Seedsmen's Association will be held at Des Moines, June 7, headquarters being at the Savery hotel. It is not to be a meeting for the members only, who are expected to be present as a matter of course, but all whose interests are in any way affiliated with the seed industry are cordially invited to be present, including seedsmen from other states. Representatives from the agricultural colleges, growers and shippers of seed and grain, those who have anything to do with shipping or in any way come in contact with the trade are extended a special invitation. The guests will be banqueted by the association.

A representative of the Iowa food and dairy commission will speak regarding the application of seed laws in Iowa. The meeting will be decidedly informal and every one will be perfectly free to express their views, in this way bringing about better service.

A. M. ELDRIDGE, Sec'y.

Flower Seed Tariff.

California growers of flower seeds, who are understood to have caused the senate finance committee to advance the proposed tax of four cents per pound levied in the house bill to 20 per cent ad valorem in the proposed senate bill, will be asked by the chairman of the tariff committee of the American Seed Trade Association, to make their demand for a specific duty, that the same may conform to the method of assessing duty on vegetable seeds and that this principle, which the seedsmen secured in the Payne-Aldrich Tariff bill after a long, hard fight, be continued and maintained, holding this feature of the proposed duty to be of much greater importance than a few cents more or less in the rate.

Canary Islands Onion Seed.

The weather for the last three months has been favorable for growing onion seed in the Canary Islands. If there are no unfavorable developments during the next three or four months, a crop of at least average size—about 75,000 pounds—will be harvested.

Nebraska Seed Crops.

The J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Waterloo, Neb., writes May 13 as follows: "Orders for the new crop are 100 per cent better than a year ago. In fact we have booked more business on May 13 than ever before, with possibly one exception. The acreage of seeds in the middle west will only cover orders on hand. There is no tendency to speculate. We also believe that slightly higher prices will rule after planting. Both grain and sugar beets have increased in value since our first contracts with farmers were written, and as grain and beets control absolutely the price of vine seeds and seed corn, it stands to reason seed prices will have to fall in line. Think surplus stocks pretty well cleaned up, especially the high priced stocks produced during the war period. The number of failures is also much less than last year."

Grass Seeds.

The Schisler-Corneli Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo., writes May 13: "Kentucky blue grass and sudan grass seed attracted the most attention this season. Never in the history of our business have we sold as many cars of sudan grass seed and the demand today is continuing without any sign of letting up for some time to come. As usually follows a sudden advance in price, much old seed of low germination found its way to market as did some cars that showed mixing with red top and cane seed. The season locally is from two to three weeks late, due to continuous rain last month. The condition of pastures is generally above 100 per cent, and clover fields look especially fine. Farmers are more hopeful now than they have been for some time, and we are inclined to think that by fall things will have returned pretty well to normal."

Canning Industry in Wisconsin.

Wisconsin is the banner pea canning state in the union. One-half of all the peas canned in the United States are packed in Wisconsin. The industry was started, in a small way, more than 30 years ago by Albert Landreth at Manitowoc on the shores of Lake Michigan.
This was before the days of labor saving machinery and all the peas had to be picked and shelled by hand. A machine was soon perfected, however, to shell the peas from the pods, and by 1895 the viner, a machine which opens the pods with removing them from the vine was in operation, so that hand picking was unnecessary.

Success has followed the industry from its start, but not without some ups and downs. Farmers and business men from adjoining counties were greatly attracted by the reports coming from Manitowoc, Sturgeon Bay, and Green Bay and started agitating for factories at Columbus, Randolph, and many other places. The pioneers along the lake shore discouraged them with stories about the necessity of proximity to the lake shore to make conditions suitable for development. However, men like the Hutchinson brothers, of Randolph, and Leitsch, of Columbus, were not turned back, and today the area in the vicinity of Dodge county supports enough canning plants to put up half the pack of Wisconsin. Nearly every railroad station has one or more canning factories.

The location of factories is decided by the adaptability of the soil for pea growing, the availability of labor for the factory during the rush season of canning, and the presence in the organizations of far-sighted business men to carry the responsibilities of a hazardous operation.

The early canners lost heavily from some unknown cause of swelling and bursting of the cans. The leading canners scratched their heads in vain for the solution and then appealed to the University of Wisconsin for assistance.
Dr. H. L. Russell, then fresh from his studies on plant bacteria at Johns Hopkins, made a study of the bacteria present in their spoiled cans of peas. He found the cause of the trouble to be the presence of gas forming bacteria. These were able to live through the heating process then in use. The temperature that would kill the spores of the "gas bugs" was determined and found to be within reach of the practical canner, so that Dr. Russell's conclusions are now the every day practice.

Pea blight, a term given to crop losses from various causes, became troublesome to most canning companies after they had been established a few years.
The practice had been to grow peas after peas without rotation and the soil became filled with fungus spores which were found by R. E. Vaughan of the agricultural experiment station to be the cause of the trouble. There is no easy remedy for blight and when once a field becomes sick it should not be seeded to peas for a number of years.

Insects have from time to time played havoc with the profits in pea canning. First the pea weevil tried to destroy the seed; then the lice came to devour the leaves; and the pea moth to work on the pods. The entomologists have aided in the solution of these problems. The weevil can be killed by fumigating the seed with carbon-bisulphide; the lice prefer clover, which protects the peas if it is left standing longer than usual; the pea moth does not attack early maturing varieties.

Now it is a question of marketing that holds the center of the stage. It is easy to grow and can the peas, but what about their sale at a profit? Theodore Macklin of the staff of the College of Agriculture has shown the path taken by the can of peas from the producer to the consumer. It is a long and crooked path; the usual route is farmer to factory, to railroad, to broker, to wholesaler, to retailer, to consumer, and the latter pays.

In any question which may arise, in the future as in the past, the University of Wisconsin, through its experimental station, will be found standing ready to do all in its power to find the solution. Co-operation will continue to be the keynote of success among canners.

The forty-seventh annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June 28-30, 1922.

THE rush of warm weather the first two weeks of May, cut short the sale and moving operations in nursery stock.

JOHN WATSON'S prediction that entomologists would soon try to stop interstate shipments is likely to be soon verified.

NURSERYMEN will be shocked to read of the federal prosecution of such a high-class nursery as Bryant's, at Princeton, Ill.

CALIFORNIA is preparing for a huge grape harvest this year, the area planted having been greatly increased since the advent of prohibition.

PROF. FRANK A. WAUGH'S excellent "Textbook of Landscape Gardening," is out, and we hope to have something more to say about it later. The volume is dedicated to Dr. L. H. Bailey, Ithaca, N. Y.

ANNAPOLIS ROYAL, N. S.—Frank Barnum has offered a prize of $5,000 for the person who suggests a practical method of combating and suppressing the spruce worm, bark beetle and borer, which has done great damage in eastern Canada and the United States. The competition will close August 1.

NEW YORK.—Five elms, said to be the largest trees ever planted in Central park, were recently placed on the site of the old McGowan Pass tavern, near the east drive, about opposite 106th street, as a part of a memorial to Andrew H. Green, who took an active part in the building and maintenance of the park.

CALIFORNIA has added a new department of nursery service, which will be largely supported by license fees and was established for the purpose of unifying methods of inspection, packing, shipping and handling of nursery stock and to create a better understanding of the laws and regulations governing nurserymen and growers in their relations with county horticultural commissioners and inspectors within the state. Fred C. Brosius is the first superintendent.

Bryant Fined Under Nursery Law.

Peoria, Ill., May 12.—Guy A. Bryant, head of the Bryant Nursery, was fined $50 and costs in the United States District court on charges of shipping diseased plants into Kansas. He was the first person to be tried here under the new federal nursery law.

Plan to Plant Another Tree.

"Plan To Plant Another Tree," the movement recently inaugurated by the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, continues to increase in popularity, horticultural and civic organizations in adjoining states taking up the slogan with much enthusiasm. In the association's latest bulletin instructive articles on "Strawberries," and "The Beauty and Value of Trees" appear, as well as a column on "Questions and Answers" which is conducted without charge to the readers by J. A. Young, secretary of the association, Aurora, Ill.

Early Viburnums at Arnold Arboretum.

The first viburnum to bloom in the arboretum this year is V. alnifolium, the hobblebush or moosewood of cold, wet northern woods. It is a large shrub spreading by shoots from the roots, with broad, flat clusters of small flowers surrounded by a ring of large pure white neutral flowers, dark green leaves with prominent veins, which turn orange and scarlet in the autumn, and fruit in drooping clusters, bright red at first when fully grown and dark blue or nearly black at maturity. This is one of the handsomest of the American viburnums, but it has proved a difficult plant to establish here, although in other Massachusetts gardens it has grown better than it has in the arboretum, where, however, it at last appears to have become accustomed to its surroundings. Another viburnum is in flower in the group of these plants near the upper end of the Bussey Hill road and on Hickory path near Centre street. This is the Korean V. Carlesii and one of the hardiest and most beautiful shrubs which the gardens of America have obtained from eastern Asia. Its greatest value is found in the white waxy flowers which are arranged in small, very compact, nearly globose clusters and open from rose-colored buds. As the flowers do not all open at once the buds among the white flowers add to the beauty and interest of the flower-clusters in early spring. The flowers of no other viburnum and of few other hardy plants are as fragrant as those of V. Carlesii. It is a plant which should be in every northern garden. Unfortunately seeds are produced rarely in this country. It has suffered, too, from the fact that Japanese nurserymen have for several years sent to this country as this species a Japanese plant called V. bitchuense, which is in every way inferior as a garden plant. This viburnum is also in flower near V. Carlesii in the viburnum group.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, May 12, 1922.

A Dead Loss to Industry.

The Illinois Central railroad appeals to shippers to eliminate an economic waste amounting last year to $104,398,930 on the railroads of this country through inefficient or improper packing and loading of commodities for railroad transportation. That amount of money was paid out by the class I railroads of the country for damages.

That much of this loss is unnecessary and due simply to carelessness or inefficiency is shown by comparison with the figures of 1916, when the total of such damages amounted to $23,346,965, or more than $80,000,000 less than last year.

There is in the figures and the appeal a tip not only for manufacturers and shippers but for railroad employees. This sum of more than $100,000,000 annually is a dead loss to the railroads and to the public through the destruction or damaging of property. It cuts down the net revenue of the carriers and indirectly results in higher freight rates and lower wages. That, in turn, depresses every line of business.

If shipping clerks would remember these facts every time they pack a shipment of goods; if truckers would remember it every time they take such goods to a freight car for shipment; if freight handlers would remember it every time they load a car and if switchmen, brakemen, and engineers would remember it in the handling of trains, that vast sum might go eventually into their pay envelopes.

It is the efficiency as well as the wage per hour of workmen which helps to keep up the price of products. In the matter of packing alone, we are told, large consignments of American goods sent to South America have been refused or subject to delay in payment and decrease of orders because the goods were not properly packed and arrived in bad order. That keeps down the expansion of American business, reduces our orders, slows down or closes our factories, and reacts directly upon employer and employe alike.

It is inexcusable waste. Payment of damages by railroads or water carriers cannot compensate a manufacturer or exporter for the loss of a customer. It is a cumulative loss. Care and efficiency will eliminate it. In self-defense they ought to be practiced by every individual having to do with the manufacture, sale and shipment of goods.—Chicago Tribune.

William A. Peterson, known to the masses in connection with the Peterson woods, needs no introduction to the horticulturists and nurserymen in this country and foreign lands, as he is recognized as one of the master technologists in his line of business. He knows the gardens and forests throughout the world, having made a personal inspection of them. He comes of a family which during several generations has specialized in matters relating to the business of tree culture, botany and landscape architecture.

Mr. Peterson has one of the finest libraries on the subjects mentioned to be found anywhere. Also, he owns priceless manuscripts and original grants, deeds and kindred documents worthy of a place in American and foreign museums. He has collected many cabinets containing Indian and other early time relics, many of them of local interest. Scores of these were taken from his extensive nursery grounds, formerly the site of an Indian village inhabited long before the advent of the white man.—Cook County Forest Preserve Year Book.

FRANK E. WAGNER, of the well known Chicago produce firm, G. M. H. Wagner & Sons, was accidentally killed by an auto, May 14.

A CALIFORNIA commission of five farmers is making a tour of eastern states to gather facts for the state legislature for use in developing higher agricultural education in that state.

The United States Department of Agriculture, bureau of soils, has just issued an important bulletin, No. 1005, on "Soils of Eastern Virginia and Their Uses for Truck Crop Production," by J. A. Eonsteel.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Gleaner Clearing House Association, of Michigan, which recently filed a petition for dissolution, will have a hearing before Judge Webster of the circuit court. June 5. The assets are $719,029.61; liabilities, $446,745.33.

Orange Crop Hard Hit.

Sacramento, Calif.—The total shipments of California oranges for 1921-1922 crop, it was estimated May 12, by E. E. Kaufman, agricultural statistician of the federal department of agriculture, will aggregate only 58 per cent of the total orange crop as estimated December 1, as results of winds and cold weather.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, May 16.—Cucumbers, per crate, $1.25 to $1.75; lettuce, per crate, $1.50 to $2.50; carrots, $1.50 to $1.75 per hamper; cabbage, $2 to $2.50 per crate; cauliflower, per crate, $1.50 to $3.

New York, May 12.—Cucumbers, $1 to $1.25 per dozen; radishes, per basket, 25c to $1; lettuce, per barrel, $4 to $4.50; mushrooms, $1.15 to $1.50 per three-pound basket; cauliflower, $3 to $5.50 per dozen; tomatoes, per pound, 15 to 20 cents.

Cantaloupe Harvest.

Cantaloupe production in southern California, Florida and Texas has a prospect of 16,862 cars of 350 crates each in the forecast made by the United States Department of Agriculture, and this is a gain of 39 per cent over the harvest of 12,090 cars in 1921. Nearly all of these cantaloupes are produced in southern California, where the forecast crop is 16,241 cars, leaving 357 cars to Texas and 264 cars to Florida. Production, expressed in carloads, usually exceeds the carlot movement.

Strawberry Crop.

Forecast of a production of 15,217 cars of 450 crates each of commercial strawberries this year is made by the United States Department of Agriculture, a gain of 17 per cent over the harvested crop of 13,017 cars last year. This report covers substantially the whole commercial strawberry area of the United States. Production, expressed in carlots, usually exceeds carlot movement. In the forecast for this year, Tennessee leads all states with an indicated production of 2,837 cars, and Arkansas closely follows with 2,791 cars. These two states have in prospect 37 per cent of the forecast crop. Three other states are prominent commercial strawberry producers, Louisiana with a forecast of 1,892 cars, Missouri with 1,181 cars, and Maryland with 1,176 cars.

Asparagus Rust.

Rather early in the development of the commercial asparagus industry in the United States this crop was seriously menaced by the attack of a rust fungus. Various methods of control were tried, especially in the northeastern states, where asparagus was an important truck crop. When it was found that various sprays, etc., failed to control this fungus experiments were undertaken by state and federal workers to control the fungus through the development of resistant strains.

After several years of selection and breeding a strain of asparagus was developed by J. B. Norton of the United States Department of Agriculture. This strain was not only resistant to the rust fungus, but also a high yielder of a very good grade of shoots. This improved asparagus was sent out by the department under the name of Washington asparagus. Plants and seed of this strain were supplied to workers in state experiment stations to be tested as to their adaptability to various sections of the country where asparagus is grown commercially.

In the spring of 1919 J. A. McClintock, plant physiologist of the Georgia experiment station, received a shipment of one-year-old roots of Washington asparagus from one of the government plant breeding stations in South Carolina. These asparagus roots were set in Cecil clay loam soil at the Georgia station. For the past three years the plants have produced a vigorous growth and in no case has rust developed on any of the plants. The majority of the roots produce medium to large shoots well adapted to bunching for market.

Vegetable Movement.

Car lot movement of a dozen leading lines of fruits and vegetables ran about 50 per cent heavier during the week ending May 15 than for the same week last year. The total movement was close to 400,000 cars for the season to date and 8 to 1 per cent heavier than last season. The price trend continued generally downward owing to heavy supplies in most of the large markets. Potatoes declined about 15 cents for old stock, and new potatoes dropped about $1 per barrel. Texas onions continued to decline. Extra fancy boxed apples tended slightly lower. Sweet potatoes declined in middle western markets. Strawberries lost about $1 per crate under very heavy supplies.

Early Potatoes.

Early Irish potatoes have a prospect of a production of 39,168 cars of 200 barrels each in the early producing states extending along the Atlantic coast from Virginia to Florida and thence along the Gulf coast to Texas, in the forecast made by the United States Department of Agriculture. This is a gain of 13 per cent over the 34,599 cars of the harvest of 1921. Production, expressed in carlots, usually exceeds the carlot movement. Virginia has a forecast of about one-half of the crop of early Irish potatoes, or 19,640 cars, and Florida and South Carolina each of about one-eighth, or 4,935 and 4,725 cars respectively. The forecast for North Carolina is 3,520 cars, for Alabama 2,223 cars, Louisiana 1,856 cars, Texas 1,573 cars, Georgia 472 cars, and Mississippi 224 cars.

THE JUNE WEDDINGS.

The House Decorations.

June, the most joyous season of the year when all nature is at its best, is a month of weddings, there being probably more occurrences of these joyous occasions falling due at this period than during any other month in the year.
At many of these the decorations are most elaborate, as flowers for the most part are very plentiful. The progressive florist who makes a speciality of decorations for these events is prepared to at once give detailed estimates for the adornment of the home, the church or when the ceremony takes place on the lawn. Styles change and it is the business of the florist to keep abreast of the times and up to the minute with the latest decorative effects and artistic arrangement of the bridal flowers.

The competent decorator will see at a glance how the most striking effects in this or that room can be made with the seasonable materials in plants and cut flowers at hand and paint a word picture that will be quite convincing.

The ceremony is nearly always in the parlor or largest room of the house, with a banking of foliage and flowering plants at one side or end of the room as a background for the bridal party, either side of the mantle and to screen musicians. These groups are livened with large floor vases of peonies, long stemmed roses, Easter lilies, etc., more or less elaborate as desired. Wall decorations of half baskets or wall pockets with tins for water, filled with flowers and vines, are suspended at any height from the picture moulding. Color harmony is essential, all one shade, as white or pink, or a combination of pink and blue, which is always striking. A more or less elaborate canopy of strings of smilax or asparagus, decorated with roses, sweet peas or other flowers, that extends from the background of palms over the bridal party is an appropriate finish to the elaborate setting.

A well decorated kneeling stool or marriage altar is also necessary, behind which the clergyman awaits the bridal party. The doorways are arched with boughs of oak leaves, studded with peonies and sprays of rambler roses.
These latter are also sometimes arranged artistically over mirrors and picture frames.

The dining room has its vantage points on tops of china closets and the mantle, on which are placed vases and bowls filled with shrubbery, peonies, rambler roses, etc. Rambler roses and oak leaves over the doorways and window frames give a fine decorative effect.
The flowers for the table should be so arranged as to take as little space as possible. Where there is no center chandelier, a rose tree of rambler sprays that reaches to and spreads over a portion of the ceiling can be made very effective. With a low center light fixture, two tall vases, one at each end of the table, are made necessary.

Bride's Table.

The bridal party frequently dines at a separate table which should be quite elaborate, with a tall center carrying flowers above the line of vision and low rose bowls for half centers connected on the cloth with flowing and curving garlands of green and flowers, continuing the full length of the table. These generally consist of roses and lily of the valley or white sweet peas, making a very effective table decoration.

The newel post and bannister railing decorated with oak leaves and flowers to the third floor is very effective.
Doorways on the second floor can have light drapings of oak leaves and rose sprays and there should be vases of roses on the bureaus in the guest chambers. In all the large rooms plants can be placed in corners and vases of flowers on mantles or other vantage positions.

When the ceremony is performed at the church the decorations are much the same as in the home wedding, except that the kneeling stool is transferred to the chancel at the head of the main aisle. In Episcopal churches the chancel is always banked with ferns or palms, together with flowering plants or floor vases filled with long stemmed peonies, roses, Easter lilies or other flowers. White roses are appropriate for the altar vases. On either side of the chancel the walls are banked with flowers, being a continuation or widening of that decoration. Tall standards, eight by ten feet apart, placed on both sides of the entire length of the aisle support vases or bunches of loosely arranged flowers tied with ribbons. Another aisle decoration is composed of bunches of flowers tied to every pew on either side, with a bow of ribbon. The font is filled with flowers and the pulpit and reading desk also decorated. The window ledges may also be banked. Scarcely any two church edifices are alike, but these are the vantage points in all and the decorations may be more or less elaborate along these lines.

A roll of white muslin, one end tacked to the floor at the head of the middle aisle, is run down after the guests have assembled, on the arrival of the bridal party and hooked taut over stout tacks already placed. Ribbons for each side of the middle aisle are also attached from the reserved pews to the end in order that the bridal party and invited guests shall leave the church without interference.

A Lawn Wedding.

June weddings are frequently held on the lawn of the residence, a temporary chapel or background being arranged for the ceremony. An alcove formed of plants over which, and extending in front, is a canopy of laurel or oak leaved wreathing. This space can be more or less elaborately decorated with cut flowers, a fine display being made entirely with rambler roses. The effect is much better when this is arranged at the bottom of a slope with the guests' chairs placed on the rising ground. A wide path across the lawn from the residence is outlined on either side with garlands of wreathing, supported on low posts, each decorated with a bunch of flowers.

The Bouquets.

The bridal flowers call for great attention as they are examined minutely and in their coloring, harmonious and artistic arrangement add so much to the general effect. The bride's bouquet is a shower or semi-shower bunch of lily of the valley and orchids, or white roses for orchids or all white sweet peas and lilies. Her maids carry roses or hydrangeas, either pink or blue, pink or bronze snapdragons or pink sweet peas. For the maid of honor red, pink or yellow roses are appropriate with small baskets for the little flower girls. Staffs decorated with various flowers or baskets of the same are often carried by the maids in place of bouquets. Good quality ribbons and chiffons are essentials for all these arrangements, adding much to their appearance.

Counting the Costs.

The way to gain is to save, a "penny saved is a penny earned," and these soon mount into dollars. Energy is the main-spring of business, but it also must be conserved and intelligently directed to produce the best results, and in no way can it be more efficient than in its power to save, to work out economies in purchasing, in handling and saving stock, in deliveries and in all the details relating to the management of the business.

Business is with nearly every one a necessity as a means of livelihood, and why not get the most possible out of it so as to better enjoy the worth while things of life. Be it small or large, there is a fascination and pleasure in the management of a successful business, and a great satisfaction, when at the close of the business year one finds $1,000 or a number of them as the case may be, to add to the resources as a fitting reward for the hard work of the season, which can be used to extend the business or invested as thought best.

Every retail florist should manage his business so as to make from eight to 10 per cent on his total volume of sales. This at first glance looks very easy when he buys 100 roses for $8 and sells them for $2 per dozen, twice as much as they cost, and 50 per cent profit on the selling price, a fine gross gain on the single transaction. If, however, one dozen of the eight go to waste, one-eighth of the dollar margin is gone, and right here is one of the biggest leaks in the business and most difficult to keep track of in dollars and cents. Any retailer who will keep a daily account of the flowers that go to waste or are sacrificed and used up at less than regular profit, will be surprised at the total reached at the end of the month, and will arouse his energy to the utmost to find effective methods to prevent this addition to his overhead.

GETTING AT THE COSTS.

The great majority of men deceive themselves with the idea that because they are doing a lot of business, keeping at it from morning until night, they must be laying up a big profit, yet their balance in the bank from one year to another shows little if any gain, and this unfortunately is the only way that many have of knowing how they stand.

BRIDE'S SHOWER BOUQUET OF CATTLEYS AND LILY OF THE VALLEY.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Alphonse Peters recently opened an up-to-date flower shop at 130 West Spring street.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.—Baum's Home of Flowers featured an attractive one-half page Mothers' Day advertisement in the Journal and Tribune of this city May 13.

The reason such men fail to make money is because they do not know how much it costs them to do business. If one of this class was ill he would at once call in his doctor and if necessary a specialist, and perhaps run up a bill of $200 or $300 before he was able to be about again. His ailing business, however, goes on just the same, getting no better but worse if anything, but to call in a business specialist never occurs to him.

At an expense of $100, or perhaps a good deal less, a practical bookkeeper would soon show him just where he stood and give him in detail, if he could secure from his records or himself sufficient data to work on, his cost of doing business and what percentage this was of his total volume of trade for the year. He would show that he must allow himself a salary and also a sum to members of his family who assisted, but whose place would have to be taken by extra help if they were not available. He would be shown that this overhead expense amounted to nearly 50 cents on every dollar's worth of business done, that if he bought roses that cost 50 cents a dozen and sold them for $1, the overhead ate up all the profit and there was nothing left for himself. He would then add this 50 cents of overhead to every dollar's worth that he bought and adding the same ratio of profit as before he would be able to make a substantial showing at the end of the year.

ECONOMIES.

One of the greatest savings is in quantity buying, particularly in standard stocks, the various items of which are always cheaper by the 100 than the dozen, or the case than the dozen bunches, and the same is true of nearly all the requisites of the supply house. Delivery is also free, while in the stock that has frequently to be renewed there is the time wasted and the expense of sending for the same, which often entails additional separate delivery of an article which could have gone with others if it had been ready.

There is an important saving, when for the making of any kind of floral arrangements the necessary flowers are first selected of a value that with the cost of frame and time of making up allows the necessary margin of profit. If when completed the piece does not look finished or worth the price asked, then the frame has been too large or there was not enough charged for it when the order was taken. To go on sticking flowers into an arrangement without knowing their collective cost is very hard on the profit.

Preparedness is the watchword of the progressive florist, always keeping a sharp lookout ahead and having the stock on hand for the early work of tomorrow, so that it is in the best of condition in point of size, as in the case of roses nicely opened up, as against the tight buds of the early morning of which it will take so many more to make the same effect.

A good line of wreaths of prepared material ready for instant trimming with natural flowers, greatly expedites the work of a busy day, when late orders come in that leave but little time to make trains. It is astonishing what a lot of work can be put through in half an hour if the material is at hand. An assortment of shipping boxes for large pieces is most necessary as there may be no time in these emergencies to prepare one and neither the train or the profit is then made.

These and many other details in the management of the business can be handled in such an economical way as to materially reduce the overhead, and by lowering the costs, add materially to the profits. The timid may say they cannot get more for their flowers, neither can they afford to do business at a loss. Their prices now fluctuate with the season, being based on what the flowers cost, which their customers pay willingly, and will just as freely pay the little extra which would provide a better service and profits that will soon make a new man of the proprietor.

Progressive Advertising.

The Idle Hour Nurseries, Macon, Ga., has taken advantage of the geographic position of their city, which is situated in the center of the state, by sending out a circular letter on the back of which is an outline map showing the position of all the principal cities and towns. They are bidding in this way for telegraph orders, their location enabling them to make quick delivery.

Here is a pointer for others who desire to keep pace with this rapidly increasing F. T. D. business.

F. T. D. Idea.

While in Indianapolis, Vincent Gorly, of Grimm & Gorly, St. Louis, Mo., spoke to the writer in regard to an idea that he had regarding an index, or keying telegrams received on F. T. D. orders. His idea concerning all advertising matter carried is that this key could be used:

1. † Closed Sundays. Will open telegrams Monday a. m.
2. * Closed Sunday, but will take care of telegraph orders.
3. O Open Sunday.

This seems to me a real idea that is an absolute necessity. So many disappointments have occurred by telegrams being received Sunday when the shop is not open and no one there to receive them, that such a key as this would be a real help.

I would like to have a discussion on this point and hear what other retailers think of it.

ELLA GRANT WILSON.

PLANT NOTES.

Winter-Flowering Geraniums.

With all growers having a greenhouse and doing a retail business there is in the fall a good demand for pot geraniums for house culture. Plants lifted from the open ground and potted in the fall are not very satisfactory, for the plants recover from the later transplanting slowly and go out of bloom and often do not flower again until spring. It is better to grow plants for this purpose in pots through the summer, and these, with good culture, will bloom all winter long if in a sunny position. Cuttings taken at this time will make nice stock for this purpose, or small plants left over after the spring sales can be used. The plants should be potted firmly, so that they will make a short, stocky growth, and kept well pinched back throughout the summer, that as many branches may be procured as is possible. All buds should be picked off as soon as formed, allowing no blooms until the plants are firmly established in blooming pots, in which they should be planted the last of August. A 6-inch pot makes the best size for house culture, and the plant can be easily grown so that it will fill this size nicely. A frame outside is the most convenient and best place for growing them through the summer.

Cinerarias.

The sowing of cinerarias is better done in June than later. Many postpone this until July, but during the extremely hot days of that month it is often difficult to obtain good germination, and the seed pans or boxes will have to be watched carefully or they will become dry and the young seedlings burn off. The soil should be well shaded until the young seedlings show themselves, when the shade should be made lighter. As soon as the plants have one or two well defined leaves they should be potted in small pots and given a nice, dry position near the glass, which should be shaded, but care should be taken that the young stock does not get drawn. Always bear in mind that the one thing in growing cinerarias to be on the watch for is the aphid. These insects quickly infest these plants and rapidly suck the life out of them. Constant fumigation will keep them in check, but if not attended to regularly it will be time and money thrown away to attempt their culture. Cineraria hybrida is the variety most grown, and these are obtainable in some elegant strains with large high-colored flowers. The Cineraria stellata is much larger and more rapid growing plant which is very showy but is not so well adapted for house culture when in flower.

Peonies.

The work on these plants is not by any means finished when the blooms are cut, for they must be taken care of to insure a good crop for another year. Where the plants are grown in rows the constant traveling has packed the soil down hard, and the ground should be given a good cultivation in order to lighten it up. The weeds should be kept down all summer and not allowed to rob the soil of its richness. If the plants were severely cut in harvesting the bloom, so that there is not much foliage left on them, it is well to spread a mulch of strawy manure on the surface. This is often the case with the officinalis varieties, which do not make the heavy growth of the later varieties, and, as it is natural for the roots of the peonies to have the shade of the heavy foliage of the plants during the summer, the cutting of the stems and foliage of these varieties robs the roots of this, and a mulch that will protect the ground from the hot summer sun is very beneficial and will also reduce the labor of weeding. Any old blooms left on the plant should be cut and thrown away. Plants that have become broken down by high winds or heavy rains should be tied up in shape.

Ardisias.

One of the most popular berried plants for Christmas is the ardisia, but it is not grown as generally as it should be, the production being left to a few plant growers, for it is of very easy culture, the only drawback being that it is of very slow growth. When the seeds of the old plants are thoroughly ripe, they should be sown. They germinate slowly, and should be sown about an inch apart, in rows the same distance apart, and they can be left in the seed box until early summer and plotted in 2½ or 3-inch pots and grown in a warm, lightly shaded location. They should be potted in good fibrous loam and kept in a moist, close house, that all the growth possible may be obtained at this time, for the plant naturally checks in winter. In early spring these young plants will flower and produce a crop of berries for the next winter. The plants that have been grown for three years or more have generally passed the ornamental stage, for they lose their leaves and have a "leggy" appearance. When they reach this stage the tops can be rooted and fine plants obtained. This can best be done at this time of the year by cutting into the stem and wrapping the cut with wet moss firmly tied around. Keep the plants in a warm, close atmosphere and the moss continually damp, and in four or five weeks new roots will grow in the moss, when the tops can be cut off and potted, still keeping the plant in the same temperature until new growths start. This operation will not in any way interfere with the plants blooming, for they frequently set an abundance of buds while the top is making new roots. The brown scale is the greatest enemy of ardisias, even in the young stage, and they must be removed at once when found, for they sap the growth of the plant. The older plants should be frequently sponged with a strong nicotine solution.

Small Ferns

The fern spores that were sown in late winter should now be in condition to transplant into flats. It will be difficult to separate the plants yet into individual specimens, but little clumps can be lifted with a toothpick and planted in flats about an inch apart. The flats or boxes should not be deep; about an inch and a half of soil is sufficient. The soil should be composed of two parts of live loam and one part leaf mold, with a generous sprinkling of sand, and sifted through a fine sieve. The flats should be placed in a moist house that is well shaded and the walks kept well wet down all through the hot weather. If a nice, warm, moist temperature is maintained the plants themselves will not require much watering, only light sprinklings, and they will very rapidly root into the new soil and send forth their fronds. If the grower has not grown his own ferns, it is a good time now to place an order for them with the fern specialists, for they can be purchased at very low prices and they are very easily grown on, and where there are many fern dishes to be filled in the fall the difference in cost of the young plants lifted from the flats in midsummer and those purchased out of small pots in the fall is considerable. A thousand or more of this small stock does not take up much space and will be disposed of before the bench room is needed in the winter.

Solanums.

These little Christmas plants should not be allowed to stand around in the hot greenhouses, badly pot bound and drying up every day for they will grow hard, and it cannot be expected to obtain a good plant under these conditions. They will stand lots of abuse and do fairly well, and that is the reason, probably, that they are so often neglected during the busy days. But it is much better to plant them out in the field than to carry them along in this condition. They can easily be handled in this manner, lifting them early in the fall. They will need to be kept pinched back into shape—any strong leading shoots should be cut back when they are soft. They can be planted fairly close together, and will need frequent cultivation. If there is no suitable outside location where they can be planted out, they can be plunged in a frame and potted up as it becomes necessary, but outside treatment of some kind is far preferable to the greenhouse, which is too warm, unless shaded, and they make better growth and bloom more freely in the bright sunlight.

Primulas.

The young primulas that were sown early should now be in 3-inch pots and be given as cool and airy a location as possible. To get the best growth on these plants, they should never be subjected to great heat, for the species are naturally cool growing plants on the edges of the woodland, in their native state. Outside in a frame with a lath covering is the best place that they can be grown, the pots sunk in the soil even with the rim. In potting these plants they should be placed in the soil deep enough for them to stand firmly; they will not stand deep potting, but many growers do not pot them deeply enough, and they frequently get turned over sideways during watering. They must be watered carefully, and preferably with a can with a fine rose. The later sowings will have to be carried on in the houses until they are large enough to be placed outside. They will have to be shaded, but do not shade them heavily enough to cause them to get drawn.

Larkspur.

Larkspur, or "poison weed," is treated of in a bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture, in which it is pointed out that many losses are suffered each year by western ranchmen by reason of the stock eating the weed. There are two groups of these larkspurs on the ranges—the tall and the low varieties. The low larkspurs prefer the hills and rather dry ground, while the tall kinds grow in the canyons and gulches. Among the tall species are Delphinium barbeyi and D. cucullatum. The tall larkspur is easily distinguished after it blossoms, but in the early stages is often confused with the geranium and aconite. Of the low larkspurs, D. Nelsoni is a type. It grows in considerable abundance in Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico and Utah. The root is short and tuberous and the plant never exceeds a foot in height. The blossoms are a violet-blue. They appear, arranged in a loose raceme, in May.

Lilacs in Arnold Arboretum.

A brief summary of the lilacs now in cultivation will serve to show how large has been the addition to the material available for the making of gardens in cold countries in comparatively recent years. And what is true of lilacs is true also of malus, pyrus, crataegus, Philadelphus, diervilla, viburnum and many other genera of trees and shrubs. Before the middle of the last century gardeners in Europe and America had at their disposition the common lilac (Syringa vulgaris), and a few of its varieties including the forms with lilac and white flowers, the forms of the so-called Persian lilac (Syringa persica), with rose-colored and white flowers and one with deeply divided leaves (var. lacinata), the Himalayan lilac (S. Emodi) and the Hungarian lilac (S. Josikaea). In the Botanic Garden at Rouen, France, a hybrid between Syringa vulgaris and S. persica appeared or was artificially produced in 1810 for which the correct name is unfortunately Syringa chinensis, a name first given to it by mistake. This hybrid, which has slender stems, leaves intermediate in size between those of its parents and immense clusters of narrow-tubed, red-purple fragrant flowers, is still one of the best of lilacs. There is a form with nearly white flowers (var. alba). As early as 1843 a Belgian nurseryman had raised a double-flowered form of the common lilac which was called S. vulgaris azurca plena and which was later used by Lemoine in his plant breeding attempts to improve the flowers of the common lilac. In 1850, therefore, it was possible to plant four species of lilac with a few varieties of two of these species and one hybrid lilac. In 1857 one of the so-called tree lilacs which had been found in the valley of the Amour river in eastern Siberia by Russian botanists was described in St. Petersburg under the name of S. amurensis. This handsome plant was growing in the Harvard Botanic Garden in Cambridge 10 years later. The first of the Chinese lilacs to reach Europe, Syringa oblata, was described in London in 1859 and was imported from England into the United States as early as 1869 and perhaps earlier. This is one of the first lilacs to bloom in the spring and produces large, very fragrant, lilac-colored flowers in comparatively small-flowered clusters. From all other lilacs it differs in its thick lustrous leaves which turn scarlet in the autumn. It is a large round-topped, handsome shrub, but the flower-buds are often injured by extreme winter cold or spring frost. A hybrid between the double flowered Syringa vulgaris azurea plena and S. oblata made by Lemoine in 1859 produced the second hybrid lilac, S. hyacinthiflora, a large, round-topped shrub with small clusters of semidouble, lilac-colored, remarkably fragrant flowers. In 1878 this arboretum first raised the great Japanese tree lilac (Syringa japonica) from seed received from Sapporo in Hokkaido. For the introduction of new lilacs into the United States 1882 is an important date, for in that year the arboretum received from Dr. Bretschneider, the physician of the Russian embassy in Peking, seeds of Syringa villosa, S. pubescens and S. pekinensis. S. villosa, which has proved a valuable plant in this country where it is a round-topped, handsome bush 10 or 12 feet high and wide, with large, broadly elliptic to oblong leaves bright green and dull on the upper surface, and compact, broad or rarely narrow clusters of flesh-colored or nearly white flowers. As a garden plant this is one of the handsomest of the lilacs for its habit is excellent, and it flowers freely every year, the flowers remaining in good condition for several days. Unfortunately they have a rather disagreeable odor like those of the privet. S. villosa does not open its flowers until after those of all the forms of S. vulgaris has disappeared. By some persons it is considered the most attractive of all lilacs. Certainly the flowers of no other lilacs are so delightfully fragrant, and for this fragrance this shrub might well find a place in every northern garden. Unfortunately plants in the United States have not yet produced fertile seeds, and as this species has proved unusually difficult to increase by cuttings, it is still one of the rarest lilacs in American gardens. It can of course be increased by grafting it on other lilacs or on privet, and sooner or later no doubt fertile seeds will be produced on some of the plants established in Massachusetts. S. pubescens, which has been in bloom for several days, is one of the earliest lilacs to flower. It is a tall shrub with erect stems, small leaves, and broad clusters of pale lilac-colored flowers with a long slender corolla-tube, and unusually fragrant. In the hands of the skilful French gardener, L. Henry Syringa villosa crossed with S. Josikea has produced the third race of hybrid lilacs to which the general name of S. Henryi has been given. Plants of this breed are large, very vigorous, perfectly hardy and grow rapidly. The foliage resembles in a general way that of S. villosa, but the flowers are violet-purple or reddish purple, and are produced in great clusters 12 or 15 inches long and broad. One of the handsomest of this race has violet-purple flowers and has been named Lutece. The var. eximia has more compact clusters of rose-colored or reddish flowers which after opening become light pink. The third lilac, raised here in 1882 from Dr. Bretschneider's seeds, Syringa pekinensis, had been discovered and described as early as 1859, and was growing in Paris before it was raised in the arboretum. It is a large tree-like shrub with wide-spreading and drooping branches, and short unsymmetrical clusters of white flowers.

No additional species of Syringa was added to the arboretum collection until 1902 when the introduction of eastern Asiatic species recommenced and during the next 15 years the following Chinese and Korean species were obtained: S. Koehneana, 1902, S. affinis, 1904, S. affinis Geraldiana, 1906, S. Wolfii, 1906, S. tomentella, 1907, S. Julianae, 1907, S. Meyeri, 1908, S. Sweginzowii, 1910, S. pinnatifolia, 1911, S. reflexa, 1911, S. Sargentiana, 1911, S. microphylla, 1913, S. yunnanensis, 1915, S. velutina, 1917, S. dilatata, 1917, S. formosissima, 1917, S. Palibiniana, 1917. Varieties of the common lilac crossed by Lemoine with the north China S. affinis var. Geraldiana have founded the fourth race of hybrid lilacs. Varieties of this hybrid are tall, fast growing plants with large clusters of unusually fragrant flowers. Of the new species of lilac introduced by the arboretum during the last 20 years the most promising as garden plants are Syringa Sweginzowii, S. Julianae, S. reflexa and S. Wolfii. S. Sweginzowii is a narrow shrub with slender erect branches and long narrow clusters of slightly fragrant flowers, with a slender corolla tube, flesh-colored in the bud and becoming nearly white after the flowers open. This plant blooms freely every year and the flowers are produced in great profusion. Its relationship is with S. pubescens but it is a smaller shrub; the flowers are less fragrant, and usually 10 or 12 days later. S. Julianae is also related to S. pubescens and has the same shaped flowers with long narrow corolla tubes, but although fragrant the flowers are less fragrant than those of that species and are produced in shorter clusters. The beauty of the flowers is increased by the contrast between the violet-purple color of the outer surface of the corolla and the white inner surface of its lobes. S. reflexa resembles S. villosa in size, habit and foliage, and differs from other lilacs in its narrow pendent flower-clusters. S. Wolfii is a native of Mongolia or northern Korea and is still little known either as a wild plant or in gardens. It reached the arboretum in 1906 from St. Petersburg where it had been sent by the Russian traveler and botanist Komarov. The foliage resembles that of S. villosa but the flowers are produced in much larger clusters and are smaller and violet-purple; in color they resemble that of the flowers of the hybrid Lilac lutece but they are smaller and in denser clusters than those of that plant. When Syringa Wolfii is better known it will probably be considered one of the handsomest of this group of late-flowering lilacs.

Lovers of lilacs can now see growing in the arboretum 25 species of lilacs, the four hybrids and their forms, and some 200 varieties, raised chiefly in France and Germany, of the common lilac. Three or four species found in remote parts of China, and described by botanists, have not yet been introduced into gardens, and by the use of some of the recently introduced species plant breeders may be able to produce new races which may add new and valuable varieties for garden makers.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, May 17, 1922.

Kansas City Convention, August 15-17.

The space in the section to be devoted to the trade exhibition is being rapidly taken up. At the present time, practically all of the space in the oval, or center of the hall has been reserved and the arcade space is moving satisfactorily. There are two arcades, east and west of the oval, and all space in them is good; in fact, there is not a space laid out anywhere in the hall that suffers from a disadvantage or any kind. The outlook is that all available space will be taken up, and the exhibition will rank with the best ever staged by the society. Prospective visitors should lose no time in communicating with the secretary.

Among the contracts completed are some from such concerns as the Lord

The necessary applications have been made to the different trunk line associations for railroad rate reductions, and we are assured that they will be granted. The Trans-Continental Passenger Association has agreed to make excursion rates from Pacific coast points between the first of June and the last of August, the rates being only slightly in excess of one fare for the round trip from San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Diego, Calif., Portland, Ore., Seattle, Tacoma, Wash., Vancouver, B. C., Victoria, B. C., and Spokane, Wash. The tickets permit of stop-overs at all points going and returning. Visitors from these points should confer with their home ticket agents for detailed information.

National Publicity Campaign.

Proofs of the campaign advertisements to be used in the national magazines during June, July and August are going out this week to all subscribers to the campaign fund, to members of the Society of American Florists and others interested. These advertisements are arranged for column spaces, and will appear in the following magazines: Red Book, McLean's Magazine (Canadian), Life, Colliers, Outlook, Vanity Fair, Atlantic Monthly, World's Work, American Magazine Literary Digest, Century, Scribner's, House Beautiful, Sunset, Independent, Harper's Magazine and Review of Reviews.

There is nothing to prevent a vigorous prosecution of the campaign from now on, excepting the one thing which has operated against it all along, shortage of funds, most of which has been subscribed, on paper, but is subject to a very tardy remittance. It might be well, right here, to impress upon all delinquents that the publicity committee can no longer prejudice personal credits in order to maintain the good work of the campaign. A pledge is a pledge, or should be, and the committee has a moral right to depend upon it, especially when arrangements for publicity must be made months in advance. Nobody now questions the immense amount of good brought about by the use of our slogan, nor could the question arise. One has only to look over the advertising pages of a national magazine to see how the influence of flowers has been sought to give emphasis to sentiment expected to arouse interest in other lines, and this influence has been brought to the notice of those who seek to use it by our campaign work. Observe how flowers are featured in the illustrations. Realize the value of the delicate uses flowers are put in the various exemplifications. It is getting so that a prominent advertisement must in some form feature flowers. All this is publicity for our products, and costs the florists nothing.

LILAC RUBRA TRIANONIANA.

The slogan, "Say It With Flowers," works in countless ways, too many to make specific mention possible — still, our committee has to beg for subscriptions, and, further, urge many who have sent in pledges to make them good. Is this right? Is this the return they should expect for their work, unselfishly performed?

Every delinquent in the matter of a campaign pledge should pride himself that he is not longer going to withhold from the campaign the support that he tendered. The most remote neighborhood in these days is reached by the various magazines the committee uses, and there should be satisfaction when a florist turns their pages to find the campaign, his own, advertisements flashing their message, all to the good of the industry from which he makes his living. Pay up, gentlemen, if you please!

STREET VENDERS RULED OUT.

A matter of great interest to the trade was the order issued forbidding the sale of cut flowers on the streets. For many years some few of the retailers have tried to have this street competition stopped but without avail. It has been brought about now by a combination of circumstances. Parking of automobiles has to be done in the thronged retail section within lines drawn at certain angles. On account of the flower sellers taking up room on the sidewalk so as to prevent easy access to and from the cars, some would park into the forbidden area, resulting in arrest, fine and a lot of trouble, with blame thrown on the flower men for blocking the available space. Then several banana and fruit vendors were arrested and fined for selling on the streets and strongly objected, as they could not see why cut flowers could be sold and not fruit. They employed counsel who advised them to sell and get arrested. The cases were appealed to court with the result that no commodity can be sold on the streets in the central shopping districts. This, according to the wholesalers, is a great blow to the flower business as all the accumulations of stock was sold by the street men and there is no increase in the buying of the stores to show that the street trade is coming to them.

Another ruling that handicapped the market florists, who have since the introduction of the prepared materials and waxed imitation flowers done a large business with designs of this character, is that they cannot display more than three made-up pieces of this work at any one time except at holidays. The government has bought this market property and have found in the original deed of gift, it was to be used solely for the sale of fresh farm or garden truck, meats, eggs, etc., and on this ground they make their ruling against the imitation prepared materials. Some say that the fresh cut flower men who have stalls objected, but none of them plead guilty. It is said that sooner or later this market will be removed to another location as the large Memorial Hall, in memory of George Washington, for which money is now being actively collected, is to occupy the site of the old Pennsylvania railroad depot close by, and the neighborhood will be made in keeping with this fine building. This hall will be available for large meetings and conventions for which this city is fast becoming popular. There is also to be erected in the near future a large convention and exhibition hall which will adequately house automobile and other exhibitions requiring such facilities. This is to be located at Seventeenth street and New York avenue.

NOTES.

Gude Bros. Co.'s new store next door to their present location, the property of which was purchased by them over three years ago, is now being altered for their use and will be ready about August 1. This will make a magnificent show room, the front being 28x80 feet and continuing half this width from this point, 100 feet farther to the rear street. The two front windows are nine feet in width by 16 feet in depth. The interior is being fitted up with the idea of making it one of the handsomest cut flower stores in the country.

Manager Bauer, of the S. S. Pennock Co., said it would take more demand and less flowers to even things up. There was an abundance of excellent stock in all lines, with the peonies now in to further weigh the market down. Lowering prices made no difference as the retailers only bought for their daily needs. Shutting off the street competition would not help the retailers one iota. These street men formerly handled one-fourth of the stock and now it would only pile up as a surplus.

Blackstone, Inc., who recently added to their cut flower and candy stores adjoining, are well satisfied with the season's business and that of Mothers' Day, which was very large. A strong bid was made for Memorial Day trade, a made-up wreath on a panel in the window and other set pieces, calling the public's attention to the event.

George Shaffer finds a steady increase in business. An especially strong appeal is made for F. T. D. business which, he says, is a very important factor with him. His original window cards bidding for this trade are very attractive. One reads "Cheer delivered anywhere with flowers to all parts of the world."

Adolph Gude's new wholesale house is modern and complete in every respect and handles the entire output of their large Anacostia greenhouses. Their cut of white carnations for Mothers' Day was over 20,000. Large supplies of roses and other cut flowers as well as plants are also seen in quantity.

The feature of the week was the large attendance of representative men of the trade from all parts of the country in attendance at the conference before the horticultural board in the matter of Quarantine No. 37. Many of these called upon the wholesale and retail stores renewing old acquaintances.

F. W. Meyer has succeeded the Washington Floral Co., 724 Fourteenth street, opening in March, since which time he has done a very satisfactory and increasing business. The shop looks up-to-date with a prettily dressed window across the center of which is a sign, "Say It To Meyers."

In the Dupont Flower Shop, with its well lighted interior and extensive show windows, there is always a fine display of plants. The front window featured the horse show, a fashionable event now on, in a well planned decoration. Trade for the season had been very satisfactory.

The Leo Niessen Co. were carrying a full line of flowers, fine roses, carnations, gladioli and peonies. There was a good Mothers' Day trade but the putting the boys off the street had made it hard to get rid of the surplus. New dagger ferns were a feature.

There is always activity in F. H. Kramer's large and busy store. Great stock of all kinds of plants and made-up wreaths and sprays of artificial flowers are seen in quantity. Fred is always on the job and to this attributes his success.

The Oehmler Floral Co. is making preparations for a good Memorial Day business with prepared wreaths and other designs. Small baskets for Mothers' Day had sold very well and business generally had been satisfactory.

The Louise Flower Shop finds plenty to keep them busy day by day. Since Mothers' Day they have had several important weddings. Miss Daugherty spent Thursday, May 18, in New York on important business.

George Cook's shop was well stocked with foliage and bedding plants. Landscape work, which was a specialty, was just now at its height. Weddings and other decorative work also kept them busy.

F. F. Leibley finds bedding plants and pot roses a good side line at this time. He specializes on funeral work and carries quite a line of made-up pieces of prepared stock as well as cut flowers.

At W. Marche Co.'s there was a large display of bedding plants with a special sale of ferns. Business had been very good for the season.

TRADE BRISK TOWARD WEEK-END.

The business in this city is growing rapidly, so fast that it now takes six wholesale houses to supply the demand. These establishments are in a sense like hospitals; the public got along without them but immediately they were established they have all the trade they can attend to. The light business since in contrast with the strong call for Mothers' Day makes the past week's showing rather poor, still there was a pretty good cleanup on Friday and Saturday and results were fair for the season.

NOTES.

Samuel Feast & Sons are about to make an important move, having purchased the property 527 North Charles street, three blocks above their present location, where, in a building 27½x128 feet, they intend to fit up one of the most modern cut flower stores in the country. The property extends to a rear street, the fall of the ground permitting of motor cars entering the rear, underneath the first floor. The show-room, 27½x50 feet, will contain two flower cases, one on either side, with a wide central stairway at the rear leading to the offices. Spacious workrooms in the rear, with large storage refrigerators, will give them advantages they do not enjoy in their present cramped quarters, which their increasing business has long outgrown. Alterations will go forward at once so as to have the store completed and ready for occupancy early in the autumn.

Preparations for the coming Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association convention are going forward surely and steadily. A large attendance is expected and will receive the hospitality for which this city is noted, next October. The business of the organization, or, rather, the service, through its members is rapidly growing in this city. Samuel Feast & Son, who were the first members here, say Mothers' Day business from out of town was the largest they have ever experienced, as was also the orders originating in their shop. R. L. Graham stated that an ad he had placed in the local newspapers had brought him a surprisingly large amount of business, several of the orders being for delivery abroad. Mary Johnson also reported an increased telegraph trade, both incoming and outgoing.

W. F. Ekas, who is specializing at present in plants of all kinds, has done remarkably well since he opened in March. Well budded pot roses are a feature. A splendid stock of ferns were selling well. He is sure from the demand he had that growers could sell quantities of flowering plants for Mothers' Day.

The growers are expanding their facilities. Mathew Richmond is adding two houses, 27x150 feet. Edward F. Holden plans for a new house, 20x100 feet, while Chas. T. Siegwart says he must find room for his ever-increasing stock of cattleyas, and contemplates one or more new houses.

Seick & Glick are pleased with the rapid growth of their business. Very choice roses, sweet peas and carnations are features of the stock. In common with others, early in the week was dull but a large quantity was unloaded Saturday.

The Baltimore Wholesale Florists' & Supply Co., who carry plants as well as cut flowers and supplies, found business dull through the week but an extra call on Friday and Saturday. Quantities of peonies are a feature.

At Leo Niessen Co.'s peonies were going slowly; they are good stock when other flowers are scarce but not otherwise. Considering the quantity of stock of all kinds the demand is good but prices low.

Glick & Guerth is a young firm but ambitious and are trying in every way to fit the slogan "Watch us grow" to their business. So far they have exceeded their expectations.

The S. S. Pennock Co. reports a fair demand but prices too low, so much stock having to be handled to amount to anything in money, or satisfactory returns for the growers.

LARGE VOLUME, LOWER PRICES, MOTHERS' DAY.

A very large volume of business was done Mothers' Day at prices more moderate than in 1921. The weather preceding May 14 was hot, which reduced the quality of indoor stock to a great degree, the supply of inferior stock being ahead of the good, the latter bringing quoted prices, while the inferior grades went cheaply. The call for pot plants was exceptionally brisk and the supply likewise. All in all it was a great success.

NOTES.

The annual May ball of the local Florists' Club, held at the Calumet Club, May 17, was well attended and everybody apparently had a fine time. The ballroom, lobby and fireplaces were artistically decorated and everyone wore flowers. Henry Welke, Walter Halliday and A. Hare, the committee in charge, are to be congratulated on the all around success of the affair.

J. B. Kavelage and wife announce the marriage of their daughter, Eleanore, to Harold Baumgarten, May 17. A wedding dinner was served at the Athletic Club following the ceremony. The young couple will be at home at 328 Twenty-sixth street. Harold has many friends amongst the craft, who wish him and Mrs. Baumgarten bon voyage on the seas of matrimony.

Wm. Edlefsen, of Lorane, Ore., arrived, May 15, to look after his greenhouse interests at Twenty-first street and Atkinson avenue, which will be vacated by Fred Gutermuth after July 1.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. M. Pohl, aged 89 years, on May 17. She is survived by three sons and one daughter. Further particulars will be found in the obituary column.

HEAVY DECLINE IN TRADE.

The market had a bad set back this week on roses, carnations and sweet peas, the reaction coming soon after the opening on Monday. The high prices which stock brought for Mothers' Day was neutralized this past week. The amount of stock moved at a fair seasonable price was not 10 per cent of what arrived in the market. The balance was moved off to street boys or sent to hospitals. There is nothing else to say for the business this week. The stores complained of the high prices of a week ago saying that they acted as a boom-crang to the business.

GARDENERS' AND FLORISTS' CLUB.

The regular monthly meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club was held at Horticultural hall, May 16. Prof. H. F. Thompson of the Lexington Experiment station, gave a lecture on "Market Gardening." It was voted to hold a ladies' night in June, the date to be set later. It was also decided to hold the annual picnic in July. J. Harris, of Penn the Florist, furnished some very good entertainment.

Morris August, the Dudley Terminal Florist, has gone to the hospital to be operated on.

The directors of the markets held a meeting on May 20 in regard to a new location. Three sites were discussed but nothing is decided yet.

OBITUARY.

Frank F. Benthley.

Frank F. Benthley, well-known florist, died at Chicago, May 21, at the age of 71. He was born in Germany, but spent the greater part of his life in this city, being engaged in the florist business about 50 years. His first position was with W. B. Farrell who conducted a retail store at Wabash avenue near Harrison street at the time. He worked for several other retailers and later entered the wholesale cut flower market. In more recent years he was associated with Benthley & Coatesworth, Kyle & Foerster, Zech & Mann, Kennicott Bros. Co. and A. T. Pyfer & Co. with whom he was identified up to the time he was taken sick about six months ago.

Mr. Benthley was the second president of the Chicago Florists' Club, serving in 1887. He has been active in trade matters and assisted the late John Thorpe in the horticultural department at the World's Fair. He was well informed on trade subjects and was always ready to furnish information to those seeking it. His wife died several years ago and he is survived by the following children: Frederick, Edwin, Frank, Herbert and Irene Benthley, Mrs. L. C. Coatesworth, Mrs. Lincoln R. Clubine, Mrs. Walter P. Harder, Mrs. August J. Beckman and Mrs. Harry Riddell.

The funeral was held Tuesday, May 23, at 2 p. m. from the late residence, 4310 North Hermitage avenue, with interment at Rosehill cemetery. A. Lange, H. N. Bruns, A. T. Pyfer, H. B. Kennicott, T. E. Waters and John Degnan acted as pallbearers, representing all branches of the trade. The floral offerings were many and beautiful and the large attendance at the funeral was a fitting testimonial to the man who served his profession so well. The family has the sincere sympathy of the trade in the loss of a loving father and companion.

Mrs. Mary B. F. Martin.

Mrs. Mary Barr Fulton Martin, wife of H. O. Martin, well known florist and market gardener of What Cheer, Ia., died at her home in that city, May 1, after a brief illness, age 63 years. She was born at Beith, Ayrshire, Scotland, and had resided in What Cheer for over 30 years. Being of a retiring disposition, Mrs. Martin was a great home lover, a kind mother, and one who took a great interest in the florist business.

Mrs. Martin leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, a son, R. W. Martin, at home, two daughters, Nan, of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Butts, of What Cheer. The funeral services were held at the late home, May 4, interment being at Highland cemetery.

John Gollan.

John Gollan, well known grower at Downers Grove, Ill., died at his home Saturday, May 20, from pneumonia. Mr. Gollan was born in Scotland and was about 50 years of age, with the greater part of his life being spent at Downers Grove in the florist business where he grew greens for the Chicago market. He was a stockholder in the Chicago Flower Growers' Association and was highly thought of in the village in which he lived. The funeral was held from his home the following Tuesday at 2 p. m. with interment at Bronswood cemetery, Hinsdale. He is survived by a wife who has the sympathy of the trade in her great loss.

Philip Pfisterer.

Philip Pfisterer, 84 years of age, died a few days ago at his home in Winchester, Ind., of Bright's disease. For more than 30 years past Mr. Pfisterer had greenhouses at Winchester and was widely known to the trade in that section of the state. He was born in Germany, but came to America and located in Winchester in 1864 and had lived there ever since. Mr. Pfisterer and wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary seven years ago. He is survived by his wife, two sons and one daughter.

Mrs. May Bonnot.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Mrs. May Bonnot, wife of Leon Bonnot, the well known florist of 228 Eighth avenue, New York. Mrs. Bonnot had been an invalid for several years and passed away at St. Francis hospital, that city, May 20. The burial was at Easton, Pa., where relatives of the deceased reside.

A. F. F.

Mrs. Marie Pohl.

Mrs. Marie Pohl died at her home in Milwaukee, Wis., May 17, age 79 years. She is survived by three sons, Gustave A., Herman J. and Walter Pohl, and a daughter, Mrs. M. J. Phillip. The funeral services were held from the funeral home of W. C. Feerick & Son, 1321 Grand avenue, interment being at Forest Home cemetery.

John Nelson.

John Nelson, one of the pioneer florists of Chicago, died May 15, at the residence of his niece, Louise E. Nelson, 1517 North Linder avenue, that city, age 80 years.

American Iris Society.

DATE OF SHOW ADVANCED.

The eastern exhibition of the American Iris Society will be held in the Museum building, Bronx Park, New York, May 27, one week earlier than announced in last week's issue, page 890, due to the advanced season. The flowers will be staged May 26 and the annual meeting will be held the following day in connection with the show. Mrs. Geo. V. Nash, New York Botanic Garden, Bronx Park, New York, is secretary of the society.

Parcel Post Rates.

In view that increased costs of handling parcel post mail necessitates a corresponding advance in parcel post rates, Postmaster General Hubert Work is writing to a large number of parcel post users to get their views on the proposed change. Since January 1, 1913, when parcel post service was instituted, there has been practically no change in the rates of parcel post service. Then the parcel post business comprised less than five per cent of all the mail handled; now it is more than 60 per cent. The cost of railroad mail transportation has increased 60 per cent, salaries of assistant postmasters 65 per cent, city delivery carriers 35 per cent, railway mail clerks 74 per cent. Large increases have been made in the salaries of rural route carriers and others in the service. These increases amounted to more than $300,000,000 for 1921 above those of 1913.

Two remedies have been suggested, one being to enact a service charge of one or two cents on each parcel mailed, regardless of weight or zone, and, to readjust rates by weight and zone. The replies which the postmaster general will receive from large users of parcel post are expected to carry weight with the department in its decision.

Landscape Gardening Textbook.

We are in receipt of the "Textbook of Landscape Gardening," by Frank A. Waugh, professor and head of the department of landscape gardening and chief of the division of horticulture of the Massachusetts Agricultural college, Amherst. The book has just been published and contains 344 pages, each 6 3/4 x 9 7/8 inches, printed on a high quality of heavy paper, with 168 fine illustrations and charts. The book is designed for the instruction of those who do not intend to become professional landscape gardeners. At the same time the author sincerely hopes that it will not turn any good men away from the profession.

The plan of the book is to teach the necessary lessons of the art through the actual work of the student upon concrete problems, who is assisted in his endeavors by a large number of diagrams and charts. Through a working understanding of these principles the student is shown how to apply them to the domestic landscape problems of the ordinary citizen and civic needs. It hopes to bring the student into intelligent contact with the natural landscape, giving him a key to its un-surpassable beauty, pointing out its great social value and indicating what should be done by nations, states and communities for the preservation and use of the native landscape.

The "Textbook of Landscape Gardening" covers the various phases of the art in nine divisions, namely, the introductory, surveying, landscape gardening details, architectural details, domestic landscape gardening, civic problems, plant materials and planting, native landscape and literature or bibliography of landscape gardening. In landscape gardening details, methods of laying off the entrance road to private and public estates, automobile turn, cemetery lot, park entrance, baseball field, tennis court, etc., are fully explained. Civic problems treat of the court house square, railroad station grounds, small town square, civic centers, country road systems and various other phases. In plant materials and planting the student is introduced to the principal kinds, habits and requirements of trees, hardy shrubs and climbing vines, and the uses of foundation planting, shrubby border and mixed border. Domestic landscape gardening takes up the various phases of the small house lot, suburban home grounds, the formal garden, a garden in natural style and the farmstead group. The concluding feature of the book thoroughly considers the natural landscape, such as the national parks and forests, country road, the brook, state and neighborhood parks and the duty of the landscape gardener in conserving, protecting and interpreting this type of landscape, thus making it more accessible to the people as a whole.

Utah Postal Inspection.

The Post Office Department has issued an order, effective immediately, that packages containing plants or plant products destined to points in Utah may be accepted for mailing only when plainly marked, so that the contents may be easily ascertained by an inspection of the outside of the package, in accordance with the action of that state in establishing centers for terminal inspection. This service will be maintained at Salt Lake City, Provo, Price, Ogden, Logan, Brigham City, Heber, Delta and Farmington and all postmasters in Utah will be required to send promptly every package of plants or plant products to the nearest inspection point.

New York State Fair.

The eighty-second annual New York State Fair will be held at the State Fair grounds, Syracuse, September 11-16. Prof. D. Lumsden of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., has again been appointed superintendent of the flower department and is now making arrangements to take care of the largest exhibit of gladioli, dahlias, roses and asters ever staged at the fair. Premium lists may be obtained from the secretary, J. Dan Ackerman, Jr., New York State Fair, Syracuse, N. Y.

MOTHERS' DAY BUSINESS GREAT SUCCESS.

Florists here are well pleased over their tremendous business for one of the greatest flower days of the year. Gone are the days when only a white carnation was worn in the lapel; gone are the days when white flowers were necessary for mothers' memory and bright flowers for mothers living; gone are the days when flower shops could not show a variety of salable plants for this occasion. Co-operative publicity and advertising have changed the entire aspect of the situation in this city. Carnations are no longer the leading sellers; sweet peas, roses and all other cut flowers move easily. Plants have not only increased in supply and variety but sell with almost the same ease as at Easter; even ferns, pandanus, dracaenas, etc., are in great demand as Mothers' Day expressions. Flower shops throughout the city looked as if they were preparing for Easter, showing a profusion of plants which included hydrangeas, primroses, rose bushes, pelargoniums, daisies, begonias and others. The weather in the earlier part of the week was warm, bringing flowers out in great profusion; later it cooled off. Sunday was a perfect day and crowds thronged the shops all day long. Almost everything was cleaned up at the close of the day's business. Cut flowers were nearly sufficient for demand and quality was good in most cases. Retailers complained some about pickled stock. Sweet peas were plentiful as were roses and these sold briskly. Some retailers did not stock any carnations and report that they got along very well without them which shows how business can be trained along certain lines. Telegraphic orders showed a substantial increase and all in all the day was most satisfactory. Unfavorable publicity in the press was limited by judicious work on the part of the publicity committee.

A FINE PUBLICITY STROKE.

The Florists' Club came back on the attacks of Miss Anna Jarvis with a vicious counter-attack and a barrage of publicity that made Mothers' Day one of the greatest ever experienced here. Growers donated plants while the retailers decorated them and each mother in such institutions as the Old Ladies' Home, County Infirmary, etc., were remembered with a plant bearing a card, "To Mother from the Florists' Club." Just to see these wrinkled faces light up was enough reward to say nothing of the free publicity obtained by this stroke. It is one of a number of effective ways of counteracting attacks without saying much. Co-operative advertising was used with fine results.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING.

One of the pepest, stormiest and most educational meetings ever held by the local Florists' Club, took place at Suder's Greenhouses shortly before Mothers' Day, President Armine Suder in the chair. It was very well attended. The subject of growers selling to grocers at Easter time who undersell florists was brought up. Growers and retailers argued the question from their respective standpoints with great frankness. Concerning Mothers' Day, it was resolved that flowers should be sold at the most reasonable prices possible and that high prices would eventually ruin the day if not curbed.

NOTES.

National Hospital Day, May 12, was observed here and the florists did their share to make it a success, contributing flowers and palms for decorations. They also advertised the day. It comes too close to Mothers' Day when flowers are scarce and high priced.

The Federation of Women's Clubs is conducting a city beautiful campaign which is helping the spring planting campaign of the florists. Bedding stock of all kinds is moving lively although there is a great stock of geraniums.

The F. T. D. display window of the Spanner Flower Shop attracted a lot of favorable comment during the past week and resulted in a great increase of such orders. Mothers' Day was good at this shop.

Des Moines Floral Arts Club.

The Floral Arts Club of Des Moines, Ia., held its monthly meeting in Yonker's Tea room, May 16. F. E. Wethered spoke of Keosauqua way, a diagonal thoroughfare passing through this city, and the proposed boulevard system.

The Garden Club recently held an outdoor daffodil show on the home grounds owned by former Senator Addison M. Parker, West 37th street. The spacious lawn was beautifully laid out with plots of these spring flowers, the collection of Narcissus Leedsii, planted by Mrs. Langtry being especially noteworthy, which had been growing there for three years. The Garden Club held another outdoor show on the adjoining grounds of Mrs. Henrietta Pfeifer and Mrs. Meyer Rosenfield, May 11, thousands of Darwin, Breeder and Cottage tulips greeting the eyes of the visitors. These were carefully labeled so that those interested could tell what kinds and colors appealed to them the most. The club is to be congratulated upon the success of these shows.

ORDER NOW FOR MEMORIAL DAY.

Business was rather quiet the past week, but the demand was good, May 20 when a large supply of stock was moved and is improving as we go to press. Peonies are arriving in large quantities and will be in heavy supply for the holiday with prices reasonable compared to former years. The receipts of gladioli are large, but the demand for them is good and the market is well cleaned up on this item at all times. Carnations are arriving in quantity and considerable pushing is needed to keep the stock moving even at reduced prices. Roses are to be had in quantity at attractive prices, but fancy stock is commanding a good figure. Lily of the valley and orchids are holding their own. Cape jasmine made their appearance in larger quantities the past week and the early shipments are arriving in splendid condition. Lilac is still obtainable and some southern narcissus are to be had. Sweet peas are quite a factor in the market and the supply of snapdragons is equal to the demand. Daisies, lilies, callas, calendulas, mignonette, pansies, larkspur, statice, lupines, stocks, tulips, forget-me-nots and other miscellaneous indoor and outdoor flowers are included in the offerings. Greens are in good supply with one of the wholesalers ready to supply huckleberry in quantity at a moment's notice. The outlook is bright for a heavy Memorial Day business, and while stock promises to be in large supply for this occasion, it is well to place all orders in advance. The supply houses report a heavy call for made-up wreaths for Memorial day with new orders arriving in every mail. Practically all the wholesale cut flower houses will be open for business Sunday, May 28.

AMERICAN BULB CO.'S PICNIC.

Secretary Albert Koehler, of the American Bulb Co., piloted some 50 couples, via automobile to Morton Grove, where they were the guests for the day of Guy French and wife and their beautiful children. After a bountiful repast, various games were indulged in, followed by a ladies' beauty contest, which was judged by Coroner Peter M. Hoffman, who is a candidate for Cook county sheriff, and predicted by his many friends a sure winner for this important office. After holding a "post-mortem" Mr. Hoffman was unable to choose a winner from the galaxy of beauty in attendance, and therefore declared a draw, presenting a box of "Rosie's" famous Morton Grove marshmallows to each lady, the same being toasted on an old-fashioned bonfire in the Forest preserve, which closely adjoins the beautiful French residence. An added feature was a "Coney Island Weinerwurst" eating contest between traveling representatives of the firm, Mr. French, Mr. Rosnosky, Mr. Neil, Mr. Nielson and Mr. Degnan. "Ros" won by "three links" and at latest report the doctor says he will be able to be about after taking an order for the famous A. B. C. supreme quality Lilium giganteum. A well sunburnt party motored back to this city after voting the French family royal hosts and having enjoyed the time of their lives.

NOTES.

The Wholesale Cut Flower Dealers' Association met at the Hotel Randolph, Thursday, May 18, when the election of officers was held as follows: Eric Johnson, president; A. T. Pyfer, vice-president; A. C. Kohlbrand, secretary; Phil Schupp, treasurer. John Michelsen declined the nomination as president and requested all the members to vote for Mr. Johnson.

WHOLESALE FLORISTS

1324 Pine Street,

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Established 1905

A large number in the trade attended the funeral of the late John Loeser, with the Joseph Foerster Co., May 20. John Kruchten, Leonard Koehler, Louis Hoeckner, Archie Spencer, Robert Northam and William Benzing acted as pallbearers and it is estimated that there were over 75 floral offerings sent to the home, showing the high esteem in which he was held by the trade. An account of his death appeared in the obituary column last week, page 889.

L. S. Elder, of Hartje & Elder, Indianapolis, Ind., was here this week on business. His firm is building a new Moninger house to be the home of the new pink carnation recently named Winsome. This variety has made a very creditable showing at the recent shows and was on display here at the last annual convention and exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America.

Paul Klingsporn, George Weiland, Chas. McCauley, Fred Schramm, Frank Schramm, Ed. Muret, Rudolph Ellsworth and J. F. Kidwell attended the Golland funeral at Downers Grove, May 23. The late Mr. Golland was a stockholder of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association which concern the above named gentlemen are connected with.

The Commercial Flower Growers' Association met at the Hotel Randolph, May 18, when publicity and insurance were the two principal subjects discussed. President Pearson appointed a committee, consisting of Otto Amling, Andrew Benson and Rudolph Ellsworth, to make arrangements for the annual banquet to be held in June.

The passing of Frank Bentley removes a real landmark from the local trade. He was at the flower counter of King & Savage on State street, present Marshall Field block, right after the Chicago fire. He was also with Hovy & Co. at one time.

Vaughan's Seed Store is doing a fine counter trade in gladiolus bulbs, canna plants, roses in bloom and bedding stock generally. Yellow King Humbert canna is in good demand. Import bulb prices are quoted.

John Witt has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his wife, whose death occurred last week. The funeral was held from the home at 10423 Wallace street, May 22, with interment at Mount Hope cemetery.

The J. A. Budlong Co. is doing a splendid shipping business and everything is ready for a brisk Memorial Day trade. Ed. Martin is back on the job after being on the sick list for a couple of days.

Emil Maerz, with Chas. H. Fisk and a party of friends, drove to McHenry, May 20, to enjoy a few hours fishing. Mrs. Maerz and family leave next week to spend the summer at their cottage there.

Wietor Bros. will be through with the wholesale cut flower business May 31, as mentioned in the last issue of THE AMERICAN FLORIST.

The D. E. Freres Co. will handle the stock from the range that the Angel Guardian Orphanage purchased from Wietor Bros.

Joseph Kohout's new range at Libertyville is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for planting soon.

At Tonner's establishment gladioli are in heavy supply and large shipments of peonies are arriving daily.

J. G. A. Johnson, of Johnson & Chronis, is back from a business trip to Alabama.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. is cutting some of the finest Cattleya gigas ever seen in this market, as well as other varieties of the same family. Stock in general, including peonies, are in large supply for Memorial Day at this establishment, which will render day and night service in the shipping department, May 26-27-28-29.

Dan Simonds arranged the decorations at the Woods theater, on Mothers' Day, when the local lodge No. 4, B. P. O. Elks celebrated the occasion, previous mention being made in the last issue. His tooth is one of the oldest in the city and his heart and soul is wrapped up in this organization.

Peter Reinberg, Inc., will have an increased supply of stock after June 1 and the store force will be enlarged when Gust. Alles and Charles Drissler of Wietor Bros.' staff join it.

Zech & Mann are strong on peonies in addition to all other seasonable stock for Memorial Day. Roses are in good supply at this house, not to mention carnations.

The Atlantic Floral Co. has discontinued the candy department at its West Madison street store and will handle cut flowers exclusively in the future.

Miss Augusta Harper, formerly with E. H. Hunt and later with Bassett & Washburn, has joined the office force at Tonner's, acting as bookkeeper.

A. Henderson & Co. are having brisk demand for bedding stock and vegetable plants this week.

St. Louis, Mo.

STOCK SELLING WELL.

Stock sold very well last week, the briskness being attributed to the influence of the Mothers' Day advertising, the effect of which was noticeable even after the publicity had ceased in the newspapers. The quality of roses is nothing exceptional, the outer petals being unusually burnt and the bloom's keeping quality not as good as during previous weeks. Outdoor flowers are in heavy supply, corn flowers, gladioli, larkspurs, both single and double, gaillardias and coreopsis constituting the bulk of the offerings. Prices are good for this stock. The call for the more staple flowers is somewhat less. Lily of the valley, carnations and roses moved slowly.

display house of the Missouri Botanical garden, recently, was a great success. There were numerous amateur and commercial exhibitors. W. A. Rowe, Kirkwood, won most of the prizes in the commercial group, displaying some exceptional carnations, sweet peas, gladioli, calendulas and delphiniums. The Woodlawn Gardens, Edwardsville, Ill., received several first and many second awards, with roses, carnations and gladioli. Sweet peas, snapdragons, delphiniums and gladioli were shown by O. C. May, Sappington, who carried off a number of first prizes. W. T. Pilcher, Rock Hill road, had several prize winning vases of roses. A vase of superb gaillardias, some of the flowers being three inches in diameter, won a first prize for Geo. B. Windler. In the amateur classes, awards were offered for cut flowers, pot plants and arrangements. Some very exceptional cut flowers were shown including digitalis, delphiniums, columbines, perennial poppies and irises. In pots nearly all of the hardy perennials were seen as well as many annuals. J. K. M.

BIDDEFORD, ME.—Strouts, Inc., sustained some loss by hail, May 7, when 300 lights in its greenhouses were smashed and others cracked. The Saco Flower Co. also reported some damage.

TRADE FAIRLY SATISFACTORY.

Trade has been about all that could be expected and retailers in all sections of the city profess to see an improvement in many ways. The employment situation has improved considerably and a better demand for flowers and plants is developing. The feature of the daily call is the sale of roses, carnations, sweet peas and peonies of good quality. Roses bring $3 to $8 per dozen and the varieties are mostly Premier, Columbia, Sunburst, Ward and Butterfly. Carnations are selling around $2 per dozen, while peonies are selling from $3 to $5 per dozen. Funeral work has been rather active and all florists have been sharing in this work. Some orders for graduation entertainments and receptions have been secured. The graduation season at the various schools and colleges is near at hand. Pot plants are selling exceptionally well and many householders are filling porch boxes and hanging baskets.

IRIS SHOW.

The regular iris show given in the Archaeological Museum building at the Ohio State university, May 20-21 by the local Iris Society was a success in every particular. The attendance during the two days was exceptionally large and many displays from out of town were exhibited. Charles Wing, of the Wing Seed Co., Mechanicsburg, had a table of 50 varieties of seedlings which attracted considerable attention. A smaller display of seedlings was made by Charles Grosvenor, Napoleon, who was a big exhibitor in the professional class. Prizes for the best individual exhibits of 50 kinds or more were won by Mrs. E. J. Spencer first and Mrs. Dudley Filler second. Prizes for the best artistic arrangement were won by Mrs. E. J. Spencer, first; Mrs. S. R. Merrick, second, and Mrs. Malcolm McDonald, third. The award for the best collection of 25 varieties or more of irises was won by Mrs. J. C. Arbuckle, this city, first; Geo. Sifrit, second, and Miss Nellie Ustick, third. For the best collection of bearded irises Mrs. J. C. Arbuckle was the winner. She also won the prize for the best collection of Iris Hexagona foliosa. Many amateur growers received pointers at the show. The judges were W. H. Grosvenor, Napoleon; Charles Wing, Mechanicsburg, and Dr. Bales, Circleville. The officers of the club are: Mrs. J. C. Arbuckle, Shepard, president; Prof. H. C. Hottes, first vice-president; Mrs. Alex. Johnson, second vice-president; Mrs. J. R. Poste, secretary; Mrs. E. J. Spencer, treasurer; Mrs. Edw. Howard, chairman executive committee; Mrs. Raymond Dalzell, chairman garden committee.

FLOWER GROWERS' AND RETAILERS' ASS'N.

The regular meeting of the Flower Growers' and Retailers' Association, which was held at the Chittenden hotel May 16, was well attended. The question of holding a flower show took up the entire evening's time following a dinner. Many different opinions were expressed, but all agreed that a flower show under the auspices of the local association was a good thing. It is proposed to hold the show in October, the exact date and place to be decided later. At the next meeting, May 30, it is hoped to have all of the details ironed out and possibly the appointment of a committee to have charge.

One of the features of the gallery of fine arts on East Broad street, this city, is a large iris garden which contains about 225 different kinds. The seeds were donated by the Wing Seed Co., Inc., Mechanicsburg, and comprised about 225 varieties of pogon or bearded irises, as well as a number of apagon or beardless varieties. Vari-colored species from Siberia and Japan are also included in the garden. Among the most beautiful kinds are Mary Garden, Trojana, Crusader, Black Knight, White Knight, Sappho, Erich, Afterglow, Sarpoden, Stamboul, Nine Wells, Mt. Penn, Opera and others.

A good call for pot plants and seasonable flowers by Carl W. Huber, 964 Lockbourne avenue. His plant is one of the modern ones of the city and the capacity is being gradually increased.

Underwood Bros., florists and growers on Fair avenue, report a decided improvement in the call for plants and ferns. The firm will soon start a number of improvements at its plant.

The Vanity Flower Shop, 701 North High street, is a newcomer among the retailers. This concern has been in operation a few months and is getting along very nicely.

STOCK CLEANS UP AT LOWER PRICES.

The market was very full of flowers the past week with only a slight demand during the early part, but which strengthened on Friday and Saturday so that with all high-grade stock sold up, and joblets to the street men, the boxes were cleaned out, making a fairly satisfactory week for the season. The quality of the stock is fine and there is good variety. Mrs. Chas. Russell, Premier, Columbia, Butterfly and Pilgrim roses are exceptionally good for the season, as are also Double White Killarney. Prices, while low, are satisfactory as most of the stock is sold. Carnations are much more plentiful than last year and just now are having a hard time in competition as are all flowers, for that matter, with peonies. These latter have come in a week or 10 days earlier than usual, and were never better in condition. They brought six to eight cents up to May 20, and dropped to four and six cents May 22. Snapdragon is working over time, there being quantities in all grades that is sold in job lots or not at all. Callas are still plentiful and the quality very good. Easter lilies have shortened up and will from now on be in the hands of specialists. Candytuft, pyrethrum, annual larkspurs and cornflowers, the latter nearly all double, are seen in quantity. Sweet peas are still plentiful, but beginning to show that their season is closing, as most of the stock is short stemmed. Very good gladioli are coming from a number of growers and is one of the best sellers. There is a full line of greens, the new crop of dagger ferns being a great help.

MEMORIAL DAY.

activeness of the American Legion, promises to be the greatest of any that have gone before. A large wholesaler said the call could be greatly increased if the retail stores would only feature the event as they should. Most of them wait for the demand, when it is up to them to create it. "Flowers for Memorial Day" should be the sign in all the florist's windows, along with made-up wreaths, sprays and pans of growing plants. People would buy flowers here the same as in the New England states if we make it the custom.

FLORIST'S CLUB MEETING, JUNE 6.

The essay committee is to be congratulated in having secured as a speaker, for the June 6 meeting, our honorable mayor, J. Hampton Moore, whose subject is to be the "Sesqui-Centennial Exposition—Its Importance to the City and the Part the Florists Can Take in Making It a Success." There should be a full turnout of the club in honor of our distinguished guest. The annual convention of the Society of American Florists will also be taken up and an endeavor made to secure a good attendance from this city to accompany President S. S. Pennock to Kansas City, Mo., in August, next.

NOTES.

Edward Reid reports that the various subscriptions to the Mothers' Day advertising were nearly all in and he feels sure that the publicity was a great success as all wholesalers and retailers report the largest business they have ever had. Mr. Reid motored up through the New England states last week for Memorial Day orders. Edward is a hustler and has a way with him that helps fill the order book. This week he is taking a trip nearer home that will probably be as fruitful.

Henry Pennock and family, of Jupiter, Fla., are here on a visit. Mr. Pennock has six acres in asparagus for sprays which he ships to the northern markets. He finds a steady demand, but increased express rates cut a large hole in the profits.

The Leo Niessen Co. is handling an enormous stock of flowers of all kinds and are booking orders for a big Memorial Day trade. Peonies are a feature, as are also roses and carnations, of which the quality is very fine.

The Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market is handling choice roses from the Doemling greenhouses, Lansdowne. Sweet peas are also a feature.

AMERICAN FLORIST CO.

440 SOUTH DEARBORN STREET, CHICAGO

New York.

BUSINESS EXCEPTIONALLY QUIET.

Business was extremely quiet during the past week, with heavy arrivals of stock and a light demand. Admitting that there was a fair Mothers' Day business, one is inclined to ask was it worth while? It brought in a great flood of stock that created a surplus that was an aftermath and a burden; gave a large portion of the public a poor opinion of the florists in general, and started a nasty quarrel between retailers and wholesalers that got into the newspapers. The propagandists and publicity agents might take a vacation to see what the effect will be. All seasonable flowers are arriving in large quantities. Roses, carnations, irises, sweet peas, lilacs, stocks and minor offerings are plentiful. The peonies are now arriving in considerable volume, but that is only a beginning. Darwin tulips, grown in the open, are also factors, and as the weather has been generally cool, they are of good quality and there is a fair demand for them. Cool weather is also keeping the carnations, particularly the New England shipments, in fine condition.

May 22.—With warmer weather there is an increasing supply of stock.

FLORAL DECORATIONS ON S. S. MAJESTIC.

The new S. S. Majestic of the White Star line arrived here May 16. Under ordinary circumstances the arrival of a steamship is not a great event, but the Majestic is in a class by itself, being the largest ship in the world. To be exact, the Majestic is 956 feet long and has a beam of 100 feet, depth from bridge to keel 102 feet. What would the shades of Drake and Nelson think of such a ship? The broadside viewed from the water line up reminds a landsman of a nine-story apartment house. An "elderly naval man," as Gilbert expressed it, could give a better description and we will confine ourselves to the horticultural features on board, for we went aboard for that purpose. Few of the large hotels make as good a display of plants and cut flowers as were found on this ship. In suitable locations we found large palms in five-foot tubs, flowers being arranged in the spare space at the tops of the tubs. In corners and niches there were many groups of smaller plants. At the entrance to the dining room there was a group of tall and heavy vases filled with cut flowers. The dining room has 167 tables, all handsomely decorated with cut flowers and small ferns. In the vases of the table lamp stands there are clever arrangements that hold the ferns. In the after part of the ship there is a conservatory that houses quite a collection of plants. Necessarily there is a florist on board to care for and arrange the stock.

NOTES.

The wholesalers of the Eighteenth street market are handling quantities of good stock. Noteworthy at J. J. Coan's stand are carnations and Darwin tulips. In addition to American Beauty and American Legion roses, M. C. Ford is receiving a good supply of peonies. H. E. Froment continues to receive heavy shipments of all the popular tea roses. In addition to a great stock of roses and other staple flowers, J. S. Fenrich, who has a section for green and other outdoor stock, is handling great quantities of lilac. William Mackie, I. Goldstein and others are well supplied.

The Sun records the following in a recent issue: "Oil has been found in Scotland. Any one who thinks he can work a 'get rich quick' stunt in that country will find a real test of his ability." So say we.

W. E. Marshall & Co., Inc., 166 West Twenty-third street, have been making a fine display of lilac blooms at their store. They had over 100 named kinds and offer plants for sale.

Calling recently on G. L. Wilson, 341 Franklin avenue, Brooklyn, we found him busy with funeral work. He stated that he had a good Mothers' Day trade.

Fred G. Hawkins, Port Richmond, Staten Island, is sending exceptionally fine English ivy and geraniums to J. K. Allen in the Eighteenth street market.

Tryforas Bros., who have a retail store on 125th street and another on Willis avenue, state that Mothers' Day business was good at both places.

May sweet peas are short stemmed, as a rule, but Wm. Kessler, 113 West Eighteenth street, is handling an exceptionally fine supply of them.

Mrs. May Bonnot, wife of Leon Bonnot, florist at 228 Eighth avenue, died May 20. Further particulars will be found in the obituary column.

The Brooklyn Florists' Supply Co. is a new enterprise recently located at 36 Willoughby street, Brooklyn. They carry a good line of supplies.

In addition to other good stock, Joseph A. Millang of the New York Cut Flower Co. is selling exceptionally fine Scott Key roses.

The Algerti Flower Shoppe is a retail enterprise recently opened at 782 Lexington avenue.

Wm. P. Ford, 107 West Twenty-eighth street, is receiving a fine lot of peonies.

A. F. F.

Evansville, Ind.

EXCELLENT BUSINESS REPORTED.

Trade continues exceptionally good and florists are looking forward to a fine business Memorial Day. Peonies are arriving in considerable quantities and the quality is very fine, the crop in southern Indiana greatly exceeding that of last year. Roses and sweet peas are in good demand and prices satisfactory. Social activities are in full swing and several weddings during the past week called for additional stock. Funeral work has held up well. Memorial Day in many towns in southern Indiana, southern Illinois and western and northern Kentucky will be observed this year on a more elaborate scale than ever. Roses will be in especially strong demand, it is said. Many of the large manufacturing plants here are being operated on better time than they were three or four months ago.

NOTES.

Reports from Vincennes, Washington, and Huntingburg, Ind., Owensboro, Henderson and Hopkinsville, Ky., and Mt. Carmel, Ill., say the florists have done a splendid business during the past three months and that their trade has shown a nice increase over the corresponding months of last year. A number of shows for the towns and cities in the tri-state sections have been arranged for the summer months.

Cleveland Horticultural Society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Cleveland Horticultural Society was held May 11, President R. P. Brydon in the chair. It was decided that the society have a field trip once a month for the next four months to visit the surrounding estates and nurseries. The exhibits of the evening were Darwin tulips, grown by Frank McNicoll and Fred Heyl, which were exceptionally fine, and caused a good deal of discussion.

It was decided that the June show be passed up this year, but to stage a chrysanthemum show in the autumn. Two new members were elected to the society.

TRADE RATHER QUIET.

After Mothers' Day trade has been rather quiet. Some cut flowers sold well, however, the last of the week. Stock is good, and more than enough to fill the demand. Memorial Day is keeping every one on the jump getting ready for the rush. As usual all of the department stores, markets and groceries are filled with wax wreaths and sprays, and the supply seems to be unlimited. Geraniums are good and sell well, and there will be a good supply of all stock for the occasion, it is believed. Fine southern asparagus is still being shipped here. Carnations are good, never better, and the rose growers are cutting a good crop again after some very small cuts for several weeks past. Very few callas can be cut now, as most of the plants are run out.

NOTES.

One of our local charities had a flower day this week, selling upward from 10,000 to 20,000 flowers on the street. These were obtained from the Boston markets, and were distributed from the wholesale store of Joseph Koppleman, Custom House street, Mr. Koppleman turning over a large part of his establishment for the use of the committee in charge.

Mrs. Olsen has been bringing in some very fine outdoor Poeticus narcissi.

A lot of good sword ferns could be sold if the florists could get them.

VERY HEAVY MOTHERS' DAY TRADE.

That Mothers' Day is growing more popular every year is evidenced by the heavy orders placed for flowers in this section of the country. Most florists reported cash receipts in excess of those of last year, which seems remarkable when considering conditions and reports from other lines of business. The cool weather of the fore part of the week lessened the supply of cut flowers to some extent. The wholesalers were swamped with orders; as usual on days such as these flowers had to be apportioned among the customers. Plant growers did a remarkable business, cleaning up on practically all salable flowers. Retail florists were more than pleased with their sales, cleaning up on everything early Sunday. Carnations were held at $2.50 per dozen, Laddie, $4. The supply of reds and pinks was very limited. Sweet peas were disposed of quickly at 75 cents and $1.50 per bunch. Roses were held at $3.50 to $7.50. These went fast as soon as the carnations were disposed of. Cut tulips were a little slow at $2, Snapdragons sold fairly well at $3.50 per dozen. Perlagoniums, Marguerites and lily of the valley plants went quickly.

NOTES.

A canvass of Ogden floral shops showed Mothers' Day business quite satisfactory. Flowers in that city sold somewhat under the prices here.

The B. C. Morris Floral Co. ordered heavily, but everything went "just right," as the owner expressed herself, selling out of everything.

Mrs. Beuble, who acquired the Evans Floral Co. about eight months ago, reported holiday sales as very satisfactory.

The Huddart Floral Co. was ready for the rush and were more than pleased with their sales.

C. C. MORSE & Co., San Francisco, Calif., had an unusually good business throughout April in their retail and bulk departments, continuing quite satisfactory through May to date.

NEW YORK.—Business was more active during the past week than at any time since the season opened. There was heavy rain and a rise in temperature. Vegetable and bedding plants sold well.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Recent tariff visitors included A. E. Reynolds, Crawfordsville, Ind., W. G. Scarlett, Baltimore, Md., Curtis Nye Smith, Boston, Mass., and J. C. Vaughan, chairman of the American Seed Trade Association committee on customs and tariff.

GALVESTON, TEX.—J. F. Hargrave, head of Hargrave's Seed Store, died May 10. The business will be continued under the firm name, and the court has appointed J. C. Purcell as temporary administrator. When court again convenes Mr. Purcell will be made permanent administrator.

THE Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, which formerly bought liberally from Russian producers, can do nothing in that way now, and are shipping seeds there in large quantities. It is not unlikely this firm will furnish the country during the famine with more seed than they have bought from Russia in the entire period of relations with her. The company has recently sent four men abroad.

DALLAS, TEX.—Robert Nicholson reports very good demand for garden and field seeds, but says work on the ground has been greatly delayed this season by heavy rains. The merchants throughout his territory have not bought in such large quantities as heretofore, but buy oftener in smaller lots.

THE Henry Field Seed Co., Shenandoah, Ia., says its mail order figures up to May 1 shows a gain of 32 per cent over last year in orders and about the same percentage in money. The big day was the last Monday in February, with 6,153 orders. The first Monday in May brought 3,476 orders, which is unusual for that late date.

W. ATLEE BURPEE, JR., Philadelphia, Pa., is planning to leave shortly for California and will remain on his firm's Flordale farms, at Lompoc, during the sweet pea season. On his return he expects to sail for England early in August. Alfred Putz, of this firm, will also sail for Europe, July 12, spending most of his time on the continent.

CHICAGO.—Double page exploitation in a seed trade paper of an attempted "comeback" by a local seed concern in bankruptcy, has caused resentment among seedsmen here, some of whom have fought long and hard over slippery ground to maintain the old-fashioned though still honorable custom of paying 100 cents on the dollar.

MADISON, WIS.—The Dunkirk Seed Co., Dunkirk, N. Y., has been prohibited from selling seed in Milwaukee, Fond du Lac, Racine, Beloit and Janesville by the Wisconsin state department of agriculture, which alleges the company has been offering for sale in that state seed that is not up to the standard in quality and which will not likely germinate. C. P. Norgord, commissioner of agriculture, has issued a special bulletin ordering the concern to close its boxes and has requested the arrest of the company's agents for failure to observe the state law establishing germination standards.

Landreth's Hundred Thirty Eight Year.

At a business luncheon held in Philadelphia, Pa., May 22, of 54 firms who have been in business in that city for 100 years or over, Burnet Landreth, representing the D. Landreth Seed Co., which business was established in 1784, spoke for the company, giving reminiscences and history of the seed business in the early years of the firm's existence.

J. M. Lupton & Son, of Mattituck, say that the prospect is that a fair crop will be made from a comparatively small planting. The large stocks which accumulated in previous years have been entirely cleaned up and there is no seed of the 1921 crop for sale at present. It is therefore probable that even if a fair crop is secured, it will be impossible to meet the fall demand in full.

Blue Grass Seed.

Preliminary carload offers on blue grass are being made at the rate of $33 per 100 pounds for 19-pound seed, and $35 per 100 pounds for 21-pound seed, F. O. B. Missouri River points.

Other jobbers are quoting August shipment F. O. B. Chicago, 19-pound seed at $26 per 100 pounds and 21-pound seed at $29 per 100 pounds.

The Missouri growers claim higher germination for their stock.

Peas and Beans.

The Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids, Mich., writes May 17 as follows: "We completed our sowings of pea acreage about April 25. All are up and looking fine. We do not expect to plant beans for two or three weeks, but have already engaged our acreage. Dealers throughout the country seem to be very conservative in placing contract orders, and growers are also conservative in planting acreage, which all tends to good, healthy future business."

French Bulbs.

French advices on Paper White narcissus bulbs are to the effect that the syndicate has fixed the same prices as last year, but that the growers will demand higher prices. One hundred and forty francs per 1,000 for 12 centimeters are mentioned, 175 francs for 13-centimeter, 200 francs for 14-centimeter, and 250 francs for 15-centimeter and up.

The next question is how to get it from American buyers. Easier rates at the moment may help. More definite news as to the size of the crop is awaited. The cry of short crop has been raised so often that buyers are skeptical.

Northrup, King & Co's. Retail Store.

Sale is announced of the Northrup, King & Co. building on Bridge square, Minneapolis, Minn., to the Northwestern Drug Co. This building was erected especially for Northrup, King & Co. in 1896, and has been continuously occupied by them up to four years ago, when the entire business, with the exception of the retail store, was moved to the new nine-acre plant in northeast Minneapolis. The firm has conducted a retail store in the old building, or in the same block, for nearly 40 years, so when Minneapolis people think of seed they think of the corner seed store on Bridge square. Arrangements have been made whereby the same store will be leased for some years, so that it will still be identified with the retail seed business.

European Corn Borer.

Because of the spread of the European corn borer, the secretary of agriculture, announces effective, May 1, that certain sections of Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and New York have been quarantined, applying in the latter state to parts of Albany, Fulton, Hamilton, Montgomery, Rensselaer, Saratoga, Schenectady, Schoharie, Washington, Warren and other counties. Many plants and vegetable products are prohibited from interstate shipment. Further particulars about the quarantine may be secured from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Bryant Fined Under Nursery Law.

Referring to the item under this heading in our issue of May 20, page 924, Bryant's Nurseries, Princeton, Ill., write as follows May 17:

"There is a small part of truth in the item as published, and a good deal of exaggeration. Last October (1921) during the rush of shipping, an order was placed with us by a Lawrence, Kans., party for a considerable amount of stock, including a few gooseberries. Care enough was not taken by our office force and the gooseberries, which were perfectly healthy in every way, were included in the shipment, which was sent by express. The stock never got beyond Kansas City, Mo., this side of the quarantine area, and was returned to us from there. We immediately took the matter up with the Federal Horticultural Board and told them that any violation of the quarantine was not intended and we would see that it did not happen again. We judged by their reply that we had satisfied them, and knew nothing to the contrary until a week ago today, when we were called to Peoria. We explained the facts to the judge, who said that technically we had been guilty of evading the blister rust quarantine, and the firm was fined $50 and costs. This is all there was to the case."

Increasing Production of Fruit Trees.

Mrs. Lanie Wilbur of Yuba City, Sutter county, produced an average of more than 20 tons of peaches to the acre when she won the Sutter county peach growers' contest. The average yield of peaches per acre in California is about three tons to the acre. Mrs. Wilbur's winning is reported in the current issue of the United States Department of Agriculture News Letter which says in part:

"Careful judging was done under a strict set of rules formulated by a committee from the country extension organization in which the United States Department of Agriculture and the State Agricultural college were represented. The first prize was awarded to a woman grower whose orchard produced at the rate of 40,240 pounds per acre of No. 1 peaches, for which payment was made by the cannery."

Mrs. Wilbur, who won the contest both in 1920 and in 1921 is a careful orchardist, practicing the best cultural methods advocated by the California College of Agriculture. Her superintendent is often in conference with the county farm advisor. But there is another factor, too, Mrs. Wilbur has an orchard of very uniform trees, true to the variety she grows. And this directs attention to an important point.

Observation by experts have shown that not all trees bear the same amount of fruit, no matter if soil conditions and cultural methods are similar. In other words, there are scrub trees, just the same as scrub animals and human derelicts.

Trees need to be "bred up," just as livestock is improved by selective breeding. Pedigree is needed in trees, not only to increase production, but to purify the varieties and hold them true to type, or name.

The California Nurserymen's Bud Selection Association is working on this very thing. Headed by William T. Kirkman, Jr., of Fresno, this association has a crew of men throughout California now selecting buds from the best trees. These best trees—in matter of productivity and type—are to be the future parents of California orchards. Prof. Joseph A. Cocannouer, recommended to the association by President Barrows of the University of California, is in charge of bud selection work and Charles W. Weeks is field manager of the association.

The bud contains the germ of life of the future tree. What the bud is, the future tree will be in variety and productivity. It is possible, too, to take buds from heavy bearing and true-type trees and insert them in the limbs of established or growing drone trees. A drone tree with a good root system may just as well be bearing good fruit in abundance—it need be given only a new top through the budding process.

A great deal toward putting the pedigree in citrus trees of California has already been done through the work of A. D. Shamel of the United States Department of Agriculture. Shamel has shown how drone trees may be made productive by the insertion of buds from better trees. Citrus men say his work is worth $1,000,000 a year to the California citrus industry.

Now that the California Bud Selection Association is at work on putting the pedigree in deciduous trees, more fruit per acre may be expected in a few years from peach, pear, prune, apricot and cherry orchards. It is a long cry from the state average of three tons of peaches to the acre to Mrs. Wilbur's 20 tons to the acre. But then, Thomas A. Edison says: "Nothing is impossible."—California Development.

Vegetable Movement.

Car lot movements of 12 leading lines of fruits and vegetables for the week ending May 20, was one-eighth lighter than for the preceding week, but was 20 per cent heavier than for the same week last year. The week's decrease was largely due to lighter shipments of onions, potatoes, sweet potatoes, strawberries and lettuce. Watermelon shipments are increasing. Most lines showed a weaker tone, but new potatoes advanced toward the close. Texas Bermuda onions were lower, with slight recovery at the week end.

New York, May 19.—Cucumbers, $1 to $1.25 per dozen; radishes, per basket 50 cents to $1; lettuce, per crate, 50 cents to $2.50; mushrooms, white, $1.75 to $2 per three-pound basket; cauliflower, $2 to $6 per dozen; tomatoes, per pound 10 to 25 cents; eggplants, $1 to $2.75 per carrier.

Bean Glut in New York.

South Carolina string beans went begging in New York, May 22. Forty carloads of them were landed on Pier 29 of the Pennsylvania railroad, almost double a normal day's supply. Twenty carloads, or 8,000 baskets, were abandoned to the railroad company, refused by the merchants as not worth the average freight charge of 65 cents a basket. Beans just as good as those that brought $6 and $6.50 a basket 10 days ago were sold today at as low a price as 10 cents, although the container was worth 12½ or 15 cents. Finally W. A. Diegel, president of the wholesale firm of A. A. Meyer & Co., 134 Park place, offered the Salvation Army two carloads free if they were removed at once. The tracks have to be cleared immediately. The prices paid today ranged from 10 to 25 cents a basket. Each basket contained 32 quarts.—New York Sun.

EXCELLENT MOTHERS' DAY BUSINESS.

The business for Mothers' Day was the largest experienced for several years, resembling the Easter trade, although on a slightly smaller scale. Everything sold well, including cut flowers, baskets of plants and corsages. Daffodils are now finished but Darwin tulips are very plentiful as are cut lilacs, Poeticus narcissi, outdoor lily of the valley, sweet peas and other miscellaneous offerings. The quality of both roses and carnations is excellent.

NOTES.

At the greenhouses of J. B. Keller's Sons the employees are busy filling veranda boxes and cemetery urns. John Valler, of the firm, executed the decorations for a wedding at Geneva, May 20. The monthly meeting of the Florists' Association was held May 12 at the Osborn house. The coming peony show was discussed but no definite date was announced.

May 21 was lilac day at Highland park and great crowds were present in spite of the rainy weather.

Frank Mahoney met with an accident, though not serious, when he was run into by a bicycle, May 18.

The lilacs at Cobb's Hill park are unusually beautiful, especially the Chinese and Persian kinds.

Geo. J. Keller is cutting some fine snapdragons at his Mount Hope avenue range.

Cecil Lester has just returned from a trip in Northern Pennsylvania.

Lancaster County Florists' Association.

The monthly meeting of the Lancaster County Florists' Association was held at the W. B. Girvin establishment, Lancaster, Pa., May 18, after an inspection of the vast area of glass. Roses and carnations constitute the main crop of cut flowers but there is a general assortment of other stock to supply the stores of Reading, Lancaster and suburban towns.

A number of houses are devoted to growing plants for this same trade nearly all of which is supplied by electric trolley service and John Shoenberger, the manager, says there is hardly a car passes the door that does not carry some of their products. The refrigerator plant is working in good shape and the cool room was filled with some very fine stock for the next day's trade.

A series of thunder storms cut down the attendance to about twelve but that dozen were well repaid and the absentees missed one of the most instructive meetings we have had for some years. The speaker was Mr. Holdridge, who is crop pest adviser for the state department of agriculture, of the bureau plant industry, Harrisburg. He told us just what the bureau is doing and is willing to do and answered many questions relative to greenhouse pests and plant diseases, emphasizing the fact that it is just as important for the florist to know insects and plant fungi as it is to know plants and seeds.

Mr. Holdridge has been working with several of the florists in this section and is willing and anxious to be called upon for advice or help in any troubles they may have. He has made a number of experiments with geranium cuttings and has had much encouragement along these lines but not enough as yet to make it public. A rising vote of thanks was given him for his very valuable talk. Mr. Holdridge presented the members present with bulletins on snapdragon rust and the chrysanthemum midge.

The June 16 meeting will be in the form of an automobile trip to visit the H. A. Dreer establishment, at Riverton, N. J. The date will be decided by J. D. Eisele, manager at Riverton, as we will want to see all that can be seen in one day.

An invitation was extended by the Reading Florists' Club to join them in a picnic in July, which was accepted, and our own picnic postponed until some time in August. The secretary was instructed to write a letter to John Young, secretary of the Society of American Florists, asking that the society make an effort to get the present exorbitant express rates modified.

M. J. Brinton was elected to membership in the association. The meeting adjourned at 9 p. m., when the run back to Lancaster was made in a driving rain.

Fertilization of Greenhouse Soils.

Address by Prof. P. A. Lehenbauer, of the University of Illinois, Before the Annual Meeting of the Ohio District of the National Flower Growers' Association, at Columbus.

Complex Problems Confront Growers.

The practice of soil fertilization is based on the fact that plants, during their period of growth, take from the soil certain chemical elements—a fact which has been established by means of repeated, rigid experiments. We know rather definitely what chemical elements are necessary for plant growth and, therefore, it is but natural to assume that in order to prevent depletion of the soil, all that we need to do is to put back in the soil those substances which the plant removes. The problem of soil fertility, however, is not so simple. Many factors are involved, in fact the question of the maintenance of soil fertility is so varied and complex that only general principles can be discussed.

I should hesitate very much to give to a group of experienced growers, such as you are, specific directions as to how to fertilize a particular crop and how to treat your soil in order to get maximum results. We who have been working in the experimental field have learned long ago that extreme caution is necessary in giving advice on the problem of soil fertilization and that only general principles can be given. There are many types of soil, differing in chemical composition and in physical structure, and each greenhouse no doubt has a soil which responds differently to a degree than does the soil in another greenhouse. The problem, therefore, is one which must be solved in its details by each individual grower, solved with a full knowledge and a true understanding of the principles involved.

The problem of soil fertilization for greenhouse crops is in many respects distinct from that of fertilization for outdoor crops. In the greenhouse we are dealing with conditions of temperature, soil moisture, and humidity, in many respects unlike those outside. The bacterial flora of the soil too very likely differs at times from that of the soil outside. Add to this the fact that many greenhouse crops are grown, in part or wholly, in porous pots, a practice which adds to the problem still other complex factors, all of which must be considered. We can see that the practice of growing plants under glass is one full of uncertainties, and one, from the standpoint of exact information, very incomplete. However, thanks to the painstaking labors of many investigators, we have a foundation of certain principles upon which we can build and construct a system of treating our soils so that we may be reasonably sure of maximum results.

For our greenhouse crops we have been depending to a great extent upon farmyard manures. From the standpoint of food materials natural manures furnish some phosphorus and potash but they are chiefly a nitrogenous fertilizer. The nitrogen is largely in the organic form, a form which is not utilized directly by plants, but one which must be changed first, through the agency of bacteria, into an available form. The rate at which this nitrogen becomes available varies with a number of conditions such as temperature, soil moisture, composition of soil, number of bacteria, and the degree of decomposition of the manure when applied; however, in our greenhouses where ideal conditions for decomposition usually prevail, unquestionably the nitrogen becomes available quickly.

Manures, however, furnish relatively small quantities of available nitrogen. A ton of manure contains on the average only about ten pounds of nitrogen. This nitrogen can be furnished to plants more cheaply and probably as efficiently by means of chemical fertilizers. But the value of natural manures lies not only in the fertilizing elements which they contain. This is probably the least important function. Far more important is the relation of manures to the bacterial flora of the soil. Manures contain useful bacteria, forms which bring about important changes in the food materials contained in soil, making them available to the plant.

We must keep in mind the fact that the soil is not a dead inert material but that in it are teeming millions of living organisms, harmful as well as useful, and it seems to be a function of natural manures to supply the soil with forms of life which make the soil a better material to support plant growth. At any rate the applications of small amounts of manure to soil often produce effects on the crop which seem out of proportion to the results that we should expect from the food elements contained in the manure.

In addition, natural manures have an effect on the physical structure of soil which is highly important. Soils with an adequate amount of humus permit of better aeration, are more retentive of moisture and are less subject to unfavorable temperatures. Florists know well enough the importance of natural manures. Unfortunately the supply of this valuable material is comparatively small today. Instead of larger quantities being available, the grower is being restricted to smaller quantities. The problem, therefore, is to find a substitute for this material. Unfortunately, there is nothing known which will entirely take the place of it. From the standpoint of plant nutrients, artificial fertilizers may be substituted. By means of dried blood, sodium nitrate, tankage, etc., the nitrogen may be furnished to plants readily enough. This is true also for the other fertilizing ingredients of manure, such as the phosphorus and potash which can be supplied by means of chemical fertilizers easily enough.

Soda a Good Substitute.

As a substitute for natural manures when the latter are not available, the use of sod is often resorted to by florists and this unquestionably produces good results. The use of muck and peat has been tried experimentally and favorable results have been reported. Another very satisfactory substitute for manures are the green manures. Plowing under green crops of legumes and other plants puts humus into the soil and since humus is the important constituent of natural manures, the value of green manures is readily seen. Any green crop may be grown for this purpose, such as oats, rye, buckwheat, etc.

It has been determined experimentally that the greatest benefit is derived when these crops are plowed under at the half-grown stage. In other words, the crop should not be permitted to mature but should be plowed under when about half mature, for by this method humus is formed more rapidly and as well the nitrates accumulate readily. The nitrates begin to accumulate as soon as the green manures are considerably decomposed. If, on the other hand, decomposition goes too far, that is if too much time elapses before the soil is put to use, there is a loss of humus and also a loss of nitrates.

The question often is raised if it is profitable to use a soil continuously, year after year, in the greenhouse for the same crop. It is unquestionably true that the practice of using new or fresh soil in our greenhouse benches involves not only a large amount of labor but also a waste of fertilizers. Much of the fertilizing material put into greenhouse soils is not used by the plants in one season, due to the slow rate of availability of some materials and when the soil is discarded the fertilizing material is discarded with it. But there are some growers who believe that soils lose in productiveness after one or two seasons, especially if the same crop plant is grown. It is conceivable that this is true for there may be a change in the number of bacteria, or certain substances may have accumulated which are detrimental. No definite answer can as yet be given to this problem. We are attempting, however, at the Illinois station to determine if the continued use of soils in our greenhouse benches influences production, when the soil is properly cared for; in other words, is it possible to keep up the fertility of the soil in our greenhouses without using each year or two new soil brought in from outdoors?

Prof. P. A. Lehenbauer.
University of Illinois, Urbana.

We now have soil which has produced carnations continuously for four years, three years, two years, and one year. All these soils were treated each year in a similar way, as regards fertilizers. The data, although not yet conclusive, shows a slight decrease in production, this decrease being less than one flower per plant.

After we have determined that it is actually true, if it is true, that soils cannot be used continuously, by proper treatment, in our greenhouses, we must determine why this is true. In other words, we should be able to find the cause and when we are able satisfactorily to explain the reason why production decreases, we possibly can find a means to keep up production readily enough.

It is an established fact that nitrogen is used by growing plants in large quantities. Nitrogen, when applied in available form, is rather pronounced in its effects on the plant, too much nitrogen resulting in slender and soft growth. In the form used by the plant, it also leaches readily from the soil and thus is lost. Nitrogen then must be applied with care in order to secure growth in quantity and quality and, at the same time, it must be applied in such a way that there is a minimum of loss. For our greenhouse practice

I believe firmly in the use of nitrogen as the determining factor both in producing and in regulating growth. In other words, I believe in the system of treating the soil in such a way that it contains, before planting to the crop, the proper physical condition, the proper amount of humus, and an abundance of all nutrient elements, save nitrogen, which should be furnished from time to time as the needs of the plant may indicate. This is the system that florists follow as a rule. In other words florists practice feeding with liquid manure, and using manure mulches, both of which supply soluble and available nitrogen. But often times the soil perhaps is lacking in other ingredients, at any rate, in quantities sufficient to support maximum growth. We must not forget that if any other essential element aside from nitrogen is lacking, the best results are not possible by the addition of more nitrogen. The nitrogen can be effective only if all other elements are present in ample quantities.

The other elements of soil fertility with which we are chiefly concerned are phosphorus and sulphur. I do not mention potassium or potash because with us in Illinois nearly all soils contain sufficient quantities of this material (though since potassium is an essential element, the above facts hold also for this element). Phosphorus and sulphur both are essential to plant growth, in smaller quantities than nitrogen, but essential, nevertheless. Phosphorus stimulates root growth, especially of the smaller and younger roots. In addition, it is needed for flower and fruit formation. Sulphur is necessary for the development of young cells. Phosphorus is obtained in such fertilizers as acid phosphate, rock phosphate, bone meal, steamed bone, basic slag, bone tankage, etc. Sulphur is contained in the commercial acid phosphate, gypsum, and the various other sulphates. These different phosphorus and sulphur containing fertilizers differ, so far as we are concerned, in their availabilities, that is in the rate and ease with which they are taken up by plants.

We have been carrying on some experiments at the Illinois station, to determine the value of phosphorus and sulphur for the production of roses and carnations. In a three-year test with roses, acid phosphate was tested as to its efficiency in increasing production and we attempted to determine also the quantities that may be used safely with these crops. Commercial acid phosphate is a mixture of pure acid phosphate and gypsum in approximately equal quantities. The acid phosphate is in a form which is soluble and readily available to plants. Our experiment embodied a sufficient number of plants to make the data reliable, a total of 1,152 rose plants and 1,228 carnation plants being used.

The data shows an appreciable increase in production, slightly over three flowers per plant, in the acid phosphate sections over the sections not treated with acid phosphate. This increase of 4,800 flowers was produced at a cost of $5.60 in fertilizers. For each variety also the average stem length was increased slightly, showing that as the result of the increase in the number of flowers the stem length did not correspondingly decrease. The experiment with two varieties of carnations showed similar results, although the increase was not quite so large, the increase due to the acid phosphate treatment being slightly over one flower per plant.

Acid phosphate can be applied to soil before planting in quantities sufficient for the entire growing season, for it does not leach readily from the soil, differing in this respect from the soluble nitrogen compounds, and neither does it injure plant roots when applied to soil in relatively large quantities. It is for these reasons, as well as for the increased production that I recommend the incorporation in the soil of ample quantities of acid phosphate, before the stock is planted for the season.

Many florists are using bone as a fertilizer. Bone contains phosphorus and in addition frequently small quantities of nitrogen. Bone is a good fertilizer for if properly prepared it contains much phosphorus. Ordinary bone meal and steamed bone differ from acid phosphate as a phosphatic fertilizer in that the phosphorus is less slowly available to plants. We are making a study of the comparative value of acid phosphate and the various bone fertilizers, the experiment being arranged in such a way that in all sections the plants receive the same amount of phosphorus. In a one-year test with roses, the acid phosphate proved decidedly superior to the steamed bone.

We are repeating this experiment now in a three-year test with roses, and using other forms of bone as well. At the present time, although acid phosphate again shows a greater influence than does steamed bone, other forms of bone may prove as efficient as does the acid phosphate. The data for this year up to date shows an increase of almost two flowers per plant from the use of steamed bone and an increase of three flowers per plant from the use of acid phosphate.

As stated above, commercial acid phosphate is a mixture of pure acid phosphate and gypsum, the latter containing calcium and sulphur. There is much discussion at the present time in regard to the necessity of more sulphur in our soils. There are some investigators who believe that practically all soils contain sufficient sulphur and that rains bring into the soil each year as much sulphur as is removed by the crop. On the other hand, experiments have shown that for certain soils and certain crops the addition of sulphur compounds to the soil results in a material increase in production. If the necessity of sulphur as a fertilizer for our soils should prove correct, we may attribute at least a part of the beneficial effects in our experiments with acid phosphate, to the gypsum. Gypsum is often considered as a soil stimulant rather than a food material. In our present tests with gypsum, carnation plants have shown much vigor and the plants are equally as good and productive as those treated with acid phosphates.

Soil Acidity.

Thus far I have discussed the subject of soil fertility only from the standpoint of food materials. There are other factors relating to soils and the growing of greenhouse crops which are fully as important and which have often a very positive influence. Fertilizers can be effective only when no other positive limiting factors are involved. A soil which has all the essential chemical elements in usable form will not give maximum production if it is deficient in water or if it is kept constantly wet. Neither will a soil produce the best results if it is high in acidity. Under conditions of high acidity, bacterial action is slow and abnormal processes are going on.

and we need not dwell upon them here. I simply want to point out that any system of fertilization loses in effectiveness if conditions of soil acidity prevail and that the grower must be on the alert to remedy this condition if it occurs. The remedy is the application of lime. Lime should preferably be put in the soil in the field, some time before the soil is used inside. After the soil has been plowed the lime may be harrowed into the soil in quantities sufficient to reduce the acidity. This method is recommended because if acid phosphate is used to fertilize the soil, the lime, when mixed with it, tends to make the phosphorus insoluble. Lime when added to manure also hastens decomposition so that as a result of a too rapid decomposition, much soluble nitrogen may be lost.

In addition to soil acidity as a positive factor which may influence results obtained with fertilizers, I want to call your attention also to some factors which operate above the soil.

Greenhouse plants, grown either for cut-flowers or as potted plants are, as a rule, highly forced. By this I mean that the plants are grown under conditions of soil fertilization, temperature and moisture which make for the greatest possible growth in the shortest period of time. By this method, plants are developed which are less resistant and less hardy. In other words, such plants are more susceptible to sudden changes of the environment.

A plant grown under ideal conditions, conditions which produce maximum growth, good color and substance, may suddenly lose its vigor, lose its leaves perhaps, or in general give the appearance of good health. It is but natural to suppose that something is wrong with the soil and that something should be added to the soil to cure this trouble. But such unhealthy conditions of plants are more frequently the result of some positive factor operating above the soil.

A plant highly forced is very susceptible to rapid and prolonged changes in temperature and humidity. For instance when a period of cloudy weather comes there is a change not only in the amount of light but also a change in temperature and humidity. The temperature drops and the relative humidity rises. A change in temperature takes place in the soil less rapidly for the soil temperature changes but slowly. This is particularly true of soil in solid beds.

We have, therefore, a condition of relative high temperature of the soil, ample moisture, and an abundance of available food materials; on the other hand, the temperature of the air may be several degrees lower than that of the soil, the humidity high, and the amount of light materially reduced; we have, then, in the soil a set of conditions which favor intake of water and of food materials while in the air we have a combination of conditions which tend to check the outgo of materials. A plant which has been grown rapidly will respond under these conditions, very often by losing its leaves, or perhaps only losing its color, or the buds may drop, or there may be flowers of abnormal structure. Letters come to me frequently in regard to these troubles and the assumption is made that the soil is lacking in fertility. The cause is, very often, not a lack of fertility but the fact that the plant, because of the conditions under which it has been produced is not hardy enough to withstand any sudden change in the environmental conditions.

Again we find cases in which plants fail to respond entirely, or they respond only to a small degree to fertilizer treatments. Aside from the fact that the soil may be acid in reaction, or the roots may be infested by nematodes, or the physical structure of the soil may be defective, the conditions above soil may operate in such a way that soil treatment is ineffective. If, for example, there is a lack of light or if the temperature is high, stems will grow long and weak, flowers will lack in substance and no fertilizer treatment will prevent this. More nitrogen in the soil would only accentuate the trouble. A low relative humidity will produce hard brittle foliage and short stems, and no fertilizer treatment will overcome the detrimental influence of the lack of moisture in the air.

Briefly, in order that fertilizer treatments may prove effective, all other factors must be studied as well. If the limiting factor of production is in the soil, a rational soil treatment will be rewarded, but if the limiting factor lies above soil, the use of fertilizers may not only lead to regret but it will be a useless procedure economically as well.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The June weddings are now on and, while all the large affairs are booked, there is a percentage, and a pretty large one, of those who leave things to the last minute, which makes it worth while to keep featuring these events and making a bid for the business or orders that have not yet been placed.

How has the window box campaign turned out? It appears difficult to get the great majority of retailers interested in this important part of the business. Not one store in 10 takes advantage of the great publicity this feature would bring to them. There is nothing more effective or decorative than well filled boxes of plants that, with their showy blossoms, foliage, trailing vines, etc., kept to their highest efficiency and placed at every vantage point on the front of the flower shop, from the pavement to the roof, will make the store stand out the most conspicuous in the block. No other form of publicity is equal to this street front decoration, as it is always in the public eye and comes to the mind whenever flowers are required. Dwellings everywhere in cities and suburbs would be greatly improved with such ornamentation, if all florists would pull together to make it the custom. Tourists returning from abroad frequently speak of the European love for flowers as evidenced by the quantities of boxes of flowering plants seen even on the humblest dwellings.

Water lilies are now obtainable in quantity; an effective use can be made of these beautiful flowers in window and store in large, shallow dishes. The large white flowers make a good finish to early morning funeral work and also top off a choice box of flowers.

Feature the greenhouse gladioli that are now one of the choicest flowers of the shop; they are fine for basket or sprays and a large vase of choice spikes is very decorative for the window. How about that window? Go outside and take a look and see if the decoration is striking enough to make you stop and admire. The window mirrors the establishment and it should always have a story to tell and say it in such a way that people will listen. Every one who passes is a prospect, a possible customer, who with proper appeal may come in, or there is an impression made that will have its effect later on. Nothing will pay better than well planned window appeals that suggest uses for flowers and bring to mind occasions that would otherwise have been forgotten.

COMMENCEMENT ORDERS.

Commencements are now in order, with the sweet girl graduates in the limelight. Some of these occasions are quite important from the florist's standpoint, the order at times for several hundred bouquets being placed with one house, in addition to flowers sent by friends. Then there are the decorations and, in the select schools or ladies' seminaries, class day flowers, a handsome bouquet for each member, which makes an order worth having. Progressive florists who keep their eyes trained on coming events have a way of booking these orders before the importance of the event is generally known.

Get the books cleaned up as far as possible; there is a long summer coming and now is the time to catch them before they get away. A gentle reminder in a plain envelope will bring to time those who mean to pay but are careless. Others who fail to respond need something stronger. Remember that $1 lost is the net profit on a $10 order, so keep this in mind and collect them all while there is opportunity.

Always have some little attractive things made up ready for instant sale. A few choice buds or spikes of bloom in a vase, miniature baskets filled with this or that flower, a shallow bowl nicely arranged, a small colonial bouquet or two, are often picked up by the transient visitor or added to the slip of the regular customer just because it was pretty and attracted them. This is nearly all new business, sales that would not have been made had the pretty little arrangements not been ready to catch the eye.

Keep the flower case in order, with the water in the vases or jars changed every day. The arrangement of the flowers in the case has much to do with their sale. Huddled together down deep in the jar they are not attractive, but raised with stems half way out and buds spread to show their individuality they are much more salable.

Are you a Florists' Telegraph Delivery man, and if so what do you do to let people know of this country-wide service? Those who believe in it and are enthusiastic in pushing it to the front are getting wonderful results. In a large store in Washington, D. C., the first telegraph boy on Easter Saturday brought in 105 orders. The first boy on Mothers' Day came in with 53; other shops received as many as 30 at one time. A large Baltimore, Md., firm when they thought the Mothers' Day business was about over received 60 telegrams for flowers. This service offers wonderful possibilities to the men who will push it in their own store, every dollar obtained through this service being new business. Start them going out and there will soon be plenty sent you in return.

Wedding Gifts of the Flower Shop.

The florist who will go carefully over his stock will find in it a number of items suitable to be used as worth while gifts for the wedding or other important obligations. There are handsome palms in variety, choice specimen cibotiums or ferns of the Boston type which, if fitted with a jardiniere or wicker cover on suitable pedestals, will present an ornament fit for any drawing room. The wicker fern or plant box on an ornamental stand for bay window or porch decoration, will when filled with plants and vines compare favorably with half the usual gifts that are generally first considered. The line of the better class of fern dishes from china and terra cotta to cut glass and plated metal ware, are, when filled, quite in line as appropriate gifts. Specimen flowering and foliage plants in jardiniere or pot covers when given a finish with ribbon have a gift appearance that fits them for any collection.

CUT FLOWER VASES.

Most establishments carry a line of cut flower vases, the higher grades of which in either cut glass or fine china, will, when filled with choice flowers, show their worth and usefulness and are sure to be much admired. The variety of rose bowls is now quite large, many of them very beautiful and expensive. The flower shops should be headquarters for such goods as when sent properly filled with flowers their beauty is greatly enhanced.

WEDDING GIFTS OF THE FLOWER SHOP.
Decorated Lilac.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARIES.

As June has long been the month for weddings, many anniversaries occur at this time, celebrations of the tin, the more dignified silver, and the quite rare golden wedding, at which flowers are the most appropriate gift, are all occasions when flowers are most suitable to carry the message of congratulation. For the tin wedding bright metal receptacles of any kind from miniature watering cans through all kinds of kitchen utensils up to the wash boilers of the laundry, are often seen filled with flowers. Baskets of flowers with tin spoons, nutmeg graters or the like tied on the handles are appropriate and can be featured in this way in the window with good effect.

For the silver anniversary gifts are of a more substantial character, the silver plated fernery or silver inlaid cut flower bowls and vases filled with flowers being popular. Then there is the silvered wicker basket in a number of shapes with high or low handles, which, when filled with choice flowers and tied with silver ribbon and chiffon certainly look the part. Foliage and flowering plants in silvered pot covers, given a further finish with a silver ribbon are certain to meet with favor.

For the last grand event everything is to have a golden tint, gilt baskets filled with yellow roses and tied with ribbon to match are always acceptable. A large gilt vase basket filled with 50 American Beauty or other choice roses tied with a gold ribbon makes an elaborate gift, while another on a smaller scale consists of a gilt lined vase of fine glass or of gilded wicker filled with 50 yellow roses.

In order to catch more of this business and keep the flower shop in the public eye when wedding gifts are wanted, there must be more featuring in connection with these events, particularly in the spring and autumn when most weddings and anniversaries occur. The people must be shown the advantages of plants and flowers over other gifts. Newspaper publicity will help, it is the medium through which all other lines successfully make their appeal. If the majority of retail florists in any city would run a week of wedding gift windows, spring and fall, backed up with advertising, it would greatly help to establish this custom and at the same time increase the trade along other lines.

Society of American Florists.

J. C. Vaughan, national councillor to the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, has presented the following resolution to the chamber:

"May 20, 1922.

"To the President and Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

"Gentlemen:

"On behalf of the Society of American Florists, a trade organization having 10 votes in the Chamber of Commerce, I enclose a statement and proposed resolution for action by your body. I hope for an early acceptance of the same."

J. C. VAUGHAN, Nat. Councillor.

STATEMENT AND RESOLUTION, QUAR. NO. 37.

"J. C. Vaughan, councillor, representing the Society of American Florists, wishes to call to the council's attention a most serious innovation in bureaucratic control of commerce under which, in the guise of a quarantine, an absolute prohibition has been established against imports of healthy plants and bulbs except a certain few specified varieties and, except in such cases as special permits may be granted for importation of the excluded material at the pleasure of the Federal Horticultural Board.

"This order, known as Quarantine No. 37, put in effect June 1, 1919, has destroyed an extensive commerce which has been in existence for 100 years, and it is now proposed to extend it further by an arbitrary executive action without legislative consideration or an opportunity for the interests affected to be heard before an impartial tribunal.

"Though defended as a measure to prevent the importation of insects and disease, this quarantine reverses the method of all other quarantines and, instead of specifying insects and diseases or plants subject to them which are barred from import, it prohibits all importations, even of plants free from disease and insects, except the few specified classes which are allowed. Power is retained by the Federal Horticultural Board to issue special permits to firms or individuals to import materials otherwise excluded. This sets up a system of special favors to be granted or withheld at the whim of a bureau official for reasons good or bad, honest or dishonest, without public record or the pretense of judicial hearing. This places concerns engaged in the business of importing horticultural material at the mercy of the Federal Horticultural Board and destroys the principle of equality before the law. The commercial effect of this alleged quarantine, which is really a wall erected against all imports, whether healthy or diseased, has been to afford certain special producing interests protection far in excess of any conceivable tariff protection, in so much that in discussions of the quarantine and in its defense by the chairman of the Federal Horticultural Board it is now considered not as a protection against foreign competition, thus presenting the spectacle of a Federal Horticultural Board usurping the functions of a tariff board.

"Though as yet applied only to plants and bulbs, the reasoning which is behind Quarantine No. 37, if allowed to prevail and to be extended, would justify the exclusion of fruits and other food products; indeed, of all materials of vegetable or animal origin which an executive board might profess to believe harbored insect life or disease germs and decide to shut out of this country except when imported under special permits issued by themselves. In view of the importance of this novel and radical application of the quarantine to commerce in general and the danger of its indefinite extension by doctrinaires should its present use be confirmed and amplified, I move the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the directors of the United States Chamber of Commerce be, and they are hereby, requested to investigate the legality of Quarantine No. 37 as established by the Federal Horticultural Board, the fairness of its enforcement and the possibility of the application of its principle for restraint of commerce in general and that if such investigation indicates cause a congressional investigation of the Federal Horticultural Board and its action in protection against disease, but as a promulgating and enforcing Quarantine No. 37 shall be requested in the name of the United States Chamber of Commerce."

Chrysanthemum Midge.

My chrysanthemums are badly infested with the midge, with the treatment of which I am not familiar. Would appreciate any information on the subject by any one of your readers, through the columns of your valuable paper.

Pennsylvania.

In entomology, this little insect is known as Phopalomyia hypogaea, is of European origin, and until two years ago was unknown in this country. Doubtless it has come upon us by importation of stock. In the adult stage it is a minute fly, not as large as the winged form of aphids, and in this state deposits its eggs, which in a few days begin development and show slight swellings or galls. By opening these galls, we find a yellow colored maggot which, in the course of time, develops to the fly, and so the multiplication is continued. They deposit eggs in all parts of the plants when the growth is young and tender; upon the leaf and leaf stems, the stem of the plant, the buds, and even on subterranean shoots or root stalks, provided, of course, these are exposed to the air. Their molestations are confined to the chrysanthemum family, including both the section in which florists are most interested as well as the garden kinds. In aggravating cases they become very numerous. Stems and foliage are literally covered with these little galls, which seem to affect their development. They become stunted and distorted, and if allowed to go unchecked, the plants will not produce cuttings suitable for propagation. There seems to be but two ways to destroy them; one by careful hand-picking and burning the leaves and stems to destroy those in the larval state, and the use of hydrocyanic acid gas to dispose of the adults, which, as previously stated, deposit the eggs. From the most competent entomologists we learn that the life cycle of this insect, as near as can be determined, is about 21 days—that is, from the time the egg is deposited until the adult dies. From this will be seen that cyaniding should be continued for approximately 30 days, or sufficiently long to permit all the eggs to be hatched. There is one point that is worthy of consideration, and that is the possibility that under certain conditions the galls do not reach the fly stage within so short a period as 21 days, especially so if the houses are kept very cold. They seem to show greater activity during the early spring from March to May, and from the middle of August to October. Our observations lead us to believe that they do not lay many eggs during the hottest and coldest parts of the year. When the operation of cyaniding is begun it is important it should be repeated every second or third night for the period stated above—say 30 days, so there is no possibility of any eggs being laid. It is unnecessary to use a very strong cyanic gas. One ounce to 6,000 or 8,000 cubic feet of space is sufficient. Those who have not used this gas should remember that the plants must be as dry as possible, and the less humidity in the air the less liability of burning the foliage.

American Rose Society.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The executive committee of the American Rose Society held a meeting at the Cosmos Club, Washington, D. C., May 25, with the following members in attendance: F. L. Atkins, Rutherford, N. J.; S. S. Pennock, Philadelphia, Pa.; Horace J. McFarland, Harrisburg, Pa.; J. H. Hill, Richmond, Ind. The invited guests were: E. G. Hill, Dr. W. A. Taylor, F. L. Mulford, and Dr. L. C. Corbett, of the United States Department of Agriculture; Prof. E. A. White, Cornell university; Mr. Wright and Mr. Lane, of House & Garden. Because of the absence of Secretary Wister, who is in Europe, Prof. White was appointed secretary pro tem.

President Pyle reported a membership of 2,487. The first business transacted was in regard to the distribution of the Mary Wallace rose. President Pyle reported that his firm had propagated about 1,700 plants for the Department of Agriculture and Professor Corbett stated the department had propagated about 700. It was pointed out that since the American Rose Society has now become incorporated it will be proper to enter into a definite contract with the Department of Agriculture, and it was decided to plant out the stock of the Mary Wallace rose thus far propagated so that the dormant plant of two years' size might be distributed to the firms who will have made application by December 1, 1922. Because the stock is sure to be irregular in size, it was decided that all should be brought together under charge of the Department of Agriculture for equitable distribution at the proper time.

WEDDING GIFTS OF THE FLOWER SHOP.
Japanese Bamboo Vase of Snapdragon, Iris and Calendulas.

Plans were made to have the Mary Wallace rose photographed at its best and that material be prepared so that all information and illustrations might be embodied in the circular to be issued to all the firms distributing the rose for use by them in advertising it, each firm to pay for the number of circulars used. It was further voted that the request should be addressed to the Department of Agriculture and that the American Rose Society be allowed to co-operate in the introduction of other Van Fleet novelties, including the rugosa hybrid, rugosa cross with polyantha and the cross between Wichuraiana and Duchess of Wellington. It is hoped that it may be possible to introduce several varieties at one time.

Due to the small attendance of members at the meeting at Indianapolis, at which time the annual meeting had been postponed, plans were made for the annual meeting to be held in the rose season. Invitations were received from Bobbink & Atkins, Rutherford, N. J.; Mrs. Aaron Ward, Roslyn, L. I., and the Syracuse Rose Society, the latter being supplemented by Prof. E. A. White, who stated that the rose test gardens at Cornell university would be on exhibition during June 23-24, at the time of the Farmers' Field Days.

It was felt that Dr. Mills, president of the Syracuse Rose Society, was entitled to special recognition by reason of his work in establishing local rose societies throughout central New York; therefore, the invitation from the Syracuse Rose Society to hold the annual meeting under their charge was accepted, the precise date to be announced later, probably June 20, 21 or 22. Dr. Mills indicated that the plans for the meeting would be judging of exhibition by designated members of the executive committee, in the morning; luncheon at Skaneateles Lake, an afternoon meeting in Mrs. Hitchcock's rose garden, an evening session with speakers in the exhibition hall.

Plans were made to announce all pilgrimages to the different rose gardens associated with the American Rose Society, notice of these to be announced in the trade papers. Mr. McFarland, upon his request, was released as chairman of the membership committee, and Joseph J. Lane, now associated with House & Garden, was appointed chairman to fill the vacancy. The meeting adjourned.

American Iris Society.

NEW YORK EXHIBITION AND MEETING.

The American Iris Society, in co-operation with the Horticultural Society of New York, staged a fine show in the Museum building, of the New York Botanical Gardens, Bronx Park, New York, May 27-28. Departing from the usual custom, the show was held in the main hall instead of the basement, as formerly. For scenic effect this may have been an improvement, but as for convenience it was not particularly desirable. The museum cases take up much space and the iris exhibits were scattered, some of them placed on the floor. But we believe that circumstances made the change necessary.

The majority of the exhibitors were amateurs and their exhibits were highly creditable. In the commercial line John Lewis Childs, Inc., Flowerfield, N. Y., represented by I. S. Hendrickson, made an excellent display, taking the sweepstakes prize, a silver medal, for the most comprehensive commercial display and a silver cup for an exhibit covering 100 square feet. Some of the varieties in this exhibit were Lohengrin, Pocahontas, Lord of June, Albert Victor, Queen Mary, Siberian Blue, Parc de Neuilly, Princess, Victoria Louise, Dalmatia, James Boyd, Mrs. Allen Gray, Khedive, Fairy, Kharput, Isolene, and Pallida Dalmatica.

On the landing at the head of the stairs, second floor, a good collection was staged by John Scheepers, New York, but not in competition. The silver medal presented by the Short Hills, N. J., Garden Club to the amateur exhibitor making the most comprehensive display was won by T. F. Donahue.

ANNUAL MEETING.

On May 27, at 12:30 p. m., a luncheon was served in the "Mansion" in the park, the annual meeting taking place at 2 o'clock. Routine business was transacted and it was decided to increase the life membership dues from $25 to $50.

The officers were re-elected as follows: John C. Wister, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa., president; Wm. A. Peterson, Chicago, vice-president; R. S. Sturtevant, Wellesley Farms, Mass., secretary; Frank H. Presby, Montclair, N. J., treasurer.

After the meeting those present adjourned to the iris test garden to view the 1,000 or more kinds growing there. The test garden and its surroundings deserve more than passing mention, and its fine location and excellent condition is, we assume, due to the authorities and employees of the New York Botanical Garden. The land at this point is what is generally spoke of as rolling or undulating. The garden is laid out on a gentle declivity that slopes down to a dell. At the top of the slope there is a low and rocky ridge, but no trees to keep out the sunlight. In the dell and making something more than a half circle around the garden are a number of the finest forest trees to be seen in this part of the country. Black and white oaks, tulip trees, sweet gums, red maples, cherry or sweet birch are some of the trees noted. One black oak by actual measurement was almost five feet in diameter at the base of the trunk.

As above stated, there are over 1,000 varieties of irises in the test garden. We name a few that are among the most prominent: Tamar, Samapo, Queen Victoria, Mithras, Lohengrin, Sir Walter Scott, Versicolor, Candelabra, Mars, Her Majesty, Mandarin, Mrs. W. R. Fryer, A. M. Brand, Lady Frances, Fryer's Glory, Mrs. Sandford, Regale and Mrs. McKinney No. 3. La Nieve is one of the few pure whites in the garden. Parc De Neuilly is a most robust grower and prolific in flowers. There are borders of peonies and other plants and, with the surrounding monarchs of the wood, the garden is a sylvan paradise.

SECRETARY R. S. STURTEVANT'S REPORT.

Although this is our first meeting in New York and the occasion of our third annual meeting, we have already staged exhibits in Richmond, Va.; Nashville, Tenn.; Kansas City, Mo., and Louisville, Ky., and there will also be shows in St. Paul, Minn.; Toronto, Ont., and Belvidere, Ill. Mr. Wister, our president, is now attending the iris international conference at Paris, France, and London, and the vice-president, W. A. Peterson of Chicago will preside. Of our 600-odd members some 200 live in the vicinity of New York and are well represented among the exhibitors here, although the unusual season has made possible the staging of flowers by Philadelphia, Pa., and Boston, Mass., members as well. We consider the indoor exhibit most successful, but the fine display of irises in the test garden is even more worthy of study. This was started in 1920, with some 600 or more kinds. In 1921 the number was brought up to almost 1,000, and this year we are importing a large number from France and England. Although all varieties are not now in bloom, it is undoubtedly the largest collection in the world.

The iris has been known for centuries; it was listed for sale as early as 1790 and by 1840 there were some hundreds of varieties, but the first impetus to iris growing was given by Bertrand Farr in 1909 by the introduction of new seedlings. Within these last few years many seedlings have been added to our lists, some of them costing as much as $50 to $100 for a single root. The iris boom is on. Probably 50,000 seeds are a small estimate of last year's planting, and when one realizes that every plant is different in color the possibilities of the iris are apparent. In the exhibit to-day you will see some of the finest productions of French, English and American growers, among all these but one, Lent A. Williamson, was rated as 96 per cent good, and the experts will tell you that they expect 90 per cent of our present varieties to be superseded and improved. The iris is easy to grow. Give it good drainage and plenty of sun and everyone can have these iridescent colors as occupants of their garden and whoever owns an iris is welcome as a member of our society. I wish to express our sincere appreciation of the generous assistance and welcome given us by the Horticultural Society of New York and the staff of the New York Botanical Garden.

OBITUARY.

Patrick Welch.

Patrick Welch, senior member of the firm of Welch Bros. & Co., Boston, Mass., died at his home, 179 Columbia road, Dorchester, May 25, after an illness of several months, age 64 years. He was a native of Ireland, locating at Dorchester with his parents in 1871.

Mr. Welch was one of the pioneer wholesale florists of America, beginning as a boy and rising to the top by the sheer force of persistent endeavor and square dealing. He started with W. Wales, Dorchester, and in 1873 joined Holbrook & Tompkins, who leased the Wales establishment, having charge of the cut flower sales. He travelled in the interest of Wheeler's liquid distributor 1873-76, then joined the Waban Rose Conservatories, Natick, Mass., as salesman and later represented that firm at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, Pa. He started business on his own account as a commission salesman in the Boston wholesale cut flower market in 1877. About 30 years ago he associated himself with his two brothers, David and Edward, under the firm name of Welch Bros. This concern was dissolved six years ago, and with the brother then living, Edward, the firm of Welch Bros. & Co. was formed. At various times the business was located at 165 Tremont street, 6 Beacon street, 15 Province court and finally 262 Devonshire street. Branches of the business were maintained for a time at Albany, N. Y., and Montreal, Que.

Mr. Welch was probably the first to ship choice roses and other flowers to Chicago and the middle west in the days when their wholesale production was unknown there. He built up a splendid business and always had time to help materially in every movement for the advancement of the trade. He was a charter member and past president of the Society of American Florists and the Gardeners' and Florists' Club of Boston. He was a practical, working member of nearly all other trade organizations, and gave liberally of his resources to their development. Many New England florists owe their beginning and success in business life to his support and counsel. He was an unfailing friend, and the soul and inspiration of every gathering favored by his presence.

Mr. Welch was married in 1891, Mrs. Welch and their six children, three sons and three daughters, remaining to mourn his loss. His brother Edward, and a sister also survive.

Funeral services were held in St. Peter's Catholic church, Dorchester, May 27, when there was a large attendance of the trade and a great wealth of floral tokens.

APPRECIATION.

For some time we have all been more or less anxious about our dear old friend Patrick Welch—hoping against hope for better news and, even though each succeeding letter that came from his daughter was more discouraging, when we got the telegram announcing he had passed away, we could not help but feel shocked.

Patrick Welch was one of the old guard, and we lose in him not only a good, warm friend, but a splendid business associate—a man always willing to throw his energy into any efforts that were for the good of horticulture. As president of the national society his year was one in every way full of work that was a splendid uplift for the Society of American Florists—a year that was a credit to him, and an honor to the society to have him as its president. His work for the society did not cease with that year, as he was a worker, up to the very last.

In the national flower shows he was one of the strongest and most able supporters—not only morally and financially, but backing the shows with his energy and effort. It was a source of deep regret to all who were at the last national flower show, at Indianapolis, that he could not be with us. More than one spoke of his genial and loving character, and what a pleasure it always was to work with him. It has often been remarked that his judgment was always of the very best,—thoroughly matured. In the death of Mr. Welch we lose one of our most valuable associates, and our sympathy goes out to his family and his many warm friends.

S. S. PENNOCK.

In the death of Patrick Welch of Boston, Mass., the Society of American Florists loses one of its pioneer members, one whose interest in its affairs was of the keenest, and whose loyalty to the organization was exceptional. During the year he was president, in 1915, I had an opportunity to judge of his sterling business qualities at close range, and always found his advice and suggestions of the highest order. It was my privilege to know him intimately for a period of years, and to look back upon our friendship is to arouse a feeling of sadness at the thought that he could not longer remain with us. He was the soul of honor, a delightful companion and excellent host. His wit was notable, and in many an argument served him in good stead. He was a diligent student along horticultural lines, and always ready to lend aid to any movement tending to advance horticulture and floriculture. No matter what service was expected of him, he went about it cheerfully and without thought of praise or commendation in the event of success. He could also take failures with good grace. Few among us have possessed the qualities of good fellowship found in such generous quantity as exemplified in the life of Patrick Welch, and I am sure his very many friends in all parts of the country and Canada will look upon his death as a loss beyond replacement.

JOHN YOUNG.

It is with the greatest regret, that I have just learned of the demise of my sincere friend Patrick Welch. I have had the pleasure of enjoying his friendship over 30 years and always felt, when with him, that gentle influence, denoting the quiet, unassuming, yet genial and gentlemanly quality so much admired in the real man. It was always a great pleasure to be with him in any gathering, and generally when surrounded by his fellow florists, he was greatly appreciated for his originality, and his natural wit was always enjoyed by all who happened to have the good fortune of being in his company.

In the matter of his business career, I can safely say, he left a record that will live long after him. He always had the interest of the craft at heart and never failed to perform his duty, even at personal sacrifice as the elevation of the flower business was the nearest thing to his heart. He was always a diligent and faithful worker on the many committees of the Society of American Florists to which he was assigned, and as the president of this society, his administration was of the highest standard, as the society benefited by his able, conservative and progressive policy.

I feel in the death of Patrick Welch, that I have lost a real friend, and the trade, a real worker, one who always had the interest of the craft at heart, and was ever ready to lend himself to any project which would advance the profession. It will be difficult to replace him.

FRANK H. TRAENDLY.

Another one of the unselfish and willing workers for the advancement of our industry has passed away. Patrick Welch of Boston was a man of pronounced individuality and of unusually sound judgment, always active, until his health began to fail a few months ago, and no task was too big. I well remember him when I was but a boy at that time in the employ of William Scott, of Buffalo, N. Y., who passed away many years ago. He then was a regular visitor, for it was the custom in those days to call upon the trade and solicit orders for all the holidays. Boston at that time being the leading flower market. As years rolled on and I was privileged to know him better, I learned to love him and esteemed his friendship very highly. His wisdom was such that I availed myself of it many times in connection with organization work. One of the most important committees that Mr. Welch and I worked on was the national flower show committee, and time and again, his safe and sane logic helped materially in solving many of our great problems. His work in connection with the big national flower show held in Boston will be forever a fixture in the memory of those who knew of his untiring efforts, which made that exhibition so great a success, and I might say the same of the national flower show held in Philadelphia in 1916, the committee placing the audit of receipts in his charge, and well the work was done. Many of the recommendations that came from his as president of the Society of American Florists, are still alive and helpful to us all. The entire trade has suffered a severe loss in his passing. Long may his memory live with us, and his record ought to be a shining example for the younger generation. I deeply sympathize with his family and business associates in their great loss.

The Late Patrick Welch.

GEORGE ASMUS.

Patrick Welch was no giant in stature; but in every other way he was one of the biggest and best that has ever adorned the florist business. He was away above the average mentally, and in a business way. He made his mark; and from boyhood up was always a great power for good. I knew him intimately for 35 or 40 years, and always loved him. He was a wit, philosopher, and poet; a keen humorist, a good story teller, and always willing to go out of his way to help the other fellow.

GEORGE C. WATSON.

Patrick Welch was a man of rare ability. When called upon for opinions and facts, he was ever ready to give unbiased views and had an unusual way of reasoning out the proper channel to pursue. He was a tower of strength in bygone days upon questions of national importance to the Society of American Florists and the older generation would always look upon Pat Welch's advice with great favor. He was a credit to the roll and will be missed as the years roll on.

HENRY PENN.

Lawrence G. Geiger.

Lawrence G. Geiger, of Chicago, died in New Mexico, May 30, a telegram to that effect being received by Frank Oechslein, for whom he acted as office manager for many years. He was well known to the trade, especially the local buyers, and was a regular attendant at all trade meetings up to the time he left for the west for his health. He was an ambitious man and made friends quickly with everyone he met and the report of his death will be a great surprise to them. The body will arrive here Friday morning and the funeral will be held the following day at 2 p. m. from C. Kampp & Sons' chapel, 318 North Central avenue, with interment at Forest Home cemetery. Mrs. Geiger has the deepest sympathy of the trade in her great loss.

APRIL failures showed liabilities of $73,000,000, against $40,000,000 in April, 1921.

APPLICATION has been made for reduced rates to the Kansas City convention of the Society of American Florists, and we hope to announce them in an early issue.

WE are in receipt of the proceedings of the thirty-seventh annual convention of the Society of American Florists, held at Washington, D. C., August 16-18, 1921. Members of the society will welcome the return of the report, and its reappearance in the old size and form will be generally approved.

Personal.

Frederic W. Taylor, of Los Angeles, Calif., chief of horticulture at the St. Louis World's Fair, stopped off at Chicago, May 25, returning from the Washington meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Taylor was born at Weeping Water, Neb., Friday, the thirteenth of the month, and is still a young man.

Prof. N. E. Hansen, of Brookings, S. D., has returned from a two weeks' plant collecting tour in North Saskatchewan.

Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association.

DISTRICT MEETING.

Districts Nos. 42 and 45 of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, comprising southern Ohio and Indiana, will hold a joint meeting at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati, O., June 12. Important discussions looking forward to increasing the efficiency of the districts will take place and Vice President H. W. Sheppard, of that city, cordially invites the florists of the two sections to attend the conference.

Memorial Day Trade.

The reports received from many centers indicate the Memorial Day business was equal in volume but not in cash returns to that of a year ago. Warm weather throughout the country brought flowers forward with a rush and in some cases affected their quality. Most plants and cut flowers sold well, the call for wreaths exceeding some previous years. Peonies were the favorites in many sections and artificial poppies were exceedingly popular. Prices on all stock were 20 to 50 per cent lower than last year.

Washington Conference Delegates.

Some of the foreign delegates to the recent Washington conference on Plant Quarantine No. 37 are making an exhaustive investigation as to the conditions in this country regarding imports of plants and bulbs. W. G. Lobjoit, British controller of horticulture; Charles Pynaert, president of the Belgian Chamber of Horticulture, and Louis Sander, of Bruges, Belgium, called on leading eastern nurserymen and florists last week, and were in Chicago this week. Mr. Lobjoit proceeding to Florida. Messrs. Pynaert and Sander sail from New York for home June 3.

Netherlands Horticultural Congress, 1923

The Netherlands Horticultural and Botany Society (Nederlandsche Maatschappij voor Tuinbouw en Planktude), under the patronage of Her Majesty the Queen, will hold an international horticultural congress at Amsterdam, September 27, 1923, on the occasion of the society's fiftieth anniversary. Addresses will be presented covering the various phases of scientific research in plant breeding, horticultural education, landscape architecture, etc. Trips will be made to the most important growing centers in Holland. The Amsterdam section of the society is planning to stage a great horticultural exhibition at the same time. The organizing committee of the conference comprises Jhr. G. F. van Tets, president, and Dr. M. J. Sirks, Bergweg 55, Wageningen, Holland, secretary of the society.

Remembrance Road.

York, Pa., May 30.—Twenty-five miles of Lincoln highway was dedicated today as a road of remembrance and planted with memorial trees. The Women's Club of York has been at work for two years on the plans. Charles L. Pack, president of the American Forestry Association, and Major R. Y. Stuart, forester of Pennsylvania, were the speakers at the unveiling of the tablets at either end of the 25-mile stretch.

During the ceremony of dedication Mr. Pack presented to the Women's Club a letter from Mrs. Warren G. Harding as a vice president of the American Forestry Association. Along both sides of the Lincoln highway the memorial trees are allotted to the heroes of the world war. In addition to a marker at each end of the Road of Remembrance in York county, individual trees will be marked.

Early American Azaleas.

Three of the seven American azaleas which are hardy and successfully grown in this Arboretum are in bloom. They are Rhododendron (azalea) Vaseyi, R. (azalea) nudiflorum and R. (azalea) roseum. The first is a native of the southern Appalachian mountains, with delicate pink or rarely white flowers which open before the leaves. The flowers of few azaleas are more delicate in color, and few shrubs of comparatively recent introduction are better worth the attention of garden lovers. There is now a large mass of this azalea at the end of the first of the small ponds on the left hand side of the Meadow road. The other species now in flower are native to and widely distributed in the eastern states. They have pink or rose-colored flowers. Of the two species R. roseum, which opens its flowers a few days later than R. nudiflorum, is a more beautiful plant with darker-colored and very fragrant flowers and, with the exception of the Appalachian flame-colored azalea (R. calendulaceum), the handsomest of the American azaleas which are hardy in Massachusetts. Although this plant was cultivated in England more than a hundred years ago, it has through wrong determination and confusion in names been little understood by American botanists and gardeners, and is still rare in cultivation. The fragrance of the rose-colored flowers is not surpassed by that of any other azalea. Rhododendron nudiflorum and R. roseum are now growing on the lower side of Azalea path, and there is a mass of larger plants of the latter on the right hand side of the Meadow road in front of the lindens.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, May 24, 1922.

New York to Kansas City.

The transportation committee of the New York Florists' Club, under the chairmanship of Paul Rigo, has accepted the itinerary in connection with the journey to Kansas City and return this coming August, as submitted by the Lackawanna railroad.

Briefly, the party, which is fully hoped to be 100 strong, will leave New York, Sunday, August 13, for Chicago, where a stopover will be made to take in the famous Lake Shore drive and other principal points of interest, returning to the Hotel La Salle for dinner. Departure will be made from Chicago that evening and Kansas City reached on the morning of Tuesday, August 15. While in Kansas City during the Society of American Florists' convention, August 15-17, and the day following, hotel accommodations and three meals per day will be provided. On the afternoon of August 18 the party will leave Kansas City arriving in St. Paul, Minn., Saturday morning, where points of interest in the Twin Cities will be viewed, leaving St. Paul in the afternoon and arriving at Duluth, Minn., on the evening of August 19.

The Great Lakes steamer trip will commence Saturday night and continue through to Wednesday morning. This sail through the lakes provides the most enjoyable feature of the trip and undoubtedly will prove the greatest incentive to many. Arriving at Buffalo, N. Y., Wednesday, August 23, special cars will be waiting to whisk the party to Niagara Falls where lunch will be provided at the Hotel Imperial. A tour over the Great Gorge route will be made in the afternoon returning to hotel for dinner. At 7 p. m. the party will start for home, arriving in New York Thursday morning, August 24, at 8 o'clock. Breakfast will be provided for in the Hoboken terminal.

The cost covering all transportation, lower berths on Pullmans and outside staterooms on boat, also three meals per day, will be $220.

All those intending to go, please notify Chairman Paul Rigo, c/o Henshaw Floral Co., 35 W. Eighteenth street, New York. The earlier the reservation, the choicer the accommodation.

Pittsburgh.HEAVY VOLUME OF BUSINESS.

There has been a good volume of business the past week, but stock of all kinds has been in heavy supply, with the majority of it poor in quality and bargain prices have been the order of the day. The weather has been very warm, the thermometer registering as high as 87 degrees, which has been the cause of most of the poor stock. This has also forced the local peony crop into bloom with a rush, so that there were plenty of home grown peonies for everyone at reasonable prices Memorial Day. The rose cut has been heavy, with the majority of it showing the effects of the warm weather. The good stock finds a ready market, leaving the rest to be cleaned up at any figure. American Beauty is about finished. Carnations are nearing the end, getting small in size and a good many of them are asleep on arrival. Some very good Easter lilies are arriving and clean up fairly well. Snapdragon sells readily, but it is also near the end of its season. Some very good indoor gladioli are seen in the market, which bring a good price. Sweet peas are poor and at least 50 per cent of them are unfit for sale. Other items include daisies, both yellow and white; Darwin tulips, Poeticus narcissi and lily of the valley, both greenhouse and outdoor, all of which fill in their own way. The prospects for Memorial Day business are bright and the largest volume on record is looked for at this writing; in fact, the shipping business has started and the wholesale houses all report advance orders in larger numbers than ever before, but more stock will have to be moved to equal last year's record, as prices are lower all along the line. On account of the holiday falling on Tuesday, it makes trade difficult, as most of the retailers are splitting their orders, part to be delivered Saturday and the balance either Sunday or Monday, which makes it practically double work for the wholesaler. The plantsmen report that they are entirely sold out of geraniums in bloom, and that they are now cleaning up on the ones that have not blossomed as yet. Twenty dollars and $25 per 100 is the wholesale price.

The McCallum Co. reports a large business in artificial red poppies; in fact, the orders have come in faster than they can manufacture them at their Forty-second street factory. M. Berger, sales manager for the firm, has just returned from a trip and visit among the trade, and reports business as picking up everywhere, with the florists all busy and optimistic.

Mr. Clark, of the Pittsburgh Cut Flower Co., has just returned from the Shriners' tour, on which they visited Cuba, West Indies, and the Panama Canal Zone. Mr. Clark reports the most enjoyable trip he ever had.

E. C. T.

Cincinnati, O.STOCK HARD TO MOVE.

This market the past week experienced very poor sales. Outdoor stock now is arriving from every direction and consequently clogs the market. Indoor stock moves fairly well, but not enough to keep it cleaned up. Carnations are becoming smaller all the time and soon will resemble the hardy pinks. Roses are holding their own in regard to size, but are arriving a trifle open because of the hot weather. Snapdragons are now a back number, so far as the greenhouse stock is concerned, but the outdoor ones will soon be arriving. The first outside sweet peas made their appearance last week and were soon cleaned up because of their superior quality over the indoor kind. Cornflowers and coreopsis are always welcome flowers and move readily, bringing $5 per 1000. Lilies, both varieties, are about finished.

NOTES.

Eck Bros. have purchased the property on which their store stands and promise to improve it 100 per cent. These boys have been doing well since they were in business and surely deserve all the credit possible for their achievement. They are having a "Say It With Flowers" sign put into the sidewalk in tile.

The Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association of Districts No. 42 and 45, namely, southern Ohio and Indiana, will hold a joint meeting at the Hotel Gibson, June 12, and all the florists are invited to attend this conference.

Fred Gear, of Vine street, deserves special mention on his window displays lately because they have been both novel and attractive.

The Wm. Murphy Co. had a good week in peony sales and also an exceptional business in moss and hanging baskets.

C. E. Critchell is still confined to his home, but the outlook is good for an early recovery. Trade has been very brisk.

Visitors: J. T. Herdigen, Aurora, Ind.; Maurice Cohen, of Cohen & Hiller, New York; Walter Gray, Hamilton.

L. H. Kyrk received the first outdoor sweet peas and cornflowers from Geo. Klotter, Price Hill.

E. A. Porter reports a good week in basket arrangement and funeral work.

H. W. Sheppard reports a fine week in funeral work and table decorations.

Boston.SATISFACTORY MEMORIAL DAY BUSINESS.

Business was good for Memorial Day, all stock cleaning up well, except roses, which brought $8 to $16 per 100 for ordinary stock, reds being quoted at $12 to $30. High grade carnations and feverfew were on the short side, but all other stock was about equal to the demand. Artificial flowers and designs were heavy sellers, it being stated that there were not more than a dozen pieces left in the stores at the close of business Monday. Carnations and peonies brought $8 to $10 per 100; feverfew, stocks and candytuft, $1 per bunch; lily of the valley, $6 per 100, and orchids, $1 per flower. Weather conditions were ideal for the occasion.

New Brunswick, N. J.

The New Brunswick Nurseries, Fred D. Osman, proprietor, are finely located on the Lincoln Highway, just below the city. The soil is admirably suited to rose growing and a large area is planted with all the best known kinds that are suitable for garden culture. The stock consists of hardy budded roses and looks clean and robust. Mr. Osman issues a catalogue in which can be found valuable hints for amateur rose growers.

The retail cut flower trade is well represented by Vanderkratts & Jost, who have a good store on Albany street, near the railway station. They get their stock from the Bound Brook, N. J., growers and the New York wholesale market.

Miss M. Lacsik has a neat appearing retail store at 73 French street.

The regular June meeting of the Tri-State Florists' Association has been called off, to enable the organization to have a full attendance and a more successful flower show this fall.

BULBS, PRESENT and FUTURES

When you buy imported bulbs from us, you buy them by measure, in centimeters or inches and so accepted by us. This means much, as against those people who sell "firsts," "seconds" or "thirds" and give you no assurance as to what such grades measure.

For 40 years VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE at New York and Chicago has supplied the most critical FLORISTS with forcing bulbs. If you have not placed your ORDER or you have not confirmed your order at stated prices why not send us your list for pricing. Where prices are not fixed we can give you valuable information.

- 1st Long and satisfactory connections with the best foreign houses.
- 2nd Credit arrangements and closest buying at favorable exchange rates.
- 3rd First early shipments, followed by one or more later ones covering entire shipping season.
- 4th Earliest deliveries of early forcing items which cannot rightly be delayed for main supply.
- 5th Covering by us of all "Special Expenses" excess brokers' fees and port charges at New York, in which nearly every U. S. Florist grower has been persistently robbed for the past five years. We eliminate this.
- 6th Because of the above, we ask that you submit to us a list as nearly as possible of what you expect to use between now and next November in these imports, part of which we specify below, and let us submit to you approximate prices and certain further details regarding delivery dates which we know will interest you.

We take this opportune time to list here a few vital reasons why Vaughan's Seed Store at New York and Chicago is especially well prepared to take the responsibility of supplying in season at right prices your Whole list of Forcing Bulbs both American grown and imported French, Dutch and Japanese.

BIG MEMORIAL DAY DEMAND.

The demand for stock for Memorial Day was large and the total sales compared most favorably with those of the same period of 1921. Stock in general was in exceptionally large supply with a great number of inferior flowers included in the shipments, consequently the averages on some items will not be as large as expected, but the returns as a whole will probably represent as much money as those of last year, if not more. Peonies were a big factor in the market and were in strong demand, many shipments going as far west as Wyoming and to other distant points where there was any possible chance to arrive in good condition. Prices were low compared to other years and, while fancy stock brought high figures, the averages were nothing to speak of, taking the market as a whole into consideration, but were fair considering the tremendous supply and the condition some of the stock arrived in. Roses were plentiful, but the call for them was disappointing owing to the heavy supply of peonies, consequently large quantities were moved at low prices to the department stores and street peddlers in order to make room for new shipments that kept coming in. Carnations were in large supply and sold fairly well considering the general market conditions. Gladioli had a good call and brought the advertised quotations. Irises, lilies, callas, larkspur, delphinium, jasmines, snapdragon, calendulas, lupines, sweet peas, pansies, stocks, cornflowers, gypsophila, candytuft, mignonette, statice and other miscellaneous seasonable stock were included in the offerings. Considering the heavy supply of stock offered, the Memorial Day demand was exceptionally good and the total sales were surprisingly large. The supply houses enjoyed a heavy call for made-up wreaths for the holiday and were sold out early. The Allied Florists' Association did considerable advertising in the local dailies, which helped wonderfully in increasing the demand in the immediate vicinity.

NOTES.

One of the department stores sold peonies for 20 cents per dozen, May 29, which were equally as good as those the wholesale houses were asking 75 cents and $1 per bunch for. Another store sold roses for 25 cents per dozen and carnations for 19 cents. What were the averages for the week?

Captain O. C. Johns, T. C. Kane, W. C. Bowe and E. C. Pruner, representing Poehlmann Bros. Co., spent Memorial Day here and are ready to start out after more business. Wm. Snyders is calling on the trade on the Pacific coast and will not be back until fall.

E. F. Winterson, who is devoting his time to his Highland Park farm, gave the regular force a lift at the E. F. Winterson Co. store during the Memorial Day rush.

The American Greenhouse Manufacturing Co. has just issued its 1922 catalogue, which is one of the best if not the greatest ever printed. It contains 168 pages including the covers and is a picture book of some of the ranges the company has built. Exterior and interior views of such well known places as Gullett & Sons, the W. A. Rowe Floral Co., the A. F. Amling Co., Anling Bros., the Walter A. Amling Co., Frank Schramm, Stielow Bros., the A. N. Nielson Co., and many other establishments the firm has built are shown, and the catalogue is one well worth having. Probably "Mac" will mail you one free if you call his attention to this item.

The Florists' Club will meet at the Chateau bowling alleys, Broadway and Grace streets, next Thursday evening, June 8, at 8 p. m. Albert Fuchs, one of the pioneer florists and proprietor of the building, has donated five alleys and a meeting room to the club and it is most likely that T. E. Waters will arrange it so there will be a lively meeting. Allie Zech, who has charge of the bowling, invites all members of the club to be present, when several match games will be rolled and a team selected to represent this city at the Society of American Florists' convention next August.

Miss Genevieve Risch and Robert Risch, in company of Miss Sontag, attended the convention at Campion College, Prairie du Chien, Wis., this week, where their brother Henry is a student. They are children of John Risch, well-known wholesaler, who attended the same school in 1889.

Breaking the deadlock which has existed for three months, the Circuit court judges in a meeting have unanimously elected Edward J. Kelly, former chief engineer of the sanitary district of Chicago, to succeed Charles L. Hutchinson as member of the South Park board.

Mangel, the Palmer House Florist, had a splendid Memorial Day business, with a heavy call for wreaths and cut flowers. The window displays at this store attract wide attention and are a few of the beauty spots in the loop.

Lawrence G. Geiger, office manager for Frank Oechslein for many years and well and favorably known to the local trade, died in New Mexico, May 30, an account of which appears in the obituary column this week.

The Central Floral Co.'s special poppy window for Memorial Day attracted much favorable attention and was a fitting tribute to our honored dead. Advertising ideas of this kind are productive and result in many additional sales.

George Bishop and Richard I. Blossom of Ft. Wayne, Ind., were here on a combined business and pleasure trip, May 28, when they were the guests of L. Hoeckner of Peter Reinberg, Inc.

Philip Trausch, carnation foreman at the Weiland-Risch Co's greenhouses at Evanston, has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of his 11 year-old son whose death occurred last week.

Henry Kruchten, of the John Kruchten Co., is giving his father a lift in the greenhouses again this season, so John Kruchten and Frank Hagen are doing extra work at the store.

Tonner's report a cleanup in peonies for Memorial day including the stock in storage for this occasion. Home-grown peonies made their appearance at this establishment this week.

One of the large loop department stores devoted one of its prized State street windows to a special display of bedding plants all last week which were on sale for Memorial Day.

Jake Geimer, who purchased a part of the carnation range of the late Peter Reinberg, known as the farm, from George Reinberg and Mrs. Weiland took possession June 1.

George Wienhoeber had a magnificent window display of wreaths for Memorial Day at his South Wabash avenue store with purple the predominating color.

Vaughan's Seed Store reports continued good demand for canna plants and extensive booking of gladiolus bulbs for summer and fall work.

Bassett & Washburn report a good Memorial Day business, with the heaviest cuts of stock in years, including local irises and peonies.

The Peterson Nursery had several vases of tall bearded irises on display in one of the windows at the State Bank of Chicago, May 29-30.

E. C. Amling returned home last week from California and is greeting old friends at the store. He is the picture of health.

Cut peony blooms of Mons. Jules Elie, from Wheaton, were auctioned, May 28, at 10 cents each. Good reds brought 15 cents.

George Gobel, of the Chicago Flower Growers' Association, is the proud father of a brand new baby boy.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. are handling a good supply of local peonies, which made their appearance this week.

Rubber plants are being extensively used in the hotel and other window boxes downtown this season.

The J. A. Budlong Co. had its share of the Memorial Day business, especially from out-of-town points.

Leo Wietor will attend the alumni meeting at St. Francis college, Milwaukee, Wis., June 4.

Matt Mann gave the regular force at Zech & Mann's store a lift as usual during the holiday rush.

Anton Then and wife expect to remain at Red Bluff, Calif., through the summer.

Ben Bakker, representing A. Henderson & Co., is back from an out-of-town trip.

EXCELLENT IMPROVEMENT IN TRADE.

The demand for stock from all sources was better and the volume of business showed a decided increase over some previous weeks. Funeral work was brisk. The era of weddings is at hand and florists feel that trade during June will be good. There were two important weddings the past week. The trade is preparing for a good Memorial Day business, as the extra heavy rains have forced peonies earlier than usual and the large bulk of them will be finished. The usual run of flowers will be roses, carnations, sweet peas and peonies.

Roses are in good supply and the quality is excellent as a rule, prices being $2.50 to $6 per dozen, principal kinds are Columbias, Premier and Butterfly. Carnations and sweet peas are selling at the same levels as the previous week and, in fact, no advance in prices is looked for at Memorial Day. One of the features of the business is the call for magnolia wreaths.

NOTES.

S. F. Stephens & Son sent out an attractive circular calling attention to the Memorial Day flowers which have been provided for the public. Special attention was called to wreaths of magnolia, laurel or cypress and floral wreaths of the season's choicest flowers. Bouquets, sprays or baskets, roses, daisies, carnations, peonies and other flowers were mentioned. Sturdy blooming and foliage plants for urns, vases and outdoor planting, consisting of geraniums, marguerites, dracaenas, cannas, vinca vines and similar shubbery, were advertised.

Since the resignation of Mrs. Williams as manager of the local branch of the Zettitz Floral Products Co., no manager has been selected, but the greenhouses are in charge of Robert Elton temporarily, who is the head grower. He is now cutting more than 3,000 roses daily, about equally divided between Premier and Columbia. In about six weeks, when the young stock comes

The Wilson Seed & Floral Co., at 23 East Town street, has been featuring the artistic arranging of flowers for funeral occasions. Zich & Dozer, a new retail concern at 1129 North High street, have been having a good trade during the commencement exercises at the Ohio State university. This firm is located near the university section and enjoys a good call for loose flowers and corsages, especially at the end of the school year.

Otto Ackerman, of the Riverside Floral Co., reports a good demand for seasonable flowers at his retail store, 537 North High street. With prospects for rain there should be an extra good call for Memorial Day.

GOOD MEMORIAL DAY BUSINESS REPORTED.

A very good Memorial Day trade was reported by the florists. A great number of orders was taken for designs, and cut flowers were also a considerable factor. Pot plants also moved well, geraniums, irises, ageratums, verbenas, etc., being popular. In cut flowers, roses were in fine demand, Premier, Columbia, Mrs. Charles Russell, Milady and White Killarney constituting the bulk of the offerings. White carnations were much used in spray work, more of this stock being sold than in a number of former years. Lily of the valley went well, being largely used on small pieces. Other miscellaneous seasonable stock, including gladioli, delphiniums, cornflowers, snapdragon, calendulas, sweet peas and peonies were factors in the holiday business.

NOTES.

Memorial Day services were held at the National cemetery at Jefferson Barracks and the New Memorial Park cemetery, great crowds being present. Two aeroplanes flying over the cemeteries at the conclusion of the ceremonies scattered rose petals over the graves.

The St. Louis Wholesale Cut Flower Co. reported a fine Memorial Day business, most stock cleaning up.

Designs were popular at Grimm & Gorly's, with cut flowers being a close second in sales.

F. C. Weber enjoyed a very good holiday trade.

Boundbrook, N. J.

There are a number of good growers in this city and none are more worthy of mention than Thomas Young, Jr., who, our guide, philosopher and friend told us, "is the biggest of all of them." Fortunately, we had years of previous acquaintance with the genial Thomas Young, Jr., serving an apprenticeship with his father, who was a grower. Thomas Young, Jr., was successively a wholesaler and retailer in New York. Some years ago he bought a large tract of land here, erected a number of greenhouses and is now one of the most successful growers of orchids and gardenias in the eastern states or, for anything we know, any of the other states. Considering that it was predicted that Quarantine No. 37 would kill the orchid trade, Mr. Young has a surprisingly large stock of them, house after house full, all looking clean and thrifty. We will say that he has quite a lot of horticultural knowledge under his hat.

While the Bound Brook Greenhouses are located on land adjoining the Bound Brook Nurseries, they are under different management. The greenhouses are conducted by Henry Schnitzspahn, Jr., and he is a successful grower of carnations, sweet peas, chrysanthemums and Christmas plants. We found him bedding out fine stock of young cyclamens. He ships cut flowers to Wm. Mackie of the Eighteenth street market, New York.

In addition to a considerable glass area in the Bound Brook Greenhouses, Henry Schnitzspahn has just erected two fine houses in another location nearer the town, bringing his total glass up to about 45,000 square feet.

The Bound Brook Nurseries show good features in evergreens, roses and flowering shrubs. The weeping trees are noteworthy. The firm also grows fruit trees.

One of the local growers is said to be wanting to sell his range, having other projects in view.

HUGE SUPPLY OF ALL STOCK.

The past week has been a burden to the wholesalers, the demand and supply having a ratio of about one to five. Weather conditions have been such that all outside stock has been advanced from a week to 10 days above the normal and created a congestion that is very hard to handle and made price conditions such that general averages are very far from satisfying the growers. Every day the past week peonies have been offered in increasing quantities and at receding prices, selling as low as $10 to $20 per 1,000 for stock sold by wholesale commission men on the wharves who handle farmers' produce. The florist wholesalers tried to get from $4 to $6 for the good stock, but $4 was about the best they could do except for very fancy flowers. Last year peonies were only about half a crop owing to a late frost, which nipped the buds. This season there is 100 per cent production and all in time for Memorial Day. It is said that the cold storage house in the Reading terminal has several hundred thousand blooms stored for the various commission men around town. J. J. Styer of Concordville has a crop of 1,000,000 blooms, nearly all of which will be in for the holidays, and he is only one of the many growers shipping to this market. In addition there are the farmers, who flood the wholesale produce markets and bring them in addition by the wagon load to town and peddle around the stores, selling at any price they can get. In the regular line there are quantities of roses of much better quality than usual for the season, but these are moving very slowly at way down prices from $2 up to $12. Carnations are also hitting the bottom and rebound very little. Only two kinds are fit to ship, Matchless and pink Ward, even Enchantress Supreme having to be sold locally. Sixty per cent of the stock is white, 30 per cent deep pink and the balance light pink and red. White is now the poorest color to sell, the demand being for the dark pinks and reds. Cornflower is very plentiful, as is candytuft, pyrethrum, annual larkspur, and other outdoor stock of this character. Very fine Larkspur belladonna is now coming from out of doors. Snaptagon is a quantity product, as is stocks, or gilly flower, one grower sending in 1,500 bunches. There are still plenty of callas and Easter lilies, which have to fight hard with the peonies. Quantities of stock were shipped out of town Saturday, particularly to florists with a cemetery trade, who would have a large demand from Sunday visitors. Sunday was the general shipping day for the bulk of the out of town orders; the wholesale houses were busy all day long and sent out immense quantities of stock of all kinds. It is said to be one of the greatest floral Memorial Days in the history of the business in the quantity of stock moved, but at prices from a third to a half less than last year.

May 29.—The avalanche of flowers thrown on the market both Saturday and Monday was much more than even the extra call could handle. Everybody had peonies, as they all came in at once and values fell badly, $3 to $4 being asked for choice stock in 100 lots. Second grade flowers sold as low as $10 per 1000. Roses and carnations were seen in quantity in all the stores at buyers' prices, there being no regular quotations. Candytuft, pyrethrum, larkspur and other outdoor stock was offered by the wagon load. It was, without doubt, the greatest quantity of flowers ever seen in this market. The miners' strike cut down many orders usually sent upstate through the coal regions. With all there was a large volume of trade at much lower prices than usual for the day.

SOUTHERN COMPETITION.

A prominent grower who keeps in close touch with the market says that greenhouse men will soon be confronted with a new problem in the competition of southern growers, who have already captured the asparagus market and whose well flowered gladioli were on sale in all the principal cities of the north as early as January. Callas and perhaps Easter lilies can be grown. The latter, shipped in bud, will carry easily from Florida. Such stock produced as field crops in quantity, coming in competition with greenhouse flowers during the winter months, will play hob with prices and cut several very active stocks from the growers' lists.

THE STREET MEN.

The curbstone flower merchants have had a harvest since Mothers' Day, being able to buy flowers at very low prices, which have sold well when put before the people on the thronged streets. Some of the venders have quite a following, as they will handle only good stock, others load up with job lots and peddle it off their wagons at the street corners or alleyways at low figures. Whole loads, entirely of carnations, were sold the past week for 15 cents a bunch of 25 flowers. Such trade, while it does move a lot of flowers, cannot in any way interfere with the stores, as no one would send such stock to a friend. Judges of flowers will not buy the rubbish at any prices, and the better grades, while sold cheaper than in the stores, are only bought because of the opportunities offered, as buyers would not likely have gone to the stores for them.

NOTES.

The Leo Niessen Co. had an immense Memorial Day demand; seven express truck loads of boxes went out before noon on Saturday and the entire office force, with a number of extra hands, worked all day Sunday on out of town orders. Peonies, carnations and roses were the quantity stocks, with a large

J. J. Fallon, Lynchburg, Va., was a visitor, May 27. Mr. Fallon believes in getting good prices for Mothers' Day carnations, as he plants more white than he needs, just to have a quantity for that day, and he feels that he has a right to get back for the surplus he has had to carry to enable him to do this.

David Anderson, whose place adjoins Mr. Munroe's has given himself the luxury of a new dwelling, which is a model in every respect. He has added A. N. Pierson's new rose, Mrs. Warren G. Harding, to his list, planting a house with this variety, which is doing so well that he wishes he had planted more.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. report their best Memorial Day business, there being an exceptional demand for everything in wreaths and materials for making them up. Poppy flowers were in favor, which, together with special work for June weddings, taxed their facilities to the utmost.

Manager Lynch of the Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market is back on the job again, handicapped with a game leg, but thankful it was no worse. Exceptionally fine roses, larkspur, peonies and carnations are features here.

Charles E. Meehan has found gladioli a good crop following chrysanthemums. The first cut was early in May. Since then they have come along regularly. The spikes are well flowered and in good demand at top prices.

Wm. Munroe, Garrettford, Pa., is preparing to plant a new 40x200-foot house, recently erected by the Metropolitan Material Co., to Hadley roses, with which kind he has been very successful.

Frank Ross says, "It pays to advertise." He spent over $1,000 in the newspapers in the past month and is very well satisfied with results which came directly from this publicity.

Fred Muller, Jr., has purchased four acres at Broomhall, on the Westchester Pike, and will erect two greenhouses to be completed by autumn. K.

Albany, N. Y.

FINE MOTHERS' DAY TRADE.

The retailers are pleased with Mothers' Day business. The volume is increasing here from year to year and the outlook is that this holiday will soon far surpass Memorial Day and become a second Easter. Colored flowers sold better than white. Some of the florists reported they had white carnations left on their hands at the close of the day, but were cleaned out of all colored flowers.

Edw. P. Tracey, president, and Thomas F. Tracey, general manager, of the Albany Cut Flower Exchange, Inc., were in Boston, Mass., May 27, to attend the funeral of Patrick Welch, a former president of the Society of American Florists. Mr. Welch was one of the organizers and the vice-president of the Albany Cut Flower Exchange, Inc.

Citations have been issued by Surrogate George Lawyer for the probate of the will of the late John J. Berberick, for 25 years one of the leading florists in the southern section of the city. Mr. Berberick died April 23 in the local hospital after a lengthy illness with a complication of diseases. His store and greenhouses at 26 Second avenue were for years a landmark. He was 54 years of age, and is survived by his widow, two sons, Frank and John J., Jr., and one daughter, Caroline. R. D.

MOST STOCK CLEANED UP.

While in the wholesale district there seemed to be considerable buying during the past week, particularly on May 27, it was difficult, to use a nautical phrase, to keep the decks clear. There were several warm days and heavy supplies of stock kept pouring in. In addition to many roses, carnations and minor offerings, truck load after truck load of peonies were thrown on the market. Many were sold, others went into cold storage and yet there was always a surplus in sight. It is hoped and believed that the trade for Memorial Day will be good and, for a time at least, clean up the market. Orchids do not seem to be very plentiful, but there is no great demand for them. The gardenia season is about ended. It being "poppy week," there was a clash between what is known as the Senior League, composed of women, and the Commissioner of the Department of Public Welfare over the granting of a permit to sell them on the streets. Mayor Hylan finally interfered and gave orders that the Senior League be granted a permit. It is well known that these poppies are artificial and it is claimed that they are made by disabled veterans. We are for anything that helps the disabled veterans; but, truth to tell, there seems to be considerable "bunk" in this poppy proposition. Our government is spending millions of dollars for the care of disabled veterans and it should not be necessary for anybody to engage in a street peddling business along that line. We heartily disapprove, particularly in a great city with such a mixed population as this one has, of sending young girls out on the streets to sell anything, no matter how worthy the object may be. The sale of the poppies is not a matter to get excited about. If it helps disabled men to pass away the time in making them, let them be sold. But it has the flavor of a commercial scheme rather than help for the veterans and we have seen boxes of them that were never made in this country.

May 29.—There is an immense quantity of stock on the market and less business than might be expected. Special roses are particularly slow. Cemetery florists report a good Sunday business, but it has had little visible effect on the wholesale cut flower market.

NOTES.

On May 27, 1916, Jonathan Nash, of the former firm of Moore, Hentz & Nash, passed to the beyond. On May 24, of the same year John Kral, long an employee of the firm, also passed away. On each anniversary of their deaths Aubrey S. Nash, a son of Jonathan Nash and now of the firm of Hentz & Nash, Inc., prepares a suitable memorial of his father and former friend and gives it prominence in the salesroom.

The Fordham Florist, 421 East Fordham road, made up a large number of good Memorial Day designs. A particularly noteworthy piece was placed in Poe park, a popular Bronx resort. It was a wreath four feet in diameter, made of prepared magnolia leaves, cycas palms and daisies, decorated with blue and gold ribbon and inscribed, "In Memory of the Unknown Dead of Bronx County."

Early in the morning of May 27, a fire in a Greek restaurant on the second floor of 112 West Twenty-eighth street flooded the wholesale store of Sullivan, Dolan & Co., below. Until repairs are made they have space with Doyle & Booth at 116 West Twenty-eighth street.

The Art Floral Co. is a retail enterprise recently established at 31 East Thirty-third street. A. Behr, for a number of years with A. Kottmiller, is the moving spirit in the business. He is an active young man.

The news of the recent death of Patrick Welch, of Boston, Mass., caused many expressions of regret, as he was well known in the trade of this city.

It has been stated that city inspectors were in the wholesale district, Sunday, taking notes of the stores that were open for business.

In addition to other good roses and a variety of seasonal flowers, Traendley & Schenck, 436 Sixth avenue, have fine Premier roses.

Among the visitors to the iris show at Bronx park was Prof. A. C. Beal of the College of Agriculture, Ithaca.

In addition to other good stock, Paul Meconi, in the Coogan building, is handling exceptionally fine gladioli.

VISITED CHICAGO: F. C. Varela, of the Canary Islands.

APRIL rainfall in France was the greatest in 25 years.

BRANDON, MAN.—Farmers here have lost seed crops by floods.

DECORAH, IA.—The Adams Seed Co. has failed with liabilities of about $200,000.

THE recent hot weather reported from Europe is not favorable to the proper development of Dutch bulbs.

ALBERT DICKINSON, Chicago, and Mrs. Dickinson have returned from Florida and are at the Webster hotel. They may spend the summer in Honolulu.

G. C. ELDERING, of W. J. Eldering & Son, Overveen, Holland, and other delegates from that country to the recent plant quarantine conference at Washington, will sail for home June 3.

REPRESENTATIVE TINCHER of Kansas, discussing the Federal Reserve Board in the house, May 23, accused it of responsibility for charging farmers 60 per cent interest during the period of deflation while providing money for industrial centers at six per cent.

NEVADA, IA.—The L. K. Ellsberry Co., specializing in seed corn, was purchased by G. Ray Connolly, of this city, May 16. F. O. Withrow, former proprietor of the concern, has returned to Geneseo, Ill., where he has an interest, with his son, H. H. Withrow, in a similar business.

THE Chas. H. Lilly Co., Seattle, Wash., reports Puget Sound cabbage seed is only 25 per cent of last year's acreage, but that the reduced crop is looking well. Turnip and rutabaga have suffered severely from the cold weather. Beet and mangel are looking good, and there will be nearly a full crop of these two items.

A CIRCULAR letter to seedsmen was recently mailed by a Chicago seed trade paper, saying it was speaking for the local seedsmen in welcoming the trade to this city in June. Inquiry among the trade has failed to locate any individual, who has given this journal such authority, though each one seemed anxious to extend a most hearty personal welcome.

CINCINNATI, O.—The J. Chas. McCullough Seed Co., say the vegetable and garden seed business is 50 per cent ahead of that of last year, and look for continued good trade in these lines to the middle of June. The jobbing trade has also improved considerably, and many fill-in orders are coming to hand. This has been one of the firm's best seasons in field and grass seeds.

Onion Set Costs.

The Onion Growers' Association of South Holland, Cook county, Illinois, the stockholders of which have voted to dissolve, were given a report showing onion sets sold in the past season at an average of $1.23 per bushel, while the cost of selling was 72 cents, making a net to the growers of 51 cents per bushel. An auditing committee of ten will go over the selling record.

Southern Seedmen's Association.

NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION, MAY 29-31.

The programme for this meeting included Mayor McShane's address of welcome to the visitors, at the opening session, Monday morning at 10 o'clock. D. R. Mayo, of Knoxville, Tenn., responding. President Jos. Steckler, of the convention city, will read the president's address followed by the report of the secretary-treasurer. H. W. Newman, president of the New Orleans Association of Commerce, will tell of "New Orleans and the Mississippi Valley." At the afternoon session the visitors will be the guests of the city on a boat trip on the Mississippi river. Announcement will be made at each morning session of the several forms of entertainment in the city.

The Tuesday morning, May, 30 session, commencing at 9:30 o'clock, will be taken up by the presentation of many instructive papers, including: "Resources of Louisiana and the Value of Good Seed from the Farmer's Standpoint," by Hon. Harry D. Wilson, commissioner of agriculture; "Relation of the Seed Laboratory to the Seedsmen," by J. L. Burgess, of the state department of agriculture, North Carolina; "The Essentials in Building a Mail Order Seed Business," by H. G. Hastings, Atlanta, Ga., and "Advertising," by Fred I. Meyer, New Orleans.

After adjournment at noon the members will be taken by automobiles, leaving the St. Charles hotel at 12:30 p. m., to the Southern Yacht Club, on Lake Pontchartrain, where luncheon will be served at 1:30 o'clock. A very enjoyable trip through the French quarter of New Orleans has been arranged for the ladies the same day, at 9:30 a. m., a competent guide being provided for the occasion.

The afternoon session will consist of a general discussion of the seed business, election of new members and committee reports. The concluding feature, Tuesday, will be a banquet at the famous Louisiane restaurant, at 8 p. m.

The final session will be held Wednesday morning, at 9:30 o'clock, and will be an executive session, when the election of officers for the coming year will take place. After a discussion of general association business, the convention will adjourn at 12:30 p. m.

California Seed Crops.

The Pieters-Wheeler Seed Co., Gilroy, writes, May 16: "Crop prospects are far from good in California. Beet is practically a failure. There was only a very small acreage put out and what is left does not amount to 20 per cent of a crop. Many fields have been plowed up entirely. The fact of the matter is, the quantity of beet produced in California this year will be negligible. Carrot has not done well. The cold winter retarded the starting, and it is only now beginning to make a growth, which is weak. We do not believe carrot will average over 50 to 60 per cent of a crop at the best, and the acreage is very small. Parsnip looks like about 60 per cent of a crop. Parsley does not promise over 25 per cent of a crop. Swiss chard is very poor and only a very small acreage. Some crops have already been plowed up. This suffered with curly leaf, the same as the beet. Mangel is looking very well and should make a good crop. Onion to date is looking well, and unless it is injured by heat or mildew, promises a fair crop. The acreage is very small. So much for the biennials.

"So far as annuals are concerned, lettuce is looking very well and, with a good acreage, there should be plenty of seed to go around. Radish is very poor and not over 20-25 per cent of a crop. Sweet peas are looking well to date. It looks as though, with the demand from all over the country for biennials, there would not be near enough to supply actual needs. We look for many shortages the coming fall."

FLOWER SEEDS.

The John Bodger & Sons Co., Los Angeles, writes May 24: "In view of the European shortage, we have made a special effort to increase our plantings of such perennials as can be grown here successfully. For instance, we have increased our planting of varieties of delphiniums, dahlias, anemones, carnations, Gypsophila paniculata, single hollyhocks in variety, scabiosa and wall-flowers. Prospects to date are very good, although we are very heavily booked on a large number of the above, and expect to be sold out long before the harvest is over. We are also growing, in a limited way, a number of other perennials, which we hope to grow successfully here in the future.

"There seems to be quite a demand for all kinds of flower and vegetable seeds at this time, and we are oversold practically on all vegetable seeds, and on many flower seeds. There seems to be an unusual demand for grandiflora mixed sweet peas. Owing to an apparent overproduction during the past year, all the growers reduced their acreage, and it was very doubtful whether there would be enough seed to go around at delivery time. We have a liberal acreage planted, but our second planting was late, and it will depend upon climatic conditions as to whether we will raise a large crop. The early flowering sweet peas are now coming into full bloom and, notwithstanding the cold spring and the two severe frosts in April, they are making a very good showing and there will be a fair crop harvested and probably enough to go around, although we are selling very closely on some of these varieties. On late flowering Spencers in named varieties the prospects are good, and there will be ample to take care of all our business, but we think there will be no great surplus of mixed Spencers this year. The green aphid has made its appearance quite noticeably, but we have been successful in fighting it by spraying, and we hope to get through without any serious damage.

"We have good stands of asters and zinnias and all kinds of annual flower seeds. Prospects, generally speaking, are of the very finest."

Watermelons in Florida.

The commercial area of watermelons in Florida this year is estimated by the United States Department of Agriculture at 35,400 acres, as compared with 18,700 acres harvested in 1921. The indicated yield per acre, based on the condition of the crop May 1, is 360 melons, as compared with 434 melons reported for 1921, from which is forecast 12,744 cars of 1,000 melons each, or nearly 13,000,000 watermelons, as compared with the production of 8,116 cars of 1,000 melons each in 1921. Production in terms of carloads usually exceeds the carlot movement.

Tomatoes in Florida and Texas.

Forecast of the production of early commercial tomatoes in Florida indicates a crop of 10,992 cars of 480 crates each, compared with a harvest of 6,829 cars in 1921, or an increase of 61 per cent. The east coast crop has a prospect of 6,134 cars and elsewhere in Florida 4,858 cars. These estimates are based on reports to the United States Department of Agriculture. Production expressed in carlots, usually exceeds the carlot movement. The Texas crop of early commercial tomatoes is forecast at 4,498 cars of 896 crates each, or an increase almost as great as the whole harvest of 2,266 cars in 1921. From the lower valley of the Rio Grande 1,467 cars are expected this year, and from other places in Texas 3,031 cars.

Irrigation.

ED. AMERICAN FLORIST:

I use the Skinner system of overhead irrigation and have also a faucet so that I can let the water flow between the rows of plants, if necessary. It has occurred to me that an ideal, though expensive, method would be to lay two or three-inch drain tile below the surface of the ground, underneath the roots, every alternate row, and irrigate by running water through the tile. Is this plan feasible?

C. W. T.

Sub-irrigation is not new nor untried. It was once highly recommended but in practice we find its scope too limited. Where the soil is sandy or gravelly the water does not travel far, too much water being lost through the subsoil. Where the land slopes the water rushes to the lower levels avoiding the higher parts, making proper infiltration difficult, expensive and often impossible and sometimes giving very indifferent results. However, sub-irrigation by the use of tile is ideal. Its proper use requires a heavy flow of water, so much that the water can be rushed into the tile to fill it from end to end. A slow trickling stream such as produced by a faucet is generally a failure for long lines.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Cleaning Up.

The bedding season is over, the year's work is practically finished, the young stock for another year in preparation, and now is the time to clean house. Do not leave a lot of worthless stock scattered around the houses that takes a man's time to water, but what it is desired to save block up all together where it can be watered in a short time, and, above all things, throw out anything that has passed its usefulness. How often have we seen plants that would never have been of any value left standing in the greenhouses until fall planting; neglected, yet taking more or less room, to be thrown out at last, and the houses never thoroughly made ready for the coming crop. Get the plants that need care and attention all together, and clean up the other houses. If the stock is grown in benches, these will need repairing, and if badly decayed take them down and rebuild. Those who have cement benches are fortunate, for they will only need repairs. Throw out all the old soil and clean up under the benches and in all the corners, and throw out any old, rotting boards or pieces of corks, and thus get rid of the vermin that invariably infest greenhouses. After the benches are cleaned out, give them a good, thick coat of whitewash in which sulphur was mixed while the lime was slacking. The advantage of this is too little appreciated by many growers. It costs but little and the prevention from fungus will often amount to a great deal. After the whitewash has dried throw a few ashes or a mulch of some kind on the benches to protect them from the hot rays of the sun. Give the inside of the house a good coat of white paint; this should be done at least every other year, for the difference in the amount of light in a clean white house and in a dirty one during the dark short days is material, and the increased quality and quantity of stock will more than repay for the expense and labor. Any repairs that the heating system needs should be made at once and the boilers cleaned up ready for fall. Too often the boiler is never thoroughly cleaned out after the last firing, and ashes and clinkers are left lying around in a moist condition, rusting the boilers. The steam boilers should either be emptied or filled, for if the water is left standing, rust will form inside just above the water line and rapidly eat into the iron. These are all necessary details to be looked after at the earliest possible moment.

Canterbury Bells.

There is always a demand in the spring for something different than the flowers which the buyers have seen all through the winter, and many growers have a call for some of the forced perennials. Canterbury bells are grown for this purpose, and if well grown find a ready sale. Seeds sown now and grown on in pots, being shifted into larger sizes as may be required, will bloom next spring and help furnish the grower with a variety of stock. They should be grown cool during the early winter, a violet house or one of a similar temperature being about right, and then brought into a warmer house with a temperature of 50 degrees in late winter, where they will produce fine blooms for early spring. By bringing a few at a time into the warmer house, a succession of blooms may be had.

Ardisia Crenulata.

The seeds of ardisia may be sown at any time during spring and, as it will take until another year to grow plants that will fruit, it is not material at which particular time they are sown. The seeds are a little slow in germinating and it is better to sow them in the manner of sowing cyclamen, about half an inch apart. In early summer they should be potted in 2½-inch pots, and are better grown in a frame than in the greenhouse. In the fall, when brought into the houses, they should again be potted in 3 or 4-inch pots and grown in a temperature of 50 degrees. The plants are of a woody nature and grow slowly, and should not be potted into too large pots, for it is far better to allow the roots to fill the pots before shifting. The following spring they will bloom and should then be potted in 6-inch pots and given a cool location in the houses. After the fruit has formed and grown to good size the plants should be given a good, sunny position, that they may take on a bright color by Christmas. If the plants are grown too warm the foliage will be thin and lack the substance and luster which make them so much admired in the cooler grown plants, and the warmer grown stocks gets chilled very easily, when the berries will drop off. The only insect which infests this plant is the brown scale, which, if not destroyed, will cover the plant stem completely. These should be carefully removed and continually guarded against. If there are any old plants that have dropped their lower leaves, the tops of these can be rooted in a similar manner to rooting rubbers, that is, by cutting into the stem and mossing the cut and, after the roots have appeared in the moss, the tops cut off below the moss and potted.

Calceolarias.

A plant that always attracts attention and is as decorative as cineraria or other plants of that kind, and yet but little grown, is the calceolaria. The culture is very similar to that of the cineraria, and is fully as easy. The seeds should be sown at once and shaded until they have produced one or two leaves, when the shade should be made lighter. As soon as large enough they should be potted into small pots and shifted along into larger sizes as fast as required. They should, as soon as well established, be given a light, airy location, not shady enough for them to become drawn, but if in the full sunlight they will have to be watched closely that they do not get dry. They will require cool quarters during the winter, if nice, stocky plants are desired, and under this treatment fine 6-inch pot plants may be had in bloom in early spring that will surely attract attention. For the last potting a good, rich soil will be required, and when they begin to bloom, watering with liquid manure will be beneficial. Like the cineraria, they are quickly ruined by aphids, and constant fumigation will be necessary. Many growers stand the plants on tobacco stems, which are renewed as the strength is lost.

Kurume Azaleas.

When Plant Quarantine No. 37 went into effect it shut the door on azaleas from Belgium and in fact all other countries. As these beautiful showy plants, when in flower, were always a strong feature of the Easter stocks of all the large growers, and also of most of the grower-retailers, this embargo was viewed by all as a great hardship. While there were many men in the United States who could grow azaleas, it had been found cheaper to import them. The Belgians had long made a specialty of this plant. They had a large stock of all the best kinds and grew them in great quantities for export to other countries.

Amoena and Hindigiri Japanese azaleas, had for some time been grown by nurserymen for lawn decoration, having been found quite hardy when strong established plants had made their summer growth. These had for a time been forced for Easter in a small way by a few, to give variety, and the fact that they were hardy and could be planted outside, was also a strong selling point. In lieu of the Belgian stock these were immediately brought forward by progressive growers who caught the nurserymen napping and cleaned them out of all large sized stock before they realized or became awake to the situation.

Just previous to the embargo going into effect several nurserymen and other importers of Japanese plants had imported in limited quantities a type of azalea called Kurume, which had long been known in Japan but for some reason had escaped the notice of the importers. A collection of these in plants of good size exhibited before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, in Boston, created a great sensation. They showed considerable variety in form and coloring and had great possibilities as a pot plant, as well as for planting out for lawn decoration.

Immediately those fortunate enough to have stock, set about working it up and found that it grew readily from cuttings. Henry A. Dreer, Inc., Philadelphia, Pa., was first in the field, exhibiting stock beautifully in flower in from three-inch to six-inch pots at the New York flower show last spring and larger plants later at the Fifth National Flower Show, Indianapolis. The flowers are for the most part double or, hose-in-hose, one single flower within the other, produced in clusters at the end of every shoot.

They make very showy pot plants, even the smallest sizes being profusely covered with blooms. The stock plants at Dreer's are planted out in frames from which cuttings are taken during the summer, 100,000 young plants being in sight this season for autumn delivery for florists to grow on.

Containing Fifty Thousand Kurume Azaleas.

Alphonse Pericat, Collingdale, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia, early saw the possibilities of this species of azalea for florists' use, as it is quite as beautiful as the Indian varieties and apparently much easier to grow. Securing a stock a year ago he now has worked up a collection worth going miles to see. Frame after frame out in the open is filled with plants from cuttings struck last summer which this autumn will be ready for from six-inch to eight-inch pots. Out of a block of 50,000 plants there are 15,000 of the larger sizes, while the rest will make strong plants for fours. They are all grown in prepared beds of peaty soil and given a good watering every evening, a well and small gasoline engine furnishing the water and necessary pressure.

That stock of salable sizes can be produced in quantity in such a limited time, opens the way to a new azalea industry, which has wonderful possibilities. Standards and pyramids of good size are possible in three years, while larger sizes for which there is a certain demand, would follow quickly. It will not be long before there will be specialists devoting their whole time to the production of this class of plants, supplying the trade with stock that can be flowered all through the winter, as some of the varieties, notably Christmas Cheer and perhaps others, can be brought in for the mid-winter holidays.

This azalea also grows readily from seed which can still be imported from Japan. Mr. Pericat has thousands of these little seedlings now up, some of which will flower next spring and demonstrate whether this method of cultivation is desirable.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Klft, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The retail grower should have from a quarter to a half an acre planted with spring flowering shrubbery such as deutzia, white and pink weigelia, spiraea, the new varieties of the double mock orange, hydrangea arborescens, etc. Beds of candytuft, pyrethrum, annual larkspur, also prima donna, hardy Scotch pinks and lily of the valley will all be in full flower until after Memorial Day. Such stock will amply repay all the intensive culture that can be given it and provide flowers that will be very helpful at this time of the year.

Rambler roses are now at their height and plants of white and pink Dorothy Perkins should be included in the above list. When properly pruned these furnish well flowered sprays that are indispensable in decorative work and can be used to advantage with many other flowers.

About this time there are numerous inquiries about keeping plants over the summer. This is quite a problem to some who desire to oblige their customers but have not the facilities for handling the stock. In the first place, in the case of soft wooded plants like ferns, quote prices high enough to replace them with new plants of the same size, which can then be sent home when the time comes. Always quote a high figure for palms and have a palm man keep them over the summer. Other hardy plants can be handled in the same way. The main thing is to quote prices high enough to make it pay;

then if the plants are not considered worth it, you have done your part and the customer is generally satisfied.

Now is the time to arrange the vacations of the store force as they will commence in July. It is always best to have the various periods selected well ahead in order to give every one something to look forward to and lay their plans accordingly.

Get ready for the inventory and have it over by July 1. It is the only way that many florists get to really know what a lot of this or that they have on hand. The half bad and really undesirable material should be sorted out and placed by itself. To all sorts of baskets repairs can be made. Paint will then make them look as good as new or at least a lot better. Many things come into the shop that for some reason do not seem to take and these should always be pushed, kept to the front and featured in every way. It is not worth while to lower the value, as frequently this does not help, in fact articles raised in price have been known to sell much easier. If the list when completed shows passe material of little value, which clutters up the shelves, store-room or basement, do not hesitate to mark it off and throw it out.

Now that the summer time with its inactive demand will soon be here it is time to offset this with working up stock for the coming season. Every retailer likes to have something new to show his customers at Christmas and this is the time for the heads of the store to get together, work up designs original in arrangement and coloring, and adopt several as standard. Such materials as prepared magnolia, oak leaves, and Japanese chenille can be made into wreaths of various sizes, much of it decorated with poppy heads, cones, red and silvered ruscus and other such material that when finished, boxed and stored in a dry place, will keep to look perfectly fresh until wanted.

Larkspur belladonna is now to be had in quantity as is the hardy white Hydrangea arborescens with its large white heads borne on long stems. These with long sprays of the Dorothy Perkins rose make fine decorative effects in store and window. The shorter annual larkspur works up excellently in small vase baskets with short pink roses for special sales.

FRENCH HYDRANGEAS IN TUBS.

Late flowering French hydrangeas in tubs that are now showing bud are good stock for the grower-retailer with a suburban trade, as there is nothing that makes such a fine showing on the lawn as these tubbed hydrangeas when in full flower. They are especially fine at the sea shore.

Arrange to spend a part of your vacation at Kansas City, attending the sessions of the convention of the Society of American Florists. This is the first time the society has met in this large hustling western city which is making great preparations for the reception. President S. S. Pennock and the board of directors have arranged that there shall be something of compelling interest for every session so as to secure a full attendance. Be present and make this one of the best society conventions ever held.

One of the most economical appliances of the flower shop is a set or several sets of delivery boxes suitable for all kinds of made up work. Double thick corrugated straw board when shellaced to make it waterproof, will with any kind of care last a long time. Some florists have them made of wicker which is quite expensive and they have to be lined in winter, but when painted and the firm's name in a scroll across the top they make a good advertisement wherever seen. Far too frequently new cut flower boxes that cost 25 cents or more are pressed into service for delivery and when they come back have a very second hand look.

The publicity fund of the national committee of the Society of American Florists grows very slowly. Think of 10,000 florists contributing to a fund that this year has so far totaled only a little over $23,000. Some invested generously because they have felt its returns, others grudgingly as they have little faith. Advertising has made millions for those who believed in it and even in the flower industry has done wonders in a small way. A dime a day from every member in the trade would put the publicity committee up into the seventh heaven and fatten the bank account of every investor. What say you brother, will you start in today?

Although the flowers of a few of the plants will have faded and those of others will not have opened, the largest number of evergreen rhododendrons in the arboretum will be in flower when this bulletin reaches its Massachusetts readers. Flower buds are abundant and the brilliant display made by these plants promises to be an exceptionally good one. The rhododendron collection is at the base of Hemlock hill and adjoins the South street gate.

Comparatively little success in the cultivation of these plants has been obtained in the eastern United States in spite of all the time, thought and money which have been expended on them in the last 75 years. This climate is hostile to all broad-leaved evergreens, and of the hundreds of species of evergreen rhododendrons now known only the species of eastern North America, five exotic species and a few hybrids can be grown in the open ground in Massachusetts; and among them are none of the really beautiful trees and shrubs which are the glory of a few gardens in more favored regions. A few more hybrids may be added to the arboretum collection, but it is not probable that there are now anywhere species to discover which will prove hardy in this climate. In the neighborhood of Portland, Ore., or near the shores of Puget sound and not in the east collections of evergreen rhododendrons may be established which may well rival or surpass those in the gardens on the shores of the Italian lakes or in Cornwall, although in one Cornwall garden some 400 species are growing and nearly 70 species have been in flower on the same day.

Plants of the native Rhododendron maximum collected in the middle and southern states have been planted in recent years in considerable numbers in this part of the country, but the rhododendrons chiefly used in the gardens of eastern North America are hybrids of R. catawbiense of the high slopes and summits of the southern Appalachian mountains. Names have been given to a large number of plants made originally by crossing this species with the Himalayan R. arboreum and other Indian species, with the Caucasian R. ponticum and with R. maximum, and by raising seedlings from these hybrids. Most of these hybrids and their offspring have been raised in England; several good varieties have originated in Germany and Belgium, and a few have been produced in the United States many years ago, chiefly in the Parsons Nursery in Flushing, Long Island. The best of these hybrids for this country have been made in England, but only a comparatively small number of them are hardy, the hardest being those in which the Catawbiense and Maximum blood predominate. R. ponticum, a tender species, has been used almost exclusively for the stock on which these hybrids have been grafted, and the tenderness of the stock has evidently affected the constitution of the graft; and it is this stock which may cause the death without other apparent causes of plants which have flourished in this country for 30 or 40 years. Ponticum is favored by nurserymen because the plants are quickly and cheaply raised and easily worked, but for really hardy and reliable rhododendron hybrids for this country Catawbiense, although more difficult to work, should be used for stock. Even better than any grafted plants are those obtained from layers, a slower and more expensive process, formerly much practiced in the Kanphill Nurseries by Anthony Waterer, who raise the best Catawbiense hybrids which have been planted in New England. A few of the hardiest and handsomest of these plants which can be grown in this climate are Atrosanguineum, Charles Dickens, Mrs. C. S. Sargent, Henrietta Sargent, Catawbiense album, Album elegans, Roseum elegans, Hannibal, H. W. Sargent, Discolor, Melton, Album grandiflorum, Purpureum grandiflorum, Purpureum elegans and Lady Armstrong.

The hardiest rhododendrons in this climate are Maximum and Catawbiense; the former, which in the valleys of the southern mountains is sometimes a bushy tree up to 40 feet in height, but at the north is much smaller, is distributed in isolated stations from Nova Scotia through New England and eastern New York to Pennsylvania; from Pennsylvania southward along the Appalachian mountains it is very abundant at low altitudes, often covering the slopes or narrow valleys with almost impenetrable thickets. The flowers are white or pale rose color, and are produced in rather compact clusters which, as the flowers do not open until late in June or early in July, are a good deal hidden by the branches of the year which rise well above them. The long, comparatively narrow leaves, up to a foot in length, make this rhododendron valuable in a climate in which few broad-leaved evergreen plants can be successfully grown. Catawbiense is a round-topped, rather compact shrub with broad, dark green and lustrous leaves. It is very hardy but grows slower than many of its hybrids, and is handsomest before the flowers open or after they have faded, for they are of a disagreeable rose-purple color, which has spoiled the flowers of many of its hybrids or of their varieties like the hardy and popular Everestianum. The flowers of R. carolinianum, one of the first species to flower here, are fast fading. This little shrub of the southern Appalachian mountains, although distinguished only a few years ago, is becoming popular in northern gardens, where it grows well under the shade of trees and in full exposure to the sun. It is a plant rarely three feet high, with small, dark green and compact clusters of pink flowers. There is a form with white flowers. The other Appalachian species, R. minus, blooms after the Catawbiense hybrids. This shrub has been in cultivation for more than 100 years, usually under the name of Punctatum. Although a larger plant than Carolinianum, with slightly larger pink flowers, it is not as good a garden plant for the flowers, like those of R. maximum, are hidden by the shoots of the year which rise above them. R. coriaceum, which came to the arboretum 30 years ago from the Kanphill Nursery in England, resembles R. caucasicum of the mountain slopes of the Caucasus. The shape of the leaves, the covering of brown felt on their lower surface, and the white flowers on long pedicels in few-flowered clusters do not greatly differ from those of the wild plant in shape and size. In the arboretum Coriaceum is now between three and four feet high and broad with erect stems; it flowers abundantly every year and the leaves and flower-buds are not injured by the cold of eastern Massachusetts. It flowers, however, nearly two weeks later than the plants which are usually considered hybrids of Caucasicum, although nothing very definite appears to be known of their origin.

The best of these plants which have been grown in the arboretum is called Boule de Neige and is believed to have been raised in France. It is a low, broad, round-topped bush which is perfectly hardy and every spring is covered with flowers which are as white as it is possible for flowers to be. This is the earliest evergreen rhododendron to flower in the arboretum, with the exception of the plant called Christmas Cheer, which is said to be a hybrid of R. caucasicum and the Indian R. arboreum, and every year loses its flowers by spring frosts. Boule de Neige is considered the handsomest and most satisfactory of the early flowering rhododendrons which can be grown in this climate. Almost as good is the plant called Mont Blanc, with flowers which are pale rose color when the buds first appear but soon become pure white. The handsome red-flowered Jacksoni too often loses the flower-buds in severe winters. The Caucasian R. Smirnowii is, as usual, in good condition this spring and none of the rhododendrons which can be grown here have more beautiful pink flowers. The thick coat of pale yellow felt which covers the lower surface of the leaves protects them from the attacks of the lace-wing fly, which has in recent years done so much damage in this country and Europe to the leaves of rhododendrons and kalmias. A few hybrids of R. Smirnowii crossed with hybrid Catawbiensis varieties have been raised and among them are plants of considerable promise, although none of them retain the covering of felt on the lower surface of the leaves of their Caucasian parent. Still rare in American gardens, Smirnowii deserves the attention of planters of rhododendrons. It will probably prove valuable in breeding a race of rhododendrons suited to the climate of the northeastern United States. — Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, June 2, 1922.

THE S. A. F.

Kansas City Convention, August 15-17.

The success of the trade exhibition is now practically assured. All the available space in the oval is taken up, and reservations of space in the two arcades are being made at this time in number sufficient to indicate that the whole of the exhibition space in the big building will be taken up long in advance of the convention. In spite of the many announcements made through the trade press and in other ways, prospective exhibitors are still making applications for space in the oval. It may be said now every foot of space in the oval is taken up. Plenty of opportunity was given from the time of the distribution of the plans for early reservations in this section of the exhibition, and locations were booked as the applications came in, each as nearly as possible to choice. If this oval had been three times as large, there would have been no difficulty in disposing of all the space; in fact, some of the groupings as originally planned have been departed from, in order to maintain the policy always adopted in regard to sale of space in the trade exhibition—first come, first served. There can, under the circumstances, be no reflection on the value of the spaces in the arcades, which are not at any disadvantage in comparison with the oval spaces. It will be a well arranged exhibition, and every exhibit will attract equal attention. Prospective exhibitors are urged to make their applications for space without delay, so that, at least in the matter of choice, there may be still a little advantage, if it can be so considered. The exhibition will be a record breaker, both in scope and attendance.

The following exhibitors are in addition to the list previously reported:

Pinehurst Floral Co., Pleasant Hill, Mo.
Nebel Mfg. Co., Cleveland, O.
Robt. Craig Co., Norwood, Del. Co., Pa.
Orchard Paper Co., St. Louis, Mo.
Jos. Heacock Co., Wyncote, Pa.
Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago.
George Wittbold Co., Chicago.
Jos. G. Neidinger, Co., Philadelphia.

Convention Programme.

President S. S. Pennock and the secretary are now giving their attention to the preparation of the programme for the big gathering. Prominent in the programme will, of course, be a place for discussion of the national publicity campaign, and arrangements are being made for prominent speakers. The report of the National Flower Show committee and a discussion of it will also be featured. A meeting of the state vice-presidents will find a place, as also will a meeting of the Florists' Hail Association. Other features of special importance are also planned. President Pennock is particularly anxious to include discussions of many problems in these days of interest to florists and worthy of the attention of the society. He invites suggestions from members as to topics believed important enough to be brought before the convention, and assures those sending these suggestions that they will have most careful consideration. Such suggestions should be presented as early as possible to the secretary.

Information as to hotel accommodations and other matters tending to the comfort and convenience of visitors will shortly be forthcoming through the local committees.

National Publicity Campaign.

From the secretary's office this week is being mailed to all members of the society and subscribers to the campaign, proofs of the series of advertisements to appear in the national magazines during June, July and August. These advertisements are in column form, and will appear in the Red Book for July; McLean's Magazine (Canada), June 15 and August 15; Life, June 15, July 20, and August 17; Collier's, June 3 and August 5; Outlook, July 19 and August 16; Vanity Fair, July; Atlantic Monthly, July; World's Work, July; American Magazine, July; Literary Digest, June 10 and August 12; Century, August; Scribner's, July; House Beautiful, June; Sunset, July; Independent, June 10; Harper's Magazine, August, and Review of Reviews, August. It might be well for those interested to procure copies of these magazine numbers, so as to see how well the advertisements appear and are placed.

Since the publication of the three previous advertisements our wonderful slogan, "Say It With Flowers," has been appreciably referred to, cartooned, and exploited in a great number of publications and in other ways, showing that our campaign loses through a temporary cessation of our publicity work. During the period when scarcity of funds, mainly through neglect on the part of many of our subscribers to make good their pledges, made advertising expenditures impossible, our slogan seemed to vanish from sight, and all outside reference to it lost. A resumption of our publicity has again brought it to the front, and we are enjoying a tremendous amount of prestige, which costs the campaign nothing at all. Could better argument be advanced as to the work of our campaign to our industry?

If our delinquent subscribers would make good their pledges, much more publicity could be provided, and it is sorely needed. Bills are now going out to all in arrears on their pledges, and immediate remittances are urged, so that the publicity committee may be able to place advertising contracts for the fall season. As it is expected that there will be great pressure upon magazine advertising forms in the fall, contracts ought to be placed two or three months ahead, so that the best class magazines may be open for our use. A magazine cannot add to its pages after an edition is planned, and several large publications are already in press with numbers two months ahead of datings.

Columbus Rose Show.

The annual Columbus rose show, held in the Archaeological museum of the Ohio State university, under the auspices of the Columbus Horticultural Society, June 3-4, was largely attended. The spacious hall, both the lower floor and upstairs, was filled with displays of roses and garden flowers and the varieties were unusually numerous. According to the officials of the society, the exhibition was one of the most successful ever held in Columbus and presages better shows in the future because of the widespread interest of the amateur growers.

The fine quality of roses was particularly noteworthy this year, as compared with 1921, when blooms were not up to the standard of previous years because of freezing weather. Three of the 27 classes contained especially attractive displays. The first prize, for the best exhibit of roses, was awarded to Ralph E. Cook, 786 North Park street, Columbus, Dr. Harry Seamans, of Grandview, O., dean of the college of dentistry at the university, winning second prize.

The most attractive collection in the exhibit which was not entirely a rose display was that of Mrs. O. L. Kidwell, 277 Twelfth avenue, Columbus, who won first prize with an exceptionally good display of garden flowers, consisting of about 75 different kinds. Mrs. Chas. Butterworth, of Grandview, won second prize in the same group. The W. M. Ritter gardens featured a display which was particularly beautiful and attractive, but received no reward, as the gardener was a professional. The basket displays of roses also attracted attention, Mrs. A. Juengert receiving first prize; George W. Shirk, second, and Mrs. C. R. Weinland, third. The awards for the best arranged baskets of garden flowers were given to Mrs. R. M. Spencer, Mrs. H. W. Pearson and Mrs. George W. Woodward, respectively, first, second and third.

Other winners were:

Specimen white rose—Mrs. J. P. McGuirk, 1st; Mrs. C. F. Hottes, 2d; specimen red rose—George W. Shirk, 1st; Prof. T. S. Lowden, 2d; F. O. Everts, honorable mention; specimen light pink rose—Prof. Wendell Paddock, 1st; Mrs. D. A. Thomas, 2d; O. G. Campbell, honorable mention; specimen dark pink rose—Prof. T. S. Lowden, 1st; Mrs. W. A. Alsdorf, 2d; Mrs. John J. Toole, honorable mention; specimen yellow or salmon rose—Mrs. R. M. Spencer, 1st; Prof. Paddock, 2d; peonies—S. E. Waters, 1st; Mrs. Charles Butterworth, 2d; Mrs. M. Doherty, honorable mention; wild flowers—June Thornberg, 1st.

American Iris Society.

Supplementing Our Account of the New York Show and Meeting in Last Week's Issue, Page 984, We Present Herewith Secretary Sturtevant's Report in Full:

The cordial welcome extended to iris enthusiasts at the time of our organization by Dr. Britton and the staff of the New York Botanical Garden, was again enjoyed by those who have done so much to make the society a success. As President Wister was attending the International Iris Conferences in Paris and London, Vice-president William A. Peterson of Chicago, presided. He is of rather a commanding presence and his comments did much to enliven the routine reports of the officers. The treasurer reported an unexpended balance of $1,379.78. The secretary spoke briefly of co-operation at the international conference, of the publication of the check list and symposium and the plans for including descriptions of varieties in the next bulletin which through the special contributions of many members can be published this summer. That special contributions to the total of some $700 have been made within the last 12 months seemed a strong proof of the interest of the members. Except that W. E. Saunders, president of the London, Ont. Horticultural Society was elected a regional vice-president, there was no change in the list of officers for 1921. There were brief reports of the exhibitions at Richmond, Va.; Nashville Tenn.; Louisville, Ky., and Kansas City, Mo.; a discussion of means of publicity and of distribution of expenditure, and with a hearty vote of thanks to the Horticultural Society of New York and particularly to the New York Botanical Garden and its staff, the meeting was adjourned to the near-by test garden.

Owing to the unusual season and the fact that the exhibition was held a week in advance of the schedule, only some 60 members were present but it seemed as if every member was armed with a note book and an armful of questions. There are some 1,000 varieties in the garden and of these at least three-fourths were in splendid bloom while in the exhibition hall were most of the finest of the novelties. These, of course, were of the greatest interest, but before mentioning them individually I wish to speak of certain special exhibits. John Lewis Childs, Inc., Flowerfield, N. Y., carried off the silver medal sweepstake for commercial growers, although the non-competitive showing of John Scheepers was a close second.

The Garden Club of New Rochelle, N. Y., and a number of its members staged both quantity and quality exhibits that were awarded the silver cup presented by Mrs. Robert Hill, of the Garden Club of America, and many prizes, while the most surprising award was that of the amateur sweepstake to T. F. Donahue, of Boston, Mass. That an exhibitor at his first attempt can carry iris flowers 250 miles and show them in perfect shape seems to belie our general feeling that irises cannot be transported. Particularly is this true when we consider that Mr. Farr won first in the 50 variety class and that Mr. Shull, Washington, D. C., and Miss Sturtevant, Boston, Mass., both received awards on new seedlings. Apparently the handling of iris flowers depends, not on their fragile texture, but on the care of the exhibitor. In this exhibition, at least, exhibits from a distance showed greater perfection of bloom than those made by local members. Mrs. Frances Cleveland of Eatontown, N. J., who has recently entered the commercial field with a number of seedlings showed a delightful vase of her seedling Siberian iris, Mariposa, which is of an unusual blue tone.

In speaking of novelties I think immediately of Cedar Hill Nursery exhibit which included the $40 Dominion, probably the finest English production to date; Ambassadeur, Vilmorin's latest creation, and a large number of other novelties. Lent A. Williamson, which received a vote of 96, the highest accorded in the recent symposium, was to be seen in many exhibits but in surprisingly poor condition. Yeld's Lord of June and Miss Sturtevant's Queen Caterina and Shekinah showed their high standing to better advantage. The superiority of the modern introductions in practically every quality was much commented upon, particularly as the members inspected the trial grounds. I made particular note of Pink Pearl (Cleveland), Whim (McKinney), and Nimbus (Shull). This last is a very rich dulled lavender bi-color which, if it had been shown in prime condition, would have undoubtedly received honorable mention. Mr. Shull's Morning Splendour, a very deep red-toned bi-color of Alcazar type, received this award, as did Mr. Presby's Harriet Presby, a tall strong pink lavender. Miss Sturtevant received prizes on three seedlings; Jennett Dean, a very pale-toned flower rather of the type of Mother of Pearl which was introduced by A. E. Kunder last year, and on two yellow selfs, of Pallida form and growth, the one pale with bronze veining at the throat, the other very clear and deep in color.

Albert C. Burrage.
President Massachusetts Horticultural Society.

All in all the day was one to be remembered; it was easily the finest opportunity ever offered for a comparative study of kinds and will not be surpassed until the test garden is more thoroughly established. Although there are now many fine collections in the country we must look to the test gardens at New York and Cornell university for our real records of the value of an iris.

President Albert C. Burrage of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society has been awarded that organization's White Medal of Honor in recognition of his conspicuous services to horticulture by the establishment in Beverly, Mass., of the greatest collection of exotic orchids the New World has yet seen; by his skillful and energetic management of the affairs of the society; and by his labors to increase the love, protection and cultivation of New England wild flowers and ferns through his remarkable exhibition in Boston of these plants in the spring of 1921 and of 1922, given only to those men and women who in recent years have done the most for horticulture.

Railroad Gardens.

It has been discovered that people travel not only from necessity, but for pleasure. Our great railway operators have employed gifted architects to build stations and talented artists to adorn them. Landscape gardeners beautify the station yards. Embankments are softened with grass and shrubs. Foremen of the permanent way are given prizes, not only for efficiency and safety, but for neatness and attractiveness.

In George Kennan's biography of E. H. Harriman is an interesting passage that indicates the value that great transportation builder placed upon beauty.

"On one of his trips," says Supt. Park, "he noticed the lack of vegetation around Rock Springs, Wyo., which, population considered, was the best revenue-producing station of the Union Pacific railroad. 'Why don't you put in a park here?' he asked. 'The station is of attractive design and some grass and a little shrubbery would freshen things up wonderfully.'

"A resident of Rock Springs said: 'Mr. Harriman, there is not a sprig of grass in Rock Springs; the percentage of alkali in the soil is an absolute bar.'

"Mr. Harriman looked at me and said: 'Nothing is impossible.'

"Taking that for my cue, I hauled from Utah hundreds of cars of the best soil, planted shrubbery and trees, and today one of the most attractive spots on Union Pacific railroad is the garden surrounding Rock Springs station. This was also a cue for further work of this character all along the line. Mr. Harriman was willing to spend to make the road look attractive. The result was the beautiful park at Cheyenne and the improvement of the landscape at all terminals, which, in a few years, transformed the Union Pacific from a road through a desert to one along which bright green grass, trees and flowers were in evidence at every station of importance."

ANNUAL CONVENTION, JULY 13-14.

The second annual convention of the Oklahoma State Florists' Association will be held at Convention hall, Tulsa, July 13-14, and indications are that it will be a great success. The trade displays will be housed in the same building which is within walking distance of the center of the city, and promise to be most elaborate. Numerous reservations are being sent to Lon Foster, of the Foster Floral Co., First and Robinson streets, Oklahoma City, secretary. The exhibitors find they make many new friends and create additional customers through coming together at these trade conventions.

The programme for the meeting has not yet been completed but will include addresses by speakers of national reputation on subjects of interest to the trade. All branches of the profession will be considered. Part of the "pow wow" entertainments planned include a barbecue at Sand Springs park, seven miles from Tulsa, easily reached by a paved road and electric cars. The park has a zoological exhibit, numerous amusement attractions and a fine swimming pool.

The association extends a hearty invitation to all florists to attend the convention and Tulsa anticipates with pleasure her being the host to the visitors. Hotel reservations may be secured by addressing O. O. Boston, 19 East Third street, Tulsa, vice president of the association.

PRESIDENT GRAY WRITES

On July 13 and 14, in that wonder city of northeast Oklahoma, Tulsa, the Oklahoma State Florists' Association will hold its annual convention. The trade generally expects at this time to purchase goods for the fall season. Therefore, we invite the wholesale trade to be on hand with their choicest offerings. We also cordially invite florists of neighboring states to meet with us and help discuss the many problems of the florists' profession. It will be a great meeting. Come and enjoy it.

San Francisco.

A FAIR HOLIDAY DEMAND.

Memorial Day business was about on a par with previous ones. Of late years the florists, especially the downtown shops, do not enjoy the heavy trade of years gone by. The stores on the outskirts of the city, however, state that business was entirely satisfactory. There was a great abundance of all stock, outdoor flowers being in huge supply. Carnations, with the exception of Laddie, were more than enough to go around. Roses, too, were superabundant, both the outdoor and greenhouse product deluging the market. Sweet peas of unusually fine quality were plentiful and sold well. There was little, if any, advance in the price of indoor stock for the occasion. The Bride gladioli and peach blossoms were in fine demand, both by the local trade and shippers, at reasonable prices.

RETAIL FLORISTS' ASS'N PICNIC, JUNE 25.

The first picnic of the Retail Florists' Association will take place at Fairfax park, in Marin county, June 25. This affair promises to be the most largely attended outdoor gathering of the local trade in many years. John Kilroy, of the Castro Floral Co., is in charge of arrangements, his assistants being Frank Thatcher, P. V. Matraia, Albert O. Stein and P. Benedetti. The association extends a cordial welcome to all out of town florists to attend the picnic and they will be assured a splendid time.

The last meeting of the Retail Florists' Association was held at the Art Floral Co.'s store, recently. Owing to the illness of President Albert O. Stein, H. S. Hoard, representing the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, was made chairman for the evening. He gave a most instructive talk on the policies of the association and urged every florist to become a member. The annual banquet was postponed until after the picnic, June 25. Following adjournment the members partook of a splendid repast, P. V. Matraia being the host.

NOTES.

Few events of recent years have caused such genuine sadness in trade circles as the passing away of Fred H. Hunter, of the Hunter Seed Co., an account of whose death appeared in our issue of May 20, page 889. Fred, as he was affectionately called by all his friends, was one of the most brilliant minds in western seed circles. He was one of the most genial of men and fewer persons had a more likeable character. To his widow and family is extended our most heartfelt sympathy in the loss of a loving husband and father.

H. S. Hoard, Chicago, representing the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, has departed after a very successful visit in the interests of the association. Many new retailers have joined and he reported heavy membership gains for the association in Oakland and Fresno.

Gladioli growers across the bay are beginning to cut, and from now on we may expect a steady supply of this fine summer flower. Jos. Priocetti is already shipping some fancy stock from his gardens at Haywards.

The Roger Reynolds Nursery has purchased about 20 acres near Menlo park from the Felton estate and is preparing to plant out a quantity of stock, ornamental and flowering shrubs to be the specialty.

The rose tournament at San Jose last week was a very elaborate affair, the floral floats being very beautiful. The Chas. C. Navlet Co. and other firms of that city were represented in the parade.

Many of the finest Ulrich Brunner roses now arriving are being sent in by P. Conci, Colma. He has many acres planted to this outdoor rose and no better stock could be wished for.

Mark Daniels, formerly superintendent of national parks and a prominent landscape engineer here, was married at Carmel-by-the-Sea to an eastern society lady, recently.

Michael Thomas, of the Thomas Floral Co., is expected to arrive home from his European trip this month. The last word heard was that he was in Egypt.

The Mothers' Day co-operative advertising instituted by the Retail Florists' Association is said to have produced excellent results.

Miss E. Riley, who recently purchased the Bertrand Flower Shop in the Palace hotel, is enjoying a splendid trade.

EXCELLENT MEMORIAL DAY BUSINESS.

This city experienced one of the best Memorial Day businesses in its history. The weather preceding the holiday was ideal and brought on an avalanche of stock, nearly every item being represented, including some outdoor cut flowers, the quality being generally good. The shipping trade could have used more carnations. While individual values were not as high as a year ago, it is thought that the increased call will bring the total cash receipts on a level with the previous event.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING, JUNE 1.

The monthly meeting of the Florists' Club was held June 1, with a fair attendance. Erich Haverkorn, proprietor of the North Side Floral Co., 997 Third street, was elected to membership. An invitation to participate in a bowling tournament, preliminary to the Society of American Florists' convention, was received from the Chicago Florists' Club, to take place at the Chateau Bowling alleys, that city, June 8, and it is believed a number of local enthusiasts will attend. Upon invitation of our worthy president the July 6 meeting will be held at Hugo Locker & Sons' establishment, Wauwatosa, and a splendid time is promised by the entertainment committee. The meeting adjourned.

NOTES.

We announce the belated news of the marriage of R. C. Schwebke to Miss E. Hoffmann, which took place about five weeks ago. Mr. Schwebke, who is with the Wauwatosa Floral Co., and wife have our best wishes for a successful future.

Wm. A. Kennedy, of the C. C. Polworth Co., who is a regular attendant at all florists' affairs, whether locally or out of town, was taken suddenly ill, May 30, and, upon advice of his doctor, will have to remain quiet for some time.

Considerable interest is being manifested in the coming summer meeting of the Wisconsin State Florists' Association, to be held at Oshkosh, July 25. The more the merrier.

VOLUME OF TRADE SATISFACTORY.

Florists report the best Memorial Day business in years. Trade, while running largely to peonies and garden flowers, extended to roses and carnations and, in fact, everything that was in the market. Generally speaking, the volume was satisfactory and prices, while not showing much increase from the usual levels, were good and a fair profit resulted. One of the reasons for the extra good business was the fact that the heavy rains just prior to the date caused peonies to come out earlier than usual and many thousands were spoiled for decorative purposes. Peonies sold in the neighborhood of $1.50 to $2 per dozen and the quality generally was good. The pink and red flowers predominated. Roses consisted largely of Premier, Columbia and Sunburst and retailed at $3 to $8 per dozen. Carnations were plentiful, as a rule, and brought $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Some sweet peas were on the market and they found a ready sale as a rule. The call for magnolia and other wreaths was highly satisfactory. Cornflowers were also in the market and went rapidly. A few lilies were offered, but they are about over for the season. Funeral work has been fairly good and some weddings are scheduled for the month.

NOTES.

Walter Stephens, of S. F. Stephens & Son, has been scouring the country for stock to take care of the rapidly increasing business. He visited both Springfield and Dayton last week, buying peonies for the holiday. This concern reports the best Memorial Day business which it has ever experienced and thousands of peonies were disposed of. The flowers were of good quality as a rule and found a ready sale. Walter Stephens has been busy looking after the affairs of the Ohio District National Flower Growers' Association of which he is president, and arrangements are being made to have another meeting of the board of directors to discuss certain current business.

Underwood Bros., florists on Fair avenue, are having an extra good demand for pot plants and ferns. This company always specializes in ferns and growing flowers and residents of that section of the city are calling in large numbers for these plants. Some improvements at the range are contemplated at an early date.

A strong demand for Memorial Day, consisting of roses, carnations and peonies, is reported by E. Metzmaier, at 1382 South Fourth street. William Metzmaier, the son of the proprietor, believes it was the best Memorial Day business that was ever experienced by them.

The Vanity Flower Shop, 701 North High street, reports a good demand for funeral designs. The store is located close to the university section and with the closing of the school year and the annual commencement exercises always shares in the floral business.

A fine call for all flowers during Memorial Day, especially peonies, carnations and roses, was enjoyed by T. J. Ludwig. Prices were not boosted to any extent and supplies were generally adequate. The business as a whole was very satisfactory.

The Gay Street Floral Shop deserves special mention for its window display, Memorial Day. Wreaths of magnolia and laurel and cypresses were the features, cut roses, carnations, sweet peas and peonies being also used.

The Bexley Floral Co. reports an extra good trade, especially in peonies, roses and carnations. Plants and garden flowers moved well. J. W. L.

Albany, N. Y.

MEMORIAL DAY BUSINESS SATISFACTORY.

The members of the trade express satisfaction over the volume of Memorial Day business. There was a large demand for geraniums. In cut flowers peonies, sweet peas, lilies and carnations sold in about the order named. There were no peonies available from local gardens, but a good supply was secured from Long Island and places down the Hudson river, where the season is a little more advanced. For the decoration of graves, artificial wax wreaths were in great demand and large numbers were sold. Trade was as good and perhaps somewhat better than a year ago.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING, JUNE 3.

Two new members were elected at the June 3 meeting of the Florists' Club: Henry McAllister, of this city, and Kenneth Snyder, North Germantown. The club voted to send flowers hereafter to sick members instead of baskets of fruit, as has been the custom for some years. The invitation of Frederick Goldring to hold the July 1 meeting at his establishment in Font Grove was accepted. Beginning with October, the club will hold its monthly meetings in the Central Y. M. C. A. building, the management having kindly allotted a room for the purpose. For several years the club met at 611-613 Broadway, the home of the Albany Cut Flower Exchange, Inc., which moved to new quarters at 664 Broadway, May 1, and the club had to seek a new meeting place. R. D.

Wichita, Kans.

TRADE FOR HOLIDAY SATISFACTORY.

Memorial Day business was about the usual volume. The usual brisk trade in cemetery orders and plants suitable for growing in cemeteries resulted in practically a clean-up of desirable stock in bloom. In cut flowers, peonies, carnations, roses, lilies and jasmines were all in demand, with ample supply in the stores. Considerable quantities of the cheaper outdoor flowers were sold. The flower shops made large displays of wreaths in the prepared goods, and more were sold than ever before. Weather conditions were ideal. This, coupled with an unusually favorable growing season, permits the florists to feel fairly well satisfied with the holiday trade.

NOTES.

Walter Fallstrom, of Dixon, Ill., who has been in the store of W. H. Culp & Co. during the past winter, left Friday morning for Kansas City, Mo., where he will be married and will take his honeymoon at the same place.

The Riverside Greenhouses will be under the management of Otto Kuechenmeister after July 1. L. A. Johnson leaving the firm on that date. Walter Davidson will take care of the greenhouses after that time.

C. A. Rose had the exasperating experience of being deprived of telephone service from Monday morning until Wednesday, over Memorial Day, due to repair work on the cable.

P. G. Brackenbury, for several years with Chas. P. Mueller, at store No. 1, has resigned.

W. F. Freegard has resigned his position with the Barclay Flower Shop. C.

Boston.

STOCK SCARCELY MOVES.

Immediately following the holiday the market slumped badly, there being no such thing as a market price. Stock is arriving in large quantities and a small portion is sold for any figure and the balance carries over from day to day and then is disposed of to the street boys, this being the only outlet for flowers on this kind of a market. The only feature is the call for lily of the valley, white roses and orchids, which bring a good price and will likely continue to do so for the balance of this month. Carnations and roses are in a very bad way, without much outlook for any immediate betterment of this condition. Some good larkspur has arrived the past week and sold from $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Marguerites, sweet peas, pansies and other small stock are also feeling the reaction of the holiday.

RHODODENDRON, AZALEA, IRIS SHOW.

The rhododendron, azalea and iris show staged by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, in Horticultural hall, June 3-4, brought out many fine displays. For a decorative exhibit of rhododendrons, covering 72 square feet, T. C. Thurlow's Sons was awarded first prize, also a first for a general display of azaleas in 24 square feet. The most comprehensive exhibit of irises, made by Irithorpe, received the American Iris Society's bronze medal.

S. Goddard and son-in-law have gone to Maine for a two weeks' fishing trip.

HOLIDAY TRADE EQUALS PREVIOUS YEAR.

Warm weather the week preceding Memorial Day furnished the growers with a large supply of cut flowers for the occasion. Carnations were exceptionally large, but no trouble was had in disposing of them. Prices ranged from $8 to $12 per 100, Laddie bringing $15. Sweet peas were not plentiful. Orders for these were booked at $1 to $2 per 100 while they lasted. Roses were in heavy supply and went at $8 to $18 per 100. There was only a few Calla lilies. On account of the late season lilacs and irises were practically the only outdoor flowers obtainable, the former selling at 50 cents per bunch, and irises, $4 per 100. Columbine and marguerites sold at $25.00 per 100. Gladioli were popular. Plant growers experienced no difficulty in disposing of all the salable pot stock. There was quite a call for pot rose plants, but none were obtainable. Wholesale houses experienced a much better Memorial Day trade than the retail shops, the public demanding cheap flowers. The flower shops bought as heavily as possible of outdoor flowers, but the supply, except irises and lilacs, was very limited. A canvass of the retail stores showed sales on an average in excess of Memorial Day one year ago, but not as good as in 1920. Prices were about 20 per cent lower than last year. Roses retailed at $3.50 to $7 per dozen. There was very little call for the long varieties. Carnations sold quite well at $2.50 a dozen. Laddie bringing $3.50. Sweet peas sold rapidly, the supply being exhausted early on May 29. Tulips were held at $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen, but these did not move very rapidly. Pansies sold well at 75 cents per bunch. J. W. V.

OBITUARY.

William H. Hilton.

William H. Hilton died at his home in Chicago at 5319 Blackstone avenue, June 6. He was formerly in the retail business on the south side, but sold out several years ago, since when he has been in Florida, returning only recently. He was about 60 years old and was a familiar figure in the wholesale market. The funeral was held from his late residence at 2 p. m., June 8, with interment at Forest Home cemetery. He is survived by his wife and daughter, Edith, who have the sympathy of the trade in their great loss. A. L. Randall, A. L. Vaughan, Verne Schurlaff, T. E. Waters, Harry Rowe and Clarence Ellsworth acted as pallbearers. The trade was well represented in the floral offerings.

The Late Patrick Welch.

By the death of Patrick Welch, we have indeed lost a very able man of our noble profession—a great leader and a dear friend. To know him was to love him, and to be befriended by him was a distinction and an honor. The best way we can honor him and cherish his memory is to study his many noble traits and follow their teaching. How can we help but always remember his kindly face, his fascinating smile, his hearty laugh and his inspiring words of encouragement, blended by his humor, ever-ready wit and sincerity. Brother Welch was a real man and an inspiration to us all. Let us not only not forget him, but let us follow his leading spirit and enact his teaching of good fellowship and good will amongst men. THEODORE WIRTH.

John Peter Sinner.

John Peter Sinner, better known to the trade as "Champ," died at his home at 6516 Ridge boulevard, Chicago, June 6, at the age of 49 years. He was in the florist business with his brother for many years, when they conducted a wholesale house in the Chicago market under the firm name of Sinner Bros. He had charge of the greenhouses, but was well acquainted and made friends quickly with everyone he met. He was the son of Mrs. Marguerite Sinner and the late Theodore Sinner and a brother of John, Catherine and Mrs. A. Wester. The funeral was held from St. Henry's church, June 8, at 10 o'clock, with interment at St. Henry's cemetery. The family has the sympathy of the trade in the loss of a loving son and brother.

REPLYING to correspondent, chain flower stores are already in existence, and we know of no reason why such shops, with uniform fixtures, decorations and operating service, should not work out successfully.

Coal Price Conference.

RESUME BY DEPT. OF COMMERCE, WASHINGTON

Secretary Hoover announced last week: "I believe that the whole of the coal districts in Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and eastern Kentucky will accept the fair maximum of $3.50 per ton for run of mine spot coal. The Alabama field accepts the lower scale, as previously announced.

"The operators in the west Kentucky fields do not feel that they can agree to a lower price than $4.25. I have not felt that I could recommend this price to the consuming public and the matter is, therefore, under further consideration. They feel that their costs have increased materially beyond the increases in other fields. On the other hand, my present feeling is that they should in the general interest adhere to the maximum accepted by the majority of the operators in other fields.

"A discussion of the Pennsylvania fields will be taken up later in the week. We have not yet dealt with problems west of the Mississippi river. It should be understood that the whole object of the administration's interest in coal prices is to protect the consumer by indicating the maximum price that would be fair for spot coal during the temporary period of the strike, and by doing so to protect that group of operators who do not wish to take advantage of the present situation.

"Out of the 5,000,000 tons of weekly production of bituminous coal probably 3,500,000 tons are under long term contracts to consumers at prices stipulated in the contracts, and there can be no alteration of these contract prices, which, as a rule, run considerably below prices for spot coal, as they represent a steady business to the mines. The suggestion of a maximum fair price relates solely to spot coal. Many coal dealers enjoy long time contracts at lower rates, and it would be only fair to the public that, in the resale of this contract coal, these dealers should give the customer the full benefit of their lower prices; and I feel sure from my discussions with them that the majority will do so.

"In order to prevent the resale of coal for speculative purposes, it is most desirable in the interest of the consumer, operator and wholesaler that the operators and dealers should insist upon knowing that purchases are on behalf of a definite consumer. The maximum price for spot coal is not the minimum price. It is only a general figure that will protect the public from such occasions as the last pinch, when spot coal in many places went to over $10 per ton. In arriving at the figure, the Garfield scales were taken as a basis, as these scales were the result of close investigations during the war, and allowances have been made for increased costs and a general average of the situation taken that would protect the public and maintain production. The maximum price includes customary selling commissions which were established separately in the Garfield scale, and the operators are recommended to use the usual wholesale agencies, thus promoting direct movement to the consumer.

"In these circumstances some minor proportion of the mines will make considerable profits; some minor proportion of them will under these circumstances earn nothing; and in some cases of low cost producing mines, the operators have already notified their consumers that they will continue to supply them at lower rates than the maximum. What we are endeavoring to prevent is a panic in prices, such as took place at the last coal pinch.

"Every consumer who is interested in knowing that he gets a square deal can easily check the freight rates, can compare them with the maximum price, can inquire from his dealer whether he is buying contract coal, and at what rate, and can make proper allowance for retail distribution. If consumers are unwilling to take this degree of interest in negotiating for coal it is a certainty that no one can help them. I believe the vast majority of operators, wholesalers, and retail dealers sincerely wish that this difficult occasion shall pass by without any rightful criticism of their conduct anywhere along the line. I regret that a small minority have refused to co-operate and are demanding higher prices. The government has no authority in the matter for this is purely a moral question and one of co-operation. The consumers who are not treated fairly may appeal to this department in Washington, D. C., and their case will be inquired into."

When you buy imported bulbs from us, you buy them by measure, in centimeters or inches and so accepted by us. This means much, as against those people who sell "firsts," "seconds" or "thirds" and give you no assurance as to what such grades measure.

Business has been fair and while there is much room for improvement no one is complaining and the demand appears to be increasing.

THE LANDIS AWARD.

Chicago's Landis Award building boom smashed all records in the history of the city during the month of May and brought the two most important points in the programme of the citizen's committee to enforce the Landis award a long step nearer to accomplishment. The points are—the creation of a graft and strike free building boom, which will end the housing shortage, and a reduction in rents big enough to bring contentment to the wage earner. HEAVY VOLUME OF BUSINESS.

The volume of business for the holiday was slightly greater than in 1921 but with a decline in total cash receipts due to the severe competition of outdoor stock such as peonies, rambler roses, bush roses, etc. Roses brought $1.50 per dozen and up, carnations, $1 to $1.50 per dozen. Cape Jasmine ranged from 35 cents to $1.50 per dozen, gladioli selling at $3 to $5 per dozen. In pot stock, roses, hydrangeas, geraniums, coleus, ferns, etc., met with good sales. Hanging baskets, wreaths and sprays made up of fresh flowers and prepared foliage as well as wax flowers, moved better than was the case last year. A considerable quantity of bedding stock was disposed of for planting on graves. The wholesale houses report a heavy business and were well cleaned up although many peonies were thrown away.

FLORAL PARADE.

The trade will have its hands full here next week, when a large floral parade, celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of the city's park and boulevard system will be featured, June 17. Nearly every business house in the city will enter a float and numerous banquets and entertainments are scheduled for the week.

NOTES.

W. J. Barnes was more than pleased with the holiday trade, selling quantities of cut flowers, madeup plant baskets, willow hanging baskets filled with bedding stock, etc. He also featured sprays of cypress, ruscus and wax roses which went exceptionally well. Wreaths of the same material proved popular.

The W. L. Rock Flower Co. featured fine magnolia wreaths in its window and sold quantities. Pot plants, madeup baskets and cut flowers moved well, and the firm was well pleased with the holiday business.

A. F. F. Barbee was highly gratified with the Memorial Day business, reporting that it exceeded yast year's. The flower venders, who lined the front gate of the cemetery, made no impression on his business.

E. A. Humfeld said: "This is one time my farm came in very handily. I cut a world of flowers and knew just how old or fresh each one was." He was more than satisfied with the trade.

Surprised at the way trade came in, Edw. Ellsworth, who recently took charge of the Rosery, was glad to meet old customers, who were pleased to see that he had returned.

"We certainly had to move some to keep up with the demand," stated Fred Weber, of the Linwood Floral Co. Bedding plants were very popular.

Madeup wreaths of magnolia were popular at Samuel Murray's as was California statice. Cut flowers moved slowly.

"We sold a quantity of wreaths and are generally satisfied with the business," stated Arthur Newell.

The Alpha Floral Co. did well in decorations, both the local and out of town demand being very heavy.

Miss J. E. Murray was pleased with the business.

A heavy trade was had by Aug. Luther.

GOOD MEMORIAL DAY DEMAND.

The demand for Memorial Day was the heaviest in many years, with sufficient stock for all purposes. Funeral work has continued fairly brisk and the era of weddings is at hand and this will add greatly to the volume of business. There were plenty of peonies for Memorial Day trade. The warm weather and extra heavy rains brought them in earlier than in previous years. Roses, carnations, peonies and sweet peas sold at satisfactory prices. Roses have been plentiful this summer and the quality has been unusually fine. Magnolia wreaths sold well. Dealers report that they have not yet felt the effect of the coal strike that started April 1. Coal mines in western and northern Kentucky in some instances are being operated on three shifts a day and hundreds of cars of coal are shipped daily from that state. Coal prices here have not materially advanced since the starting of the strike.

NOTES.

Walter Blackman, of the Wm. Blackman Floral Co., who is a member of the patrol of Hadi Temple of Shriners here, left on June 3 for San Francisco, Calif., with the Hadi patrol and band for the purpose of attending the annual supreme meeting of the shrine in that city. He will be gone for more than two weeks.

A number of flower shows are on the calendar for the month of June in towns and cities in southern Indiana, southern Illinois and western and northern Kentucky.

Mel Lockyear, of the Lockyear Floral Co., will take a leading part in the annual state Sunday-school convention that will be held in this city June 13-15. W. B. C.

SLIGHT TRADE INCREASE FOR HOLIDAY.

Memorial Day was observed as usual. Exercises were conducted at the national cemetery where 14,000 veterans are buried. Each grave was decorated with a United States flag and flowers strewn on many of them. The flowers, however, were not of the florists' variety, for every garden, public and private, in and around the city is a riot of bloom and many blossoms were taken to the cemetery. Some of the early spring flowers have disappeared, such as peonies, lilacs, syringas and all the bulbous stock. Other stock including Ascension lilies, corn lilies and many types of the old fashioned roses namely, Micra Filia, Floribunda and Dorothy Perkins is seen in profusion. A better call for

HUGE VOLUME AT LOW PRICES.

The consensus of opinion, now that Memorial Day is past and its record made, is that its importance as a floral holiday is increasing, that this year there were more flowers sold than ever before, but at greatly reduced prices from those of 1921 and that the supply was fully twice that of last season, which made it very difficult to maintain values. That the local demand falls far short of what is possible if retailers would feature and work up the business was clearly brought out. The balance of the week since the holiday has been anything but encouraging; there are still quantities of peonies and an unlimited supply of outdoor flowers, such as annual larkspur and belladonna, coreopsis, candytuft, Sweet William, cornflower, Shasta daisies, Candidum lilies, gaillardia, etc. Roses appear to be working overtime, as there are far more than the market calls for; the quality is fine. Carnations are at least one-third greater in quantity than last year. There are still plenty of sweet peas and calendulas. Callas and Easter lilies are overstocked and hard to sell. In spite of this apparent surplus, some wholesalers report that not very far back much less stock would make a glutted condition that it was almost impossible to move, at prices less by half than those now prevailing.

June 6.—Outdoor stock came to the market this morning by the wagon load, larkspur, gaillardia, coreopsis, cornflower, Sweet William, etc., which, together with large shipments of greenhouse flowers, gave the wholesalers, in the face of the very light demand, heavy work to handle it.

more, June 6, was on account of the early season transferred to the hall of the Manheim Cricket Club at Haverford for Friday, June 2. As placed in the spotlessly white interior of the hall, the gay colored flowers made a fine showing. While professional florists were not barred, all exhibits were from amateurs, except possibly the peonies of James Boyd, whose collection may be called professional. A rather singular proviso was that none of the exhibitors could stage their own flowers, all collections and arranged baskets, vases, bowls, etc., being taken into the hall and placed by a committee of ladies. The collections of hybrid, hybrid tea and climbing roses contained some quite large entries. Oriental poppies, larkspur, peonies and collections of herbaceous stock were the outstanding features in cut flowers. Floral arrangements for the dinner and breakfast table, also for hall and library tables, brought into use all the latest style bowls, most of which, with the aid of glass block holders, were very prettily filled. Mrs. Wm. F. Dreer won a silver cup for the best display of larkspur and James Boyd most of the prizes for peonies, the flowers of which were very fine. A. B. Cartledge and A. M. Campbell were among the judges.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING, JUNE 6.

The regular Florists' Club meeting was held at the Adelphia hotel, June 6, with a very good attendance. The Sesqui-Centennial Exposition, to be held here in 1926, brought out a heated discussion. Mayor Moore sent his regrets in not being able to address the florists. A committee was appointed to make an effort to secure the convention of the Society of American Florists for 1926. The Mothers' Day advertising committee, through its chairman, presented a very gratifying report, showing subscriptions of $1,750. A vase of the new rose, Mrs. Warren G. Harding, shown by A. N. Pierson, Inc., Cromwell, Conn., aroused considerable interest. The meeting adjourned.

NOTES.

James C. Clark, the fern expert of Henry A. Dreer, Inc., states that cibotiums, which are now so essential to the decorator, should be grown with plenty of light and air, so as to harden the foliage. The dark green luxurious fronds are all right to look at, but they have no lasting qualities. Five thousand trays of seedling ferns, mostly Pteris, containing well over 1,000,000 plants, are making a fine growth; these are sold to florists to pot up in 2¼-inch pots for the filling of fern dishes next winter. Dahlias, Mr. Clark believes to be the most popular flowers of the day and a splendid medium in educating the people in the love of flowers. They appear to do well everywhere and with everybody, and the fall dahlia shows that are fast springing up in every community are doing much to instill in the people a love for flowers that will give a great stimulus to the business.

The Leo Niessen Co. reported: "In all our experience we never handled so many flowers before as for the past holiday, but it could not be called a satisfactory trade, as everything was so cheap. With the peonies out of the way we look for a better market, for the rest of the month at least." Choice roses, carnations and cattleyas are features of their large stock.

Wm. J. Baker, now in his 82d year, visited the public schools Memorial Day and was caught by the camera telling war stories to the children. Next day he was surprised to see this little scene reproduced in the Evening Bulletin. "Old Man Bake" is still hale and hearty, but leaves his business to his first lieutenant, Mary J., who is as good as the best of them in the wholesale shops.

Edward Reid had all he could do to keep things on an even keel over the holiday. Between the peony farmers and the greenhouse men, each working overtime, he had his hands full. Roses in full supply, carnations and snapdragon were his best offerings.

The Century Shop presents a very decorative appearance, with the front displaying well flowered hydrangeas, all the pots of which are covered with large sheets of light blue paper. The low pavement box close in under the show

MARKET OVERLOADED WITH STOCK.

The market continues to be overloaded with stock and what is selling goes at extremely low figures. As an instance, the bulk of the carnations wholesaled at from $1 to $3 per 100, and there is no prospect of improvement until the supply of peonies slackens. Reports from sections of the city including the cemetery florists indicate that Memorial Day business fell far below what was expected and what it should have been. Little is ever expected for it here in Manhattan, but in Brooklyn and Queensborough, where many cemeteries are located, good business is always expected. With the majority of retailers, however, it seems to have been disappointing. It was believed that the recent arrival of the soldier dead from France and the publicity that has been given to all matters connected with the late war and its soldiers, would greatly increase interest in the observance of the day. It is a lamentable truth relating to this city—it may be the same in other cities—that respect and reverence for the home and family relations, the worthy that live and the brave that have died, are on the decline. The race tracks, base ball parks and moving picture theatres are the temples in which too many men and women worship.

June 5.—After several days of rain and fog the weather has turned hot, which is bad for the market and the quality of the stock, some roses arriving mildewed. A better grade of peonies from local growers is in and brings an advanced price over common stock. Carnations are failing rapidly.

MEMORIAL DAY NOTES.

The wholesale, and the majority of the retail stores, were open on the forenoon of Memorial Day, but business was light. The cemetery florists had done most of their buying Monday, and a considerable part of their trade is always in plants. Considering the great amount of stock on the market, much could be bought and yet make little impression on the stock on hand, particularly as it is usually the cheaper grades that is wanted. But for that matter, almost everything sold cheap. In reference to the retailer, it can be said that a large number of good wreaths were ordered for monuments in the city and for the cemeteries, some stores having orders from out of town. In the forenoon, Fifth and Madison avenues were as near deserted as we have ever seen them. As to the weather, the day was all that could be desired, clear with a cool breeze. The interested part of the population flocked to Riverside drive where there was a parade of about 10,000 veterans from the vicinity of 74th street, past the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, which is at 89th street, to 92nd street. The parade with its backgrounds was extremely interesting and picturesque. On the east side of the drive the balconies of the tall apartment houses were crowded with spectators; other thousands crowded the sidewalks, doorsteps and every available vantage point. Rows of fine trees in fresh foliage waving overhead gave a woodland touch to the scene. The faded coats of blue of the Grand Army veterans; the drab olive of the Spanish and world war veterans; the white duck of the naval militia and the varied costumes of the Gold Star mothers, wives and sisters and the Overseas Service League, created a kaleidoscopic scene. There were veterans of the old guards wearing tall shakos and—Hoot, mon—"Sandy" was there in kilt and tartan. The monument stands on the west side of the drive; it was decorated with bunting and many fine wreaths rested at the base. The speaking was from a platform erected there. Another noteworthy event in the afternoon was a parade up Broadway to Mitchell square, Broadway and 167th street, where a monument was unveiled and dedicated. The inscription cut in the granite pedestal reads: "Erected by the people of Washington Heights and Inwood in commemoration of the men who gave their lives in the world war." The monument, a bronze group, represents three soldiers, one of them mortally wounded. The design reminds one of the opening stanza of Mrs. Norton's poem, "Bingen on the Rhine," which reads:

A soldier of the Legion
Lay dying in Algiers,
There was lack of woman's nursing,
There was dearth of woman's tears,
But a comrade stood beside him
While his life blood eb'd away,
And bent with pitying glances
To hear what he might say.

In this group there are two comrades—one supports the wounded man, the other "bends with pitying glances, to hear what he might say." This monument was designed by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who is well known in horticultural circles, as her Long Island estate has furnished many fine exhibits to the flower show held in this city. A number of fine wreaths were placed on the pedestal. Whatever may be said about the policy of selling artificial poppies, it remains a fact that enormous quantities of them were sold on the streets and to some extent they were used in wreaths. Mingling with the crowds throughout the holiday, we did not see $5 worth of natural flowers worn as boutonnières, but the artificial poppies were everywhere.

Malandre Bros., Broadway and 72nd street, had an exceptionally fine window display, including the national colors and a number of handsome wreaths, some of which were of the prepared magnolia leaves with flowers added. Several noteworthy wreaths had as a basis what the supply men call "cape leaves" but which resemble the leaves of a variety of the leontopodium or Edelweiss.

At the C. A. Dards' store, Madison avenue and 44th street, there was a handsome arrangement of the national colors and many fine wreaths. This establishment had a number of out of town orders.

Leo B. Lowenthal, who conducts the Riviera Flower Shop at Broadway and 169th street, had a fine Memorial Day window decoration and made up good wreaths.

The Olympia Florist, 3799 Broadway, made a fine display of baskets and boxes of gladioli and other flowers, and rose and hydrangea plants.

C. Cardasis, who has a shop at Mitchell square, furnished good wreaths for the dedication of the monument in Washington Heights.

The Colonial Florist, Broadway and 157th street, displayed fine wreaths in his window and a great stock of good flowers.

Vidal, Mackintosh, Inc., 342 Madison avenue, displayed excellent Memorial Day features in their show window.

The Washington Heights Floral Co., P. Velotas proprietor, arranged a number of good features.

NOTES.

John Johnson, who for a number of years conducted a retail store at 27 Nevins street, Brooklyn, recently had to move on account of the building being torn down to make room for a larger one. He is now well located at 450 Gold street, not far from the old stand.

P. F. McKenney had a wedding decoration at the Arlington hotel, Binghamton, June 1. Mrs. McKenney, who is an exceptionally clever lady, went up to take charge of the decorations and made up the bridal and other bouquets.

Wm. H. Kuebler, the Brooklyn wholesaler, states that his Memorial Day business was about as good as last year.

The F. W. Massmann store, Montclair, N. J., reports a good Memorial Day business.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—James Vick's Sons say that, although business started slowly this spring, owing largely to the cold and backward season, trade has kept up much better than usual, so that the volume of sales is now in excess of that of last year by a comfortable margin, and if they continue to have good demand for plants to the middle of June the sales will be the greatest in their history.

Southern Seedsmen's Association.

NEW ORLEANS CONVENTION, MAY 29-31.

The fourth annual convention of the Southern Seedsmen's Association was held at New Orleans, La., May 29-31, with an attendance of 65, all parts of the country being represented. At the opening session, Monday morning, Mayor McShane heartily welcomed the delegates to the city, D. R. Mayo, of Knoxville, Tenn., responding, followed by President Jos. Steckler's address. Secretary-Treasurer Frank S. Love presented his annual report which showed the finances and membership to be in a favorable condition. After a general introduction of visitors informal talks were made by Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago; Clifford Corneli, St. Louis, Mo.; H. G. Hastings, Atlanta, Ga.; John Ross, Memphis, Tenn.; C. S. Clark, Wakeman, O., and others. On Monday afternoon the visitors were the guests of the city of New Orleans on a boat ride down the Mississippi river which lectable accounts and other leaks in the business. The president thought that the plan suggested at a former convention to bring about a seed exchange service, whereby the surplus stock of one seedsman could be the means of aiding another who was short on that particular stock, should be given more attention. The idea if developed would be of great benefit to the trade. The value of educative advertising was fully demonstrated during the war when the seed business was given the greatest impetus in its history. The president hoped that the advantage gained at that time would not be lost and would be more fully developed through a closer support of the National Garden Bureau, which at present is continuing the publicity work ably carried on during the war. The relation of freight charges to sales was carefully considered and he believed that since the transportation cost is an expense that enlarges the ultimate selling price, there is a was thoroughly enjoyed in spite of the continuous rain during the trip.

President Jos. Steckler, in his opening address urged the need of closer co-operation among the members so that the association would not sink below the level of 100 per cent efficiency. A committee of credits was recommended, which if appointed would suggest methods for combatting the losses arising from worthless checks, uncolresulting tendency to lower the number and size of the sales. He suggested that a committee with plenary powers be appointed to take such action in flower seeds had caused the senate committee to advance the proposed tariff of four cents per pound to 20 per cent ad valorem." We want to emphatically say the matter as it would deem proper. President Steckler discussed the necessity for improving merchandising methods, bringing out the fact that while nearly every item in the trade is being sold today at or below pre-war prices the expenses of handling and selling the product have shown little decrease. He believed that one of the solutions was the matter of price making, as a few cents added to or subtracted from the sales price would be no added or lessened burden to the purchaser, yet these few cents multiplied by the volume of purchases would spell success or failure to the seedsman. While the course has been stormy and strewn with pitfalls in the immediate past, the president, in conclusion, believed that the clouds of difficulty were beginning to vanish and that the seedsman were about to enter upon a period of prosperity.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: D. R. Mayo, Knoxville, Tenn., president; Dick O'Bannon, Sherman, Tex., vice president; John Ross, Memphis, Tenn., second vice president; Frank S. Love, Montgomery, Ala., secretary-treasurer; H. G. Hastings, H. M. Kilgore, Plant City, Fla., and L. P. Cohen, Huntsville, Ala., directors. The next annual meeting will be held at Knoxville, Tenn. D. R. Mayo, the newly elected president, was born at Knoxville, December 27, 1885, and attended the public schools there, later completing a course at the University of Tennessee. In 1904 he became associated with his father, the late D. R. Mayo, who had established a seed business at Knoxville in 1879, being one of the pioneer houses in the central that we have never asked for an ad valorem duty, but that we have asked for a small specific duty, sufficient to protect us from the cheaper grades of foreign grown flower seeds.

L. D. WALLER SEED CO.

Guadalupe, Calif.

We have a similar letter on this matter from John C. Bodger, of the John Bodger & Sons Co., Los Angeles, Calif.

J. C. Vaughan, chairman of the tariff committee of the American Seed Trade Association, calls attention to the fact that if a 20 per cent duty is placed on high priced flower seeds, most of which are not now or are likely to be grown soon in this country, both professional florists, as well as amateurs, will be compelled to pay one-fifth more than before for such seeds, and no benefit will accrue to the American grower who is not producing them.

Connecticut Seed Crops.

S. D. Woodruff & Sons, Orange, write as follows May 15: "After an unusually mild winter, root crops of all kinds have not kept as well as usual. Beets, in particular, a large per cent of them are dead-headed and that means worthless for producing seed. Acreage is light, no more than 1921 crop, rather less and we believe conditions will be considerably poorer than 1921. Other root crops are under light acreage, carrot, parsnip, turnip and especially onion. While onion bulbs kept fine, the acreage is greatly reduced and none can guess the outcome of the crop at this time. There is a very considerably enlarged acreage of spinach, which has started off unusually well. Kale is under very light acreage and condition very poor. The plants wintered over very poorly and the crop will, of a necessity, be very light. Planting of corn is in full swing now and condition is A-1 in every respect. The season in general is about one week late, but this is not important as the middle of July always show crops up to their normal and average season condition.

"As to the general business for spring of 1922, which is drawing to a close, trade has been very active and fill-in business unusually strong. The shelves are certainly cleared as they have not been for years and everything points towards normal conditions with an abnormal demand under a reduced seed crop for 1923. The general situation for the past three years has been very decidedly in the buyers' favor and we shall be greatly surprised if a new leaf is not turned for the 1923 business and sellers will have more of their old-time optimism that has been the case lately."

Burpee's Business.

The W. Atlee Burpee Co., Philadelphia, Pa., writes the latter part of May as follows: "While we have not yet finished our season, we are pleased to say that the sales are holding on in splendid shape and, in fact, the proportionate increase has been greater during the past two or three weeks than at any time previously in the season. You will be interested to know that our total sales LAKE FOREST, ILL.—E. Bollinger, park superintendent here, who recently had a light paralytic stroke, is progressing favorably.

THIRTY THOUSAND grape vines were recently planted in Sinaloa, Mex., with excellent prospects for the further development of this industry.

THOMASVILLE, GA.—The Ivy Cottage Gardens is the name of a new nursery recently established here by Willis & Everington, who will specialize in landscape work.

"PLAN to Plant Another Tree" continues to increase in popularity. The May 29 bulletin of the campaign, issued by the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, has timely articles on "Irises," "Peonies" and "Trim Shrubs Now."

THE forty-seventh annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen will be held at the Hotel Wolverine, Detroit, Mich., June 28-30. The programme for this meeting will be found in our issue of June 3, page 1012.

A NORTHWESTERN train crashed into a truck containing nine employees of the F. D. Clavey nursery, June 5, near Highland Park, Ill., killing four and seriously injuring five others. The dead are Frank Ibach, Earl Lee, Robert McGann, and Olaf Peterson. The injured are John Peterson, William Allen, Arthur Williams, Thomas Melasky, and George Kelly.

Lonicera Morrowii.

Lonicera Morrowii has been growing in the Arnold arboretum since 1884 and is now only mentioned here in order to call attention to the remarkable groups of the plants of this species near the crossing in Franklin park, Boston, of the park drive and the traffic road which divides the park from north to south. In these groups the plants now covered with flowers are from 25 to 30 feet in diameter and eight or 10 feet high and are round-topped and perfect in shape with lower branches spread out over the ground. Lovers of handsome, hardy shrubs will be well repaid by a visit to these remarkable shrubs. L. Morrowii is offered for sale by several American nurseries, but these nursery plants raised from seeds usually prove to be hybrids of L. Morrowii and L. Tartarica, with upright branches, greener leaves and smaller flowers and, as compared with the Siberian and Japanese plant now to be seen in Franklin park, of little value. Loniceras, or many of them, hybridize freely and only plants raised from cuttings can be depended on.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, June 2, 1922.

MEMORIAL DAY TRADE FAIR.

It is hard to write about the Memorial Day business, as it was very satisfactory from some standpoints and unsatisfactory from others. The volume was as great or even larger than last year, but in order to maintain it about twice as much stock was moved, as prices were lower. The weather was warm and some shipments arrived in such poor condition that they were hardly salable and had to be jobbed, which is unusual for a holiday. Peonies were the backbone of the business and very good stock was seen. Some of the local crops came in on time, which made it bad for long distance shipments. At this writing peonies are flooding the market and the farmers are bringing them in by the truck loads, which causes them to have no value at all. This was one holiday where roses were not in demand at all, and the returns to the rose shippers were disappointing. Carnations were in heavy supply and the quality ran from good to bad, with honors about even. As usual, some of the growers who will never learn had held their stock too long and they came in sleepy, but at that there was enough to supply everyone. Easter and calla lilies were a drug on the market, and no one seemed to want them at any price and the quality of both was not of the best. Snapdragon has also seen its best day and is going back rapidly. Gladioli is becoming quite a factor and moves daily at good prices. Delphinium is with us again in quantity for the remainder of the summer. Lily of the valley and orchids are moving well, due to June weddings.

NOTES.

E. J. McCallum, of the McCallum Co., is spending a few days at the company's Detroit, Mich., branch. C. C. Phillips, Ed Niggel and E. C. Tipton, of the same company, and Jos. King, of A. W. Smith Co., are on a week's fishing trip in Forest county.

Invitations are out for the wedding of H. G. Frey, of the McCallum Co., this city, and Miss Hazel Bartlebaugh, of Cleveland, O., June 17.

A. W. Smith, of the A. W. Smith Co., has been ill for several days, but is improving rapidly and expects to be at his desk at an early date.

Randolph & McClements report the largest number of June wedding decorations ever booked by them.

THE agricultural phrenologists, who have been examining the heads of wheat in Texas do not like their looks at all—there is nothing in them.

WICHITA, KANS.—The first carload of locally grown cucumbers ever shipped from this city was consigned to a Chicago firm by the Menges Greenhouses recently.

THE setting out of tomato plants has been greatly delayed by the recent damp and cold weather in the central west which has retarded the growth of those already planted. This condition also applies to all other canners' vegetable crops.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, June 6.—Cucumbers, per two dozen, $1.75 to $1.90; lettuce, per box, 50 to 60 cents; carrots, $2 to $2.25 per bushel hamper; cabbage, $2 to $2.50 per crate; cauliflower, per crate, $3.25; radishes, 1 to 1½ cents per bunch.

New York, June 2.—Cucumbers, $1 to $3.50 per dozen; radishes, per 100 bunches, $1.50 to $2; lettuce, per crate, 25 cents to $3; mushrooms, white, $2.75 to $3.25 per three-pound basket; cauliflower, $1 to $3.50 per dozen; tomatoes, per pound, 15 to 30 cents; eggplants, $1 to $1.50 per carrier.

Vegetable Movement.

The total car lot movement of 13 leading lines of fruits and vegetables for the week ending June 3, was 10,983 cars, compared with 12,554 the previous week, a decrease of nearly 1,500 cars. Shipments of potatoes, strawberries, onions and lettuce were lighter, while cantaloupes, tomatoes and watermelons moved in heavier volume. Markets for potatoes show a generally strong tone. Onions were steady to firm. Peaches and watermelons declined. Eastern strawberries were weak, but south central berries held fairly steady. Tomatoes weakened under increasing supplies.

Mexico Tomato and Cantaloupe Shipments

Owing chiefly to the large crop of Florida tomatoes this season, the growers on the Mexican west coast have met with reverses in marketing their crops, only the very early shipments realizing good prices, according to Francis J. Dyer, United States consul at Nogales. There has been greater diversification than usual in winter vegetable farming, considerable quantities of green peppers, peas, eggplants, and other vegetables having been shipped. For the first time the west coast has gone heavily into raising cantaloupes, which grow well in many localities in Sonora and farther south and ripen much earlier than in the United States. April shipments amounted to about 12 carloads, and those for May and June will probably reach several hundred carloads. All shipments are refrigerated with ice from the United States.

Toledo, O.

HOLIDAY TRADE SATISFACTORY.

Excellent weather marked the three days preceding Memorial Day and, with plenty of warm sunshine, flowers of all seasonable kinds were extra plentiful and sold at prices slightly below normal for this day. The demand on the whole showed a slight increase, due to the fact that the American Legion is now taking the place of the thinning ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic. Just as great benefit was derived by local florists from co-operating with the Legion Mothers' Day, so Memorial Day could also be made a much better flower day. This occasion should not be allowed to lapse, because it contains an imperishable sentiment that calls for the use of vast numbers of flowers and wreaths. Peonies were in surplus quantities and sold for from $1.50 to $2 per dozen. There was a sufficient supply of roses, carnations, sweet peas, snapdragons, daisies and other miscellaneous flowers. Wreaths were featured in more shops this year and an increased demand was noted. Florists who decorate graves with bedding plants reported a lively business before May 30. Those located near cemeteries were exceptionally busy. Florists' Telegraph Delivery orders were good. This week stock is too plentiful for the demand and the warm weather has brought out all sorts of garden flowers. Peonies can be bought in unlimited quantities at $3 per 100, and even less. Funeral work continues active and there is a lively call for graduation and bridal bouquets, which helps business considerably.

NOTES.

The Scottwood Greenhouses reports a large holiday business, in which plants and cut flowers played a great part. This place is located in a fine residential district and the demand here is for the highest grade of plants. Tom Magee is an expert at producing them.

Daly's Flower Shop, one of the recent additions to the trade, is doing nicely. The store is one of the most attractively equipped in the city. Miss Daly, who, with her brother, operates the store, was employed for many years at the Scottwood Greenhouses.

Spanner's Flower Shop, in the Ohio building, sold peonies special on Saturday at 50 cents per dozen and roses at $1.25. While the roses were wonderful values, the peonies outsold them five to one.

Schramm Brothers had a wreath special for Memorial Day at $2 and sold a good many of these. Bedding stock is moving nicely here and several large planting jobs were filled last week.

Josephine Barrow, Dorr street, has been exceptionally busy with funeral work during the past week and reports demand satisfactory for this season.

A lively Memorial Day business, in which plants and wreaths were featured, was enjoyed by the Thompson Flower Shop, Maumee.

A. C. K.

HARTFORD, CONN.—The ninth annual flower day of the Jewish citizens of this city will be observed June 11. Flowers will be sold, the proceeds to be used in purchasing land in Palestine.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Dracaena Indivisa.

The seedlings of Dracaena indivisa should now be taken from the flats and potted in small pots and placed in a good, moist location that they may make a good growth before the fall. A palm or fern house or one with a similar temperature is the best for the small stock. The four-inch stock that was not disposed of during the spring sales can be either plunged outside or planted in a frame, where they will not demand the close attention necessary in the greenhouse. If planted out they should be potted up early, at least by September 1, when the roots are active and will quickly obtain a foothold in the new soil. They should be heavily shaded for a few days after potting or some loss of the plants may result. Any old plants that have outgrown their usefulness may be propagated, the stems cut up into small pieces and laid in a propagating bed with bottom heat, where the eyes will open and young plants quickly form.

Poinsettias.

The propagation of poinsettias should be pushed to the utmost at this time, for it is the plants that are rooted early in July that make the best single specimens at Christmas. Those that are rooted later in July and during August will make fine plants for pans, placing four to eight plants in a 6-inch or 8-inch pan, for they will be much shorter than those rooted early in July. The plants that were rooted earlier should now be growing nicely and should be shifted into larger pots as soon as they require it; under no circumstances allow them to become pot-bound until the bracts begin to set in November. They should be placed in the bright sun as soon as strong enough to endure it, that the growth may be short and sturdy and the leaves as close together as is possible. A long drawn plant grown in the shade, with the leaves far apart, is not the typical plant for the holidays and does not meet with approval.

Nephrolepis.

Probably no plant that the florist grows gives more returns for the labor spent in its culture or the space that it occupies than the Boston fern and its various sports. The old Boston is still, however, the easiest to handle and grow. The plants should be repotted every year, and with good treatment are sure of making nice plants. Any plants that are in poor condition can be divided and with the young stock planted in a bench of good, rich soil. The house should be shaded enough to assure of good color on the foliage, but not heavy enough to prevent the house being maintained at a good high temperature. During the day the house should stand at about 80 degrees, with a little ventilation, which should be closed down before the sun leaves the houses. The plants can be set six inches apart and the soil should be two parts loam, one part leaf mould, and one part rotted manure. The house should be frequently syringed to keep a moist atmosphere. Under these conditions fine plants can be produced from young stock in three months. In September they should be lifted and placed in 6-inch pots, if single specimens are desired, or three or four plants can be placed in a 9-inch or 10-inch pot if larger plants are wanted. In lifting the plants they can be cut around about two inches from the crown, and lifted with a trowel, leaving the runners in the bench if the place they occupy is not wanted at once. The runners will immediately break into small plants, which can be placed in flats for young stock for the next season. The finer varieties of this fern, such as Whitmani, do not submit to the lifting and potting as well as the old Boston, and better plants can be obtained by potting along into larger pots as may be required. The only insects that trouble these ferns are the brown scale, and the plants should be kept clean from these by washing or spraying with aphine or a weak nicotine solution.

Oleanders.

A plant that does not receive the attention that it should is the oleander. While there probably would not be a large demand for this plant, yet it is an old time favorite, and well-grown specimens in bloom are a valuable addition to a porch or lawn. They are too often so sadly neglected that they get unshapely and far from being an ornament, but a little attention to trimming them into shape after they get through blooming will keep them in good condition. They can be wintered in any cool quarters, and if brought into the heat and light in early spring will be full of bloom in June and July and a valuable decorative plant. The cuttings root easily and at any time when the plant is in growth, and grow very rapidly for a hard-wooded plant. Any florists carrying a line of assorted stock should include a few of these in the variety which he cultivates. The only insect which troubles them is the mealy bug, but a good frequent hard syringing will soon dislodge them.

Freecias.

A crop of freecias, or a few plants in pots in bloom at Christmas, is a valuable asset on that holiday. In order to have them in bloom at that time the bulbs should be planted by July 1. Select the large, strong bulbs and by careful inspection many will be found on which the root eyes are beginning to swell. These will make the earliest blooming plants and this selecting will produce plants that will all bloom at the same time. The bulbs should be planted in a good soil enriched with well rotted manure, but no fresh manure; it is a well understood principle that bulbs of all kinds do not grow well in soil full of fresh manure. Eight to 10 large bulbs in a 6-inch pot will give the best results. The pots should be well watered, and set in a dark, cool place until the shoots appear above the ground, when they should be given a light location. As soon as the growths get tall enough they should be staked and tied. By continual early selection of the bulbs and keeping the earliest separate, an early strain can be assured.

Gloxinias.

The gloxinias that were started in late winter should now be beginning to flower. After the flower beds have set they can be placed in a little shadier location and the danger of burning the foliage be obviated to a great degree. The plants should be spaced far enough apart that they do not touch and a proper circulation of air produced around the plant. If the flowers are to be used in floral work they should be cut as soon as fully open and placed in water away from draughts, and they will keep very well. These flowers are very fragile and should be handled carefully. If there are any particularly beautiful flowers that it is desired to propagate, the leaves can be rooted in the propagating bench by placing the base of the leaf in the sand to the depth of about an inch. The seedlings should be potted along for later blooming.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The Unique Candy Shop will install a floral department at an early date, with Jos. Werdein as manager.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

It is now time for the screen door and a substantial, modern fixture at the entrance of the shop to keep out the flies and dust has an up to date appearance that, to the visitor, presages a cool interior. In all stores where space will permit there should be a chair or two conveniently placed or that can be handed out in emergencies for elderly persons. In many shops these are much in the way, although at one time the furnishing of the establishment was not thought complete without fixed stools before the counters for the accommodation of customers. Generous looking palm leaf fans are a great comfort to visitors on a hot day and sure to be appreciated.

As there is so comparatively little business during the summer months the most should be made of every opportunity. One of the productive agencies is a carefully kept list of anniversaries of a public or semi-public nature, events that occur annually and in connection with which the florist is nearly always called upon for flowers or decorative effects. Birthdays of prominent persons in civic or business life are sure to be remembered by their associates with floral tributes and decorations that greet them on their natal day.

The deaths of all prominent and well to do people should be carefully noted as they occur, as anniversaries of this character include a visit to the cemetery with flowers to lay on the grave, or regular orders to have the same delivered by the florist. Well worded circulars extolling the beauty of these remembrances and suggesting clusters of flowers, wreaths, etc., and the assurance of their being placed regularly every year if given in your charge, sent out a week before the event are likely to be productive of good business.

Birthday circulars to work up trade for these annual happenings will describe the pleasure the recipients enjoy at being remembered on these occasions with flowers or blooming plants and the superior service the house is prepared to give along this line. These are sent to the known associates and friends recalling the anniversary of Mr. Blank which, without this notice, would perhaps be overlooked.

A tourist campaign for those going abroad is conducive to good business, the more it is advertised the greater will be the result. Steamship agencies have the data and there are various ways of obtaining the list of reservations which if well handled will result in substantial orders.

One of the most important features of the business at this time is cleaning up the old accounts; go after them, not in a way to antagonize but so there will be no mistake as to your earnestness in the matter and that there must be no further delay. You have done your part in giving good value for the prices charged and cannot afford the expense of carrying the charge on the books. If possible never let an account grow old as such claims often cost more than they are worth to collect.

THE SUMMER WINDOW.

The man who gets careless about his window at this time makes a great mistake; there is less trade as the season wanes, but then he has more time to work for what there is and if possible add to the demand. The display should always be so striking and interesting as to attract attention; just a little something put in to relieve the emptiness and bare look, but having no special point to it, will have no pulling power and gives the stranger who may be looking for flowers a poor opinion of the shop as a place to buy.

The object in window decoration is or should be to create a call for the stock displayed or in its decorative effect exploit the artistic ability of the store. The state of mind that concludes there is not going to be much business anyhow so what is the use of making a bid for it, is not in accord with up to date management. There should always be a reaching out for something to keep the store busy in one line or another. While funeral work is the principal dependence at this time, boxes of flowers and baskets of the same may be featured in a small way in connection with birthday celebrations and sent to holiday resorts. It will not take many flowers to decorate a good sized magnolia or oak leaved wreath which will make a very good showing in the window in a fern setting, and last for at least a day. A large vase or vase basket filled in a striking way with outdoor flowers on long stems and finished with a showy ribbon makes another good center that is certain to attract attention. Rambler rose sprays, stuck in small vases and attached to a latticed arbor, will present a pretty garden scene that is a little out of the ordinary. There should be one little feature after another all planned out in advance, and following one another so as to keep up the interest. The department stores never let up in their advertising; they have something of special importance to offer every day, during the winter, and all summer long. The August sale of furniture has turned this, the dullest month of the year, into a profitable season, which brings great crowds and stirs up all other departments of the store as well.

Florists cannot do better than profit by these master traders with whom business is a science and who by their intensive and well advertised sales opportunities, keep the public interested in their stores and their stocks constantly turning.

Keeping Up the Interest.

As the season begins to wane, many of the trade judging from the store windows and interiors and also greenhouse conditions, appear to think the demand is about over and it is not worth while to make any further bid for business. The man who gets into this state of mind will find things just as he expects to see them. Business is going to be very dull, he is sure of it, it is coming on for that season of the year when there is nothing doing. Flowers do not keep long now and anyhow there is always plenty to be had at a moment's notice, so what is the use of carrying a stock and have it go to waste? This picture is not overdrawn and prevails in far too many stores in every community.

On the other hand we have the enterprising, progressive man who believes in himself and his business, who is enthusiastic and always has a good stock of seasonable flowers featured and arranged in decorative effects to show to the best advantage. The outside street front of his shop is gay with its foliage and flowering plants, some as a permanent summer decoration and others for sale, which with the permanent flower boxes above the bulk and the hanging baskets, give the front a very decorative appearance and make the establishment one of the most conspicuous in the block.

This, together with the enthusiastic spirit of the proprietor and his able assistants who cannot fail but become imbued with his progressive methods, impresses on every visitor and customer that they never have seen such beautiful plants and flowers before and sales are made that are entirely due to this intensive presentation of the stock. The thousands who pass daily and are attracted by the display to stop and take a look will be certain to keep this store in mind and give it a call as occasions arise for the use of flowers.

Now, when flowers are so cheap, this is the season to run special sales. Small vase baskets can be filled with short roses in combination with larkspurs, the pink and blue making a fine color contrast. Coreopsis, gaillardias, outdoor sweet peas and other like flowers, put up in wax paper cornucopias to sell for 25 cents a bunch makes a special that in a good retail shopping center could be sold in quantity.

Late flowering hydrangeas are very attractive at this time and are fine for a pavement display. Pot stock in full flower should be featured with a covering of light blue paper around the pots, put on in cornucopia fashion not tied in too close, with the edges of the paper coming well up into the foliage. This kind of decoration gives all plants a finished look, makes up for the lack of bottom foliage and adds considerably to the size.

ATTRACTIVE STORE FRONT.

There is no question but such featuring and displays gives a boost to business that would otherwise get into such a standstill condition that the man who looks for and does nothing to offset, will be sure to find. It is never too late to mend and when the report is that business is slow the time has come to find out why, to clean out the offensive material and wake up to the opportunities that are open to every retailer who will take the chance of carrying a good line of flowers and feature and present them in an attractive way. His store front must be made so gay and bright with the many plants at his disposal that there will be no question that it is a wideawake flower shop, a place where one will be sure to find a good assortment, and as seen in front, men of ability to arrange them.

It is only when the enthusiasm is aroused by some incentive to such a degree that these changes are made, that there is hope. It may seem risky to stock up and carry a line out of proportion to the orders to be filled, but if this earnest and persistent bid for business is constantly kept up people will come to the store where there must be stock such as they desire, and a variety that will induce them to buy more. It is the cumulative value of the intensive display and advertising that eventually throngs the store. An advertisement once or twice a week featuring a particular article such as a $1 fern or box of flowers, ran for a month, will make little appreciable difference in the demand, but if kept up three, four or six months, the cumulative effect of its being seen again and again together with the repeat orders will make this an important feature of the business.

There should always be good value in these advertised specials as they are a general invitation to the public to come to the shop and they must be made to feel it is worth while. The advertised special is however only the opening wedge just to get the people acquainted with the store, the result in all these campaigns invariably leading to increased sales in every department. Once get the people in the shop, then its varied and well featured stock together with its alert salespeople will do the rest.

Putting in an occasional advertisement at the behest of a persistent solicitor is good money wasted. Profitable publicity, the kind that brings results, comes from well planned campaigns featuring certain seasonable lines with which the store is sure to be well stocked. Every business can afford to invest five per cent of its gross receipts in publicity, this intelligently spread out over the year if backed up by the goods and efficient management will in its cumulative effect build up a continual, ever increasing demand.

Floral Pictures.

One of the most effective decorative features for the window is the gilded picture frame, in which is artistically arranged to simulate an artist's painting or water color flowers in vases, low bowls, baskets, hampers or other receptacles, with various backgrounds that give the best color contrasts and harmonies. Almost any arrangement of flowers that will admit of being framed in this way will be given a distinctive appearance and attract much more attention than if displayed by the ordinary method. A bride's shower bunch in a suitable frame is a very attractive subject. The first of the season's flowers as they come in will always attract more attention introduced in this manner.

There should be several sized frames to properly fit the picture and show it to the best advantages, also quite a variety of back grounds in various shades, made of two-toned silks and others of silk velour or thin velvet. These with a loop on one edge are slipped on a curved or straight brass rod the width of the frame, which at one end is bent at right angles and fastened into two screw eyes at one side of the frame near the top. This curtain background should be wide enough to show folds when in position and also places to give from 12 to 18 inches depth to the picture.

A suitable upright easel that holds the frame perpendicularly at any height adds to the effectiveness and leaves room for hanging a painter's palette below. There must be a suitable shelf on which to build the picture, which can be attached to the bottom at the back of the frame on brackets. An electric fixture, with reflector at top and side, attached to the frame so they can be turned on separately, will give an illumination that greatly enhances the effect and is indispensable at night when with the window lights off the picture is wonderfully attractive.

The accompanying illustration is of a frame 28x32 inches with Ward roses in a white and gilt vase. Photographs do not bring out the natural colors but wonderful striking effects can be produced with flowers in their correct placing and appropriate backgrounds.

Dahlia Circular.

The New York Agricultural Experiment station, Geneva, in Circular No. 43, revised, prepared by F. H. Hall on "Dahlias and Their Culture," gives a very interesting history of the dahlia, dating from its discovery in Mexico in 1615 and the various stages of its progress up to the present time. In 1787 to 1791 it began to attract the attention of plantsmen and botanists. In 1791 Abbe Cavanilles, director of the Royal Gardens at Madrid, Spain, raised a semi-double variety which he named "Dahlia" after Mons. Andre Dahl, a noted Swedish botanist, under which name the whole genus is now known. The dahlia was early introduced into England, mention being made of a variety with colored plate in the Botanical Magazine of London in 1804. Growers in France, Germany and Belgium were soon experimenting and producing new colors and double forms. These developed into the more solid ball shaped flowers of the show and fancy types. From 1820 to 1860 dahlia enthusiasm in England almost approached that of the earlier tulip craze of Holland, there being numerous shows at which thousands of blooms were displayed and as high as £200, or $1,000, was paid for promising novelties. A great impetus was given to the dahlia by the introduction into Holland from Mexico in 1872 of the variety Juarezii, named after President Juarez of that country. This was brilliant scarlet, double, but open in form with pointed petals slightly rolled back at the margin, the forerunner of the cactus type, which in elegance of form, diversity of type, size, delicate colors and shades was a distinct advance over existing varieties. In crossing cactus types with singles the peony flowered form was developed. Since the introduction of this and other new types growing out of these crosses the dahlia has rapidly increased in popularity.

The dahlia was first introduced into the United States from England early in the last century being offered in American florists' catalogues of 1823. In 1835 at an exhibition of the New York Horticultural Society there were 30 exhibitors, one of whom showed 114 imported varieties. Since the introduction of the peony flowered and other fancy types the dahlia has rapidly increased in popularity. The Pacific slope has been found especially suited to its culture, many meritorious varieties of the decorative and cactus hybrid type being introduced from this region. Extensive dahlia farms in New Jersey, where they are grown commercially for roots and cut flowers, has demonstrated that they will pay as an individual product. The dahlia has now become so popular and its culture so universal in nearly every state in the Union particularly as a garden flower, that dahlia societies and exhibitions of this flower are springing up in every community and adding greatly to its popularity.

The American Dahlia Society's annual exhibition, held for the past two years in the roof garden of the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, has been most successful in the great quantity, quality and variety of its exhibits and in the large attendance which each year turned into the treasury a substantial sum over all expenses. The circular also contains a classification of the various types, together with a detailed list of the best kinds in the various classes with cultural directions. It is a most carefully compiled paper and should prove of great interest to all dahlia growers.

THE CARNATION.

Rhode Island Carnation Bulletin.

In our issue of April 29, page 738, we made some brief reference to this bulletin, and now have much pleasure in reproducing the following from Dr. P. A. Lehenbauer, of the Department of Floriculture, University of Illinois, Urbana, who has given much attention to this work.

DR. LEHENBAUER'S COMMENTS.

"The foremost questions in the mind of the florist are the necessity of replacing the soil in his greenhouses each year and the physical and chemical soil factors required to bring about the best plant development. Hitherto, fresh soil and an abundant supply of stable manure have fulfilled his needs. The gross returns per acre from the average greenhouse crop are so large that the expense of replacing the soil each year and the almost unlimited use of stable manure have not been potent factors in the past, but no industry that is long burdened with unnecessary expense can be on a permanent basis. The replacing of the soil in a large house each year, especially where it is necessary to transport it some distance, is no small item and is constantly becoming more serious with those houses erected in or near large cities, and there is an ever-increasing demand for the fast-decreasing supply of suitable stable manure to be had from our cities. These facts make it imperative that the florist should know just how far he may expect to obtain success by retaining the old soil for a period of years and by the substitution of fertilizer chemicals and certain organic matter for stable manure. It seems logical to suppose that, other conditions being right, the root hairs of a carnation plant, for instance, would respond to the potassium, nitrogen, and phosphorus in certain combinations of fertilizer chemicals as well as to those elements when obtained from stable manure. The fact that the essential plant food elements can be supplied to the different greenhouse crops in fertilizer chemicals in definite quantities and relations and with greater ease than in stable manure makes the matter worthy of thorough investigation."

FLORAL PICTURES.

The above is the introductory statement to a bulletin just published by the Rhode Island Experiment station. The authors are F. R. Pember and G. E. Adams. The title of the bulletin is "A Study of the Influences of Physical Soil Factors and of Various Fertilizer Chemicals on the Growth of the Carnation Plant."

The bulletin is of direct interest to all carnation growers for it is an attempt to answer, by means of well-planned experiments, a number of fundamental questions which pertain to soils and fertilizers for this crop. The objects of the experiments may be stated as follows:

(A) What is the effect on growth and production if the same soil is used year after year, stable manure only being added, as compared with soil renewed each year and containing a similar amount of stable manure?

(B) What is the result if the original soil is used year after year and in place of stable manure, such organic materials as sphagnum moss, clover hay or ground alfalfa are used? In other words, what part does the physical structure of soils play in growth and production?

(C) What is the result if combinations of chemical fertilizers are used which tend to leave the soil either acid, neutral or alkaline?

(D) To what extent is potassium, and nitrogen, and phosphorus useful in supplementing stable manure?

(E) What quantities of the different chemical fertilizers may be safely applied to soils used year after year, before detrimental effects, either immediately or after a period of years, become evident?

The experiments were begun in 1907. This accounts for the fact that we see names of the older varieties, such as Beacon, May Day, Red Wing, Good Cheer, Harry Penn and Thomas Lawson. In experimental work of this kind it is of course imperative that the same varieties be continued throughout the tests. The investigators also continued the same progeny in each test in order, as they tell us, to give opportunity for the different physical or chemical treatments to exert any possible accumulative influence on the productivity of the plants during a period of years.

An accurate record was kept of all flowers picked and the flowers were graded into three classes. A record was kept also of the number with split calyces. Extensive and detailed tables are given of production of flowers for the various soil treatments. In addition, detailed data are given in tabulated form of the chemical analyses of plants grown in the various types of soils.

The results may be briefly summarized as follows:

When carnations are grown in the same soil plus manure for five years the production of flowers of first and second grade is reduced by an average of about five per cent below that from fresh soil plus manure.

FLORAL PICTURES.
Vase of Sweet Peas.

When the used soil is treated with both manure and chemical fertilizers, an increased production results in comparison with old soil plus manure. The production on the whole, however, does not equal the production obtained from new soil plus manure.

If the soil is used year after year and only stable manure applied, there is a larger production of flowers than if only chemical fertilizers are applied. The production also is larger in this soil plus manure than if sphagnum moss, clover, or alfalfa is used in place of the manure.

In soil used year after year plus manure the average production was 2.6 flowers, or grades 1 and 2, higher than in this soil plus chemical fertilizers. In soil used year after year plus chemical fertilizers plus sphagnum moss, the average production was smaller by one flower than in similar soil plus manure.

The results obtained from the use of various combinations of chemical fertilizers in soils used year after year, and from using manure, clover and other organic materials in place of manure are best illustrated by giving the total production figures. These may be tabulated as follows:

Treatment	Total Flowers
Manure	20,898
Sulphate of ammonia, acid phosphate, and sulphate of potash	18,100
Nitrate of soda, fine bone, muriate of potash	16,609
Nitrate of soda, acid phosphate, and muriate of potash	17,641
Nitrate of potash, Thomas slag phosphate and acid phosphate (no moss)	16,956
Nitrate of potash, Thomas slag phosphate, acid phosphate, and clover hay or alfalfa meal	17,728

Nitrate of potash, Thomas slag phosphate, acid phosphate, and sphagnum moss..... 18,259

The carnation, after it is established in the soil, seems to thrive in a wide range of chemical fertilizers. However, there is a maximum limit and large applications have an injurious accumulative effect. "Owing to the fact that most soils, as well as stable manure, are somewhat deficient in phosphorus, of which, furthermore, there is a very low recovery, the addition of this element to the soil and manure compost in its making or when put into the house would undoubtedly improve the balance of the nutrients for the carnation as well as for most plants. The application of acid phosphate at the rate of one ton per acre (or about five pounds per 100 square feet) would give good returns under most conditions. The addition of much larger amounts of acid phosphate would not prove toxic. Where the use of a complete commercial fertilizer is considered necessary, one relatively high in phosphorus and medium in nitrogen and potassium, having an analysis of 4:10:4 or thereabouts, would give beneficial results in most cases when applied at the rate of one ton per acre or about five pounds per 100 square feet."

These results conform with results obtained at the Illinois Station but for Illinois soils it was found that even larger quantities of acid phosphate should be used to obtain maximum production.

The bulletin is well written and the large amount of data contained makes it a very useful publication.

London Flower Show.

HELD AT CHELSEA, MAY 23-25.

Most people said that this was the best of all Chelsea shows, both for quality and for diversity, though there have been more important novelties at former shows, but that is a chance. Certainly the general level of achievement grows higher year by year; and all that is now needed in our gardening, both amateur and professional, is more sense of direction.

We have it in some things; we are less bound by ugly convention than in the age of bedding-out and shrubberies; but convention is always lying in wait for those who feel most secure against it, and there is plenty of gratuitous ugliness still in the most pretentious gardens. Indeed, the gardener, as in the bedding-out age, still has his own laws of taste for all the world like a poultry-fancier, and would pay little heed to an artist who told him that the colors of the novelties in which he takes most pride are often actually ugly. Yet they are; and I should like to make a protest against them.

Like everyone else, I was inclined to gape in wonder at the sweet peas, to cry "Oh," as if at a bursting rocket; but then I tried to look at them, not as explosions of color, but as sweet peas; and I saw that, more and more, the lovely natural, or wonted pink of these flowers is being ousted by limelight shades which exasperate rather than charm the eye, and with which it would be difficult to harmonize any other color. You can give a tang to pink by mixing it with yellow; but why should you? The answer is that pink with that tang in it is like a loud advertisement. In a crowd of other flowers at a show, and especially inside a tent, it catches the eye at once; the other modest shades of pink are unnoticed; and the amateur who thinks that louder color is good color wonders at the loudness of it and buys.

We talk now with contempt of the magenta of our grand-parents; but no aniline dye that ever was—and magenta is a dye not a color—equalled in virulence the fashionable yellow-pink that is now invading so many flowers; not only sweet peas, but roses, snapdragons, and Sweet Williams. One sees it everywhere and it grows more virulent yearly. One might even call it a jazz color, and soon perhaps our florists will give us jazz shapes, at least in dahlias; and our gardens will begin to grow as ugly as most other things.

But rock gardens are certainly improving vastly year by year; a few years ago most of those which offered themselves for judgment were both ugly in design and likely to be graveyards for all except the coarsest vegetation. Now most nurserymen understand the first principles of rockwork and some show great taste. Mr. Wood, for instance, this year gives us a stream from the Yorkshire dales. He is a realist, but one of genius; and an amateur might adapt his realism to a large garden, translating it, as it were, into terms of the mountain flora of the world. But it would need both taste and knowledge. Mr. Tucker, of Oxford, showed a rock garden already adapted for that flora; it was the best of the kind ever done at the show, and would have won the Graphic cup if he had not won it last year. As it was, this was won by the Pullman brothers, who have much improved, though still, perhaps they use too much stone and not all of it well arranged for plant growth.

Symons Jeune's rock garden was also very good; but in some cases the rock gardens are still marred with large incongruous plants; and the use of one kind of limestone grows monotonous. There are other kinds of stone in the Alps, and most of us must use the stone of our own neighborhood. No doubt Mr. Wood first began to do wonders with limestone, and no doubt it is easiest to produce an effect with; but nurserymen might be less slaves of fashion. Clarence Elliott illustrated a good idea on his rockwork, namely, the making of an alpine lawn, not with grass, but with small flowers crowded together. In fact, most alpine like to be crowded together, though not smothered, and a stretch of them chosen so that they would all be good neighbors would be a beautiful sight. The ground might contain a number of fragments of rock, all concealed by earth or the plants; and then only watering in dry seasons would be needed for success.

There were, of course, many formal gardens, some of a fierce formality which seems a mere reaction against the return to nature of a generation ago. I can well believe that a profiteer would pine for a Dutch garden, all walls and lead statues; and I have no doubt that it would illustrate Mr. Veblen's theory of "conspicuous waste." These things require fine taste and also much knowledge of gardening if they are not to look absurd. In particular, those who suppose they can grow all kinds of plants in walls that are not retaining walls—that is to say, which have no soil behind them—will find themselves mistaken. It was hard enough to get plants to grow in any wall last year, and to establish plants is always the difficulty of wall gardening.

If you have a real taste for a Dutch garden, if you know the plants and shrubs you want to grow in it, then no doubt you may make something beautiful of it; but if not, you had better let it alone and stick to the old herbaceous border. I would rather have ribbon or carpet-bedding than a Dutch garden that was a failure.

The best examples at the show proved that stone should be used sparingly in the flower garden, unless, of course, you are making an imitation of the Villa d'Este, and luckily few of us are doing that.—A. Clutton-Brock in the London Times.

Greenhouse Heating.

Third of the Series of Papers Prepared by H. Ralph Hadlow, of the Watson Engineering Co., Cleveland, O., for the Ohio District of the National Flower Growers' Association, the first having appeared in the January issue, page 1231, and the second in the issue of April 8, page 585.

The most common method employed in this country for conveying heat to distant points for heating purposes is by means of steam. This is frequently accomplished by generating steam at high pressure, that is, 60 pounds gauge pressure or above, and reducing the pressure at the points of distribution to meet the demand of the installation to be served. This is most commonly done in large installations where it is necessary to use a pump to return the condensate back into the boiler. It is customary and advantageous when conditions will permit, to generate the steam at low pressure, that is, 10 pounds pressure or less, for steam heating purposes. The low pressure steam heating systems as applying to greenhouse work may be classified in a general way under the following heads: One pipe gravity steam system, two pipe gravity return steam system, and vacuum return system.

The true one pipe gravity steam heating system has the steam main, risers and branches all below the heating units and uniformly pitched back to a point near the boiler, where the condensation is separated from the steam and flows to a point below the water level and thence through the regular wet return into the boiler by gravity, or flows through a sealing trap into a receiver and thence by means of a boiler feed pump forced into the boiler. The pipes are necessarily large to allow the condensation to return against the flow of the steam. If the pipes are made too small, or water pockets or water seals exist in the system, water hammering, as well as trouble in getting steam to the heating coils, will be experienced.

No little difficulty has been experienced with steam heating systems, such as water hammering and difficulty in getting steam to the heating units, and in practically every case it may be traced to faulty pipe work or sizing of the pipes, such as water pockets, too small pipe, a restriction in the piping or short circuit between the steam main and the return main. There are also cases where long lines underground may have an excess of heat loss due to being surrounded by water or improper insulation. This may be the case also with long uninsulated pipes overhead. To make the steam system operate satisfactorily, it is absolutely necessary that the pipes have a clear, open space for the steam to pass through. It is, therefore, of prime importance that all small pipe be reamed after cutting and eccentric fittings be used in steam mains and returns and that all low points be properly drained.

It is especially important in the one pipe gravity steam system that there shall be no water pockets in the steam main and that the slope shall be continuous back to the wet return leading to the boiler. This system, however, is not very satisfactory for greenhouse heating since pipe coils are generally used instead of cast iron radiators, the pipe coils being long are more difficult to drain against the flow of steam.

The general character of greenhouse requirements demands a two pipe water or steam system. Steam must therefore be transmitted to the coils through one system of pipes and the condensation removed through a separate system of returns to the boiler.

In either the gravity or vacuum systems, the steam mains should be run overhead around the building or through the middle of the greenhouse with a uniform grade of one inch in 20 feet. The branches leading from the coils should be taken from the top of the main and any water pockets should be provided with a drain or drip line to the return. All steam mains should be dripped at the extreme end. The pipe coils should have a uniform grade downward of one inch in 15 feet in the direction of flow with drip connection through a check valve at the low end in case of gravity return system, thence to the return main and back to the boiler. The check valve should be placed horizontally not less than six inches below the lowest point of the coil.

The gravity return system has one disadvantage as hereinbefore mentioned, that the boiler must be placed so that the water line is below the lowest point in the steam main and pipe coils dependent upon the size of the system and pressure carried on the boilers (the minimum advisable distance is about two feet), or a trapped condensate receiver and boiler feed pump must be employed to return the condensate to the boiler. Where low pressure steam is generated the boiler feed pump must be driven by electrical power. In the two pipe gravity system all air pockets in the piping must be provided with suitable automatic air valves.

There are numerous so-called systems of steam heating in use. The term "system" in this case is merely a commercial term for different makes of specialties rather than any distinctive feature in the size and arrangement of the piping and boilers as referred to hereinbefore. The vacuum steam heating system is the most satisfactory of all steam heating systems for large installations since it provides positive means for removing the air and condensation from the piping and returning the condensate to the boilers and also submits most regularly to thermostatic regulation. The piping system is essentially the same as in the two pipe gravity system, except that the check valve in the return from the coil is replaced by a thermostatic trap, which permits the passage of condensation and air only and not of steam. The vacuum pump is connected to the return main in the boiler room which pumps the condensation and air from the return main and forces the condensate in the boiler. The return pipes may be made considerably smaller than are used for the gravity system and a limited number of water pockets may be permitted in the return line provided lift fittings are used. This should, however, be avoided wherever possible.

Temperature regulation may be placed on the steam mains or on the individual coils, that is, one thermostat may be located to control the temperature of the entire building, or thermostats may be located at various points in the building and regulate the steam to the coils in the different sections. This system has the advantage that the regulation is easily changed and the same disadvantage that sufficient fire must be kept in the boiler to generate steam at all times in order that the system shall give off heat. Also, that in large installations, the boilers will be of such size as to require a licensed fireman according to the laws of certain states. When high pressure steam is generated for heating purposes, it is almost invariably for this type of system, since the steam can be transmitted to distribution points at high pressure and reduced by means of a pressure reducing valve to any desirable pressure below 10 pounds. It is necessary in a vacuum system to use steam at less than 10 pounds pressure in the coils since the thermostatic traps are ordinarily guaranteed for not to exceed 10 pounds pressure.

The advantage in such cases of generating steam at high pressure is that of being able to operate the pumps by steam where electricity is not available and it is not entirely satisfactory to attempt to operate pumps at less than 60 pounds pressure. The exhaust steam from the pumps may then be used in the low pressure heating lines. Where electrical power is available it is somewhat more desirable to generate steam at low pressure, using a motor driven combined vacuum and boiler feed pump of the type built by the Nash Engineering Co.

The vacuum system is generally used where conditions do not favor a two pipe gravity system. This applies mainly to one area. All pipe coils, low points in the steam line, as well as the ends of steam mains, must be dripped through thermostatic valves, discharging into the return lines. It should be borne in mind that the thermostatic traps should at all times be placed in a position lower than the point to be drained, since the fundamental principles of the valves is as follows:

The valve is usually constructed with a flexible metal bellows filled with a volatile liquid which expands when exposed to heat. These bellows control the opening and closing of the valve in the trap. The valve remains open at all times when water or air is passing through, due to its lower temperature, but closes immediately upon steam coming in contact with the bellows.

As stated in the previous paper on hot water heating, the forced circulation of hot water heating is most desirable for comparatively large installations of greenhouse heating. In extremely large systems some special advantages may be derived from the use of the steam vacuum return system.

As stated in a former paper, the heat from the water system is not so intense as that from the steam system, since the heating medium in the hot water system is ordinarily of a temperature ranging from 130 degrees and lower, while the temperature of the medium in a steam heating system must range from about 212 degrees and upward. This would not create as healthy a temperature for the plants which are near the heating coils. However, a satisfactorily designed and installed system of steam heating has many merits worthy of consideration.

CINCINNATI GROWERS.

The June 7 meeting of the Cincinnati growers which was held at the range of L. F. Murphy, met with the usual success. Several voluntary subscriptions toward the advertising fund were received from members who had previously subscribed, namely, Murphy Bros., $25; R. Witterstaetter, $25; and the C. Federle Co., Hamilton, $20.

The local florists have made arrangements to hold an outing at Loughery island, July 12, and from reports there will be a 100 per cent attendance, the retailers stating that they will close their stores at 9 a. m. that day.

We have perfected arrangements for the state convention which is to be held in Cincinnati, June 20-21. On invitation of Nick Weron it was decided to hold the next meeting at his establishment, Wednesday, July 5. Luncheon was served after the meeting, after which several games of quoits were indulged in. JOSEPH IMHOLTE, Secy.

OHIO DISTRICT MEETING, JUNE 20-21.

Walter Stephens, president of the Ohio District of the National Flower Growers' Association, reports the annual meeting of the division will be held at Cincinnati, June 20-21. The location of the headquarters and the programme will be announced in the near future. The principal questions to be considered are changes in the constitution and by-laws which will revise the schedule of dues, so that the small grower will not be burdened to any great extent, while the larger plantsman will also benefit.

The time for holding the annual meeting was changed from January to June to permit a larger attendance at the meetings. J. W. L.

New York Florists' Club.

The New York Florists' Club held its monthly meeting, the last until September, in the Engineering building, on June 12, President Roman J. Irwin in the chair. Secretary Young read the minutes of the May meeting, which were approved. The secretary read suitable memorial resolutions on the death of John I. Raynor, who had been a life member of the club, the members standing during the reading.

Charles H. Totty made a report for the spring flower show committee. About 44,000 people attended the exhibition, and $6,000 will be divided between the club and the Horticultural Society of New York. A new flower show committee has been appointed. Clifford Lowther, for the transportation committee, reported encouraging results relating to a party to the Society of American Florists' convention. A. L. Miller spoke on transportation, urging members to make reservations for the trip at once. The following were elected to membership in the club and were present and introduced: Carl W. Meyer and Ernest A. Marxsen, 99 Warren street.

A committee was appointed to prepare resolutions appreciating the work of Treasurer Newbold of the flower show committee during the spring show.

The feature of the evening was the lecture by President S. S. Pennock of the Society of American Florists, illustrated by stereopticon views. President Pennock, it will be recalled, went to Germany after the war, representing the Quaker denomination, and distributed relief. He also visited some of the devastated parts of Europe, and a number of the views showed the ruins of buildings, also the weak condition of children caused by insufficient and un-nourishing food. At the conclusion he was given a standing vote of thanks.

The death of Patrick Welch, of Boston, Mass., was reported, and A. T. De La Mare, Frank H. Traendly and Secretary Young were appointed a committee to prepare suitable resolutions.

C. F. Bertanzel, Roslyn, N. Y., exhibited six pots of hardy pinks, named Mothers' Day, awarded a vote of thanks. The Springfield Floral Co., Springfield, N. J., showed a vase each of foxglove, lilies and kalmia, receiving a vote of thanks. The meeting adjourned.

POT PLANTS, SHRUBBERY SELL WELL.

Business since Memorial Day has been rather quiet, funeral work not being as brisk as formerly and since that is the backbone of the market in the summer, general quietude has settled over the industry. One of the best features however is the call for pot plants and shrubbery of all kinds. Growers who specialize in that class of work have been rushed to take care of the trade. Planting of ferns and flowers in vases, porch boxes and in landscape work has been good. Cut flowers are selling to a limited extent and the quality as a rule is excellent, carnations, roses, delphiniums and coreopsis being the principal kinds. Peonies are now out of the market, and there is a fair variety of garden flowers available. Roses are mostly Columbia, Ward, Premier and Sunburst, bringing $3 to $6 per dozen. Carnations retail at $1.50 to $2 per dozen. The fact that commencement exercises are being held at a number of schools has increased business to a certain extent but this is not as marked as in some former years.

FLOWER GROWERS' AND RETAILERS' ASS'N.

The Flower Growers' and Retailers' Association held its regular meeting at the Chittenden hotel, June 6, with a good attendance. Following a dinner served at 6 p. m., the question of staging a flower show during the fall was discussed at length. Practically all of the members present were in favor of the show and to that end Henry Wilson was named a committee of one to investigate the advisability of holding it and report a plan. It was suggested that the exhibition be given under the auspices of some women's club and a small admission be charged to defray the expenses. After the expenses are paid the remainder is to go to the club lending its good offices. It is planned to have the show about the first week in November at a place to be decided later on. The meeting adjourned.

FLORISTS' TELEGRAPH DELIVERY MEETING.

A special meeting of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association will be held at the Chittenden hotel, June 16, when the question of broadening the scope of the organization will be discussed. It is planned to increase the use of telegraph orders in the sending of floral offerings, by an advertising campaign. Philip Breitmeyer, of Detroit, Mich., is president of the organization.

NOTES.

Business is somewhat quiet with the McKellar Flower Shop, but that is to be expected at this time of the year. The company has placed in service a new Dodge truck. A number of June weddings have been booked for the month.

Rudolph Zish, of the former firm of Zish & Dozer, retailers on North High street, has withdrawn from the concern and the business is now being conducted by James Dozer. Trade at this store has been very brisk.

The T. J. Ludwig Co., 82 North High street, is having a considerable amount of landscape work. Planting of shrubbery, and the arrangement of hanging baskets and porch boxes keeps them busy.

The Wilson Flower & Seed Co., 23 East Town street, enjoys a good call for seeds. Landscape work has also been a big feature at this place.

CORNELL UNIVERSITY.

The department of floriculture was honored by a visit from the foreign delegates who attended the conference of the Federal Horticultural Board, in Washington, May 15-16. On May 23, Mr. Lobjoit of England, Dr. Van Slogteren and Dr. Van Poeteren of Holland, spent the day inspecting the various departments of the university. Dr. Van Slogteren lectured to the students in floriculture on "Bulb Culture in Holland." The visitors were entertained at luncheon by Dean Mann and other officials of the college of agriculture. May 31, Louis Sander and Charles Pynaert of Belgium, stopped over while en route from Chicago to New York. They seemed intensely interested in methods of instruction as taught in an American agricultural college. An informal reception was given the delegates by the staff and students of the department of floriculture.

The classes in garden flowers visited Sonnenberg, the Thompson estate at Canandaigua, June 1, and the following day, the park at Rochester and George Eastman's estate.

Lectures for the spring semester ended June 6, and examinations are now in progress. At the close of the examination period several of the students will leave for practical work during the summer. Others will remain at the college for the courses given during the summer term. J. F. Larrabee and J. C. Curtis will be with the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown; H. P. Everts and R. B. Farnham on the Geo. W. Perkins Estate, Riverdale; A. H. Jackson, at Fosgate Farms, Cranbury, N. J., and J. H. Ford with A. L. Miller, Jamaica, L. I.

H. A. Pratt, an instructor in the department, who has been working for P. A. Danker, in Albany, for three months will resume his duties at the college, June 15.

David Murray, who has been superintendent of the college greenhouses for 12 years has resigned to accept a more lucrative position as manager of the range of the Bool Floral Co., Inc. Mr. Murray has been very efficient in his management of the greenhouses, and most courteous in his associations with the students. His leaving is deeply regretted by both faculty and students.

The roses in the test garden at Craig field promise to be at their best during the farmers' field days, June 22-23. The gardens will be open for inspection on those dates and any one interested will be welcomed. The irises are now in full bloom and the peonies will be at their best next week. The department expects to move the gardens during the summer and fall to a more accessible area where the soil is better suited for garden flowers.

Letters have been received from Prof. A. H. Nehrling announcing his safe arrival in England. He sailed de luxe on the Mauretania, May 16.

Cromwell, Conn.

A. N. PIERSON, INC.

Some one might say that the Cromwell Gardens and A. N. Pierson, Inc., are so well known that it is like "carrying coals to Newcastle" to write about them. At any rate, if that ancient wheeze is already out of date, it soon will not be unless our government and people take steps to end the coal strike. If it goes on indefinitely, the time may come when we will want to buy coal from Newcastle, if it has any to sell. This, however, has no reference to the above named firms, as they are wise enough to always have a large supply of coal ahead. In writing a brief sketch of these good friends of ours, it is puzzling to decide where and how to begin. Their activities are so varied that everything cannot be covered. It will not be far wrong to say that the Cromwell Gardens and A. N. Pierson, Inc., are a town within a town, for they have homes for their employes and carry on various activities that are supposed to be the functions of the average city. From their current catalogue we learn that: "The spring of 1922 is the fiftieth anniversary of the modest beginning made in Cromwell by A. N. Pierson, the founder of and now the president of the firm of A. N. Pierson, Inc."

The present ranges comprise nearly, if not altogether, 1,000,000 square feet of glass, with over 300 acres of land. Under glass, immense stocks of roses, carnations, chrysanthemums and other popular flowers for cutting are grown. On our recent visit we were particularly interested in the fine quality of the roses, Premier and Mrs. Warren G. Harding, that were being cut. Although there was activity in moving and cutting back old stock and planting too, there is yet a large area being grown on. Activity in preparing young plants for shipment was noted. Chrysanthemum planting was also well advanced. The range is rich in palms, ferns and other ornamental foliage plants. A house of cibotium ferns is particularly attractive, and we have never seen finer specimens, considering that this is not the best time of year to visit a range and observe enough to repay for the visit. An earlier visit would have shown a much greater stock of geraniums and other bedding plants, as these were pretty well sold out. It may be added relating to roses that in addition to those already mentioned, all the best kinds, both for greenhouse and garden culture, are grown. Necessarily, a large force is employed in the regular routine of growing, packing and shipping. In the large room where cut flowers are sorted and prepared for shipment quite a number of girls are employed. At this time of year repair work is an important feature. Work is well under way for a large boiler house of concrete.

A. N. Pierson, the genial founder and head of the house, is yet an active man. He is so well known in the trade that there is little we can say about him that would be new. But we may add that these great and successful enterprises speak for him. At his home we have found him the soul of hospitality. Nor can we conclude without saying a few words for Wallace R. Pierson, the clever and active son. A young man of great force of character, he is interested and active in all good works pertaining to the horticultural trade. A. F. F.

SUMMER DULLNESS CONTINUES.

There is little new to report on market conditions for the past week. Stock is arriving far in excess of the demand and for the most part of very inferior quality owing to the intense heat which has prevailed in New England for more than a week. White roses, sweet peas, lily of the valley and orchids are really the only stocks which have a market value and which keep moving with any show of regularity. All other material coming in is disposed of at the best offer obtainable for a part of it, the balance consequently going to the barrel. Up to the present time this is the quietest June for a number of years.

HAIL.

The amount of hail damage done to greenhouse property June 11 was greatly exaggerated when the first reports came in. The heaviest loser was Pierce Bros., Waltham, who had 2,000 square feet of glass smashed. Others who sustained damage were W. W. Edgar, Waverly; Frank Edgar, Wollrath & Son, Waltham; Osgood Bros. and A. Martev, Everett. The amount of damage done at these places was very small, according to later reports, though they were very fortunate, as the storm was the heaviest seen in and around Boston for many years. E. F. S.

New Haven, Conn.

WEDDING TRADE FAIRLY BRISK.

The people here, in common with those of other New England cities, suffered from the hot wave of the week ending June 10. Thousands resorted to the beaches, and it was not to be supposed that much interest would be manifested in the florist or his business. And yet, there are always some brave souls that, regardless of heat or cold, will go right along and carry out their pre-arranged plans. Consider getting married, for instance. It is a very important step, but people will get married, and many favor June for the ceremony. The foregoing reminds me that through one of the hottest days John N. Champion was toiling and perspiring over a wedding decoration. It may be said that the retailers of this city, so far as we could reach them, seem prosperous.

NOTES.

On June 4 the park commissioners and Superintendent Amebeyn escorted 39 aldermen through the park system and explained to them what it was all about. It appears that some of the city fathers had not previously taken much interest in the parks, but are now quite favorably impressed.

The Myers Flower Shop, 936 Chapel street, had a good plant trade for Memorial Day, and Mother's Day business was the best since the custom began.

Charles Munro reported satisfactory business. Mr. Munro has been making fine window displays with peonies and seasonable plants.

Myer Wilson, 56 Congress avenue, reported a good Memorial Day business. He takes an occasional trip to the New York markets.

S. H. Moore, of the S. H. Moore Co., has been well pleased with the condition of business. A. F. F.

Rochester, N. Y.

SATISFACTORY TRADE REPORTED.

Commencements, graduations, weddings, etc., constituted the bulk of the business the past week, and florists were busy. Peonies are plentiful at low prices. Carnations are becoming much smaller, and the quality is deteriorating. There is an abundant supply of pyrethrum, Sweet William, irises, yellow daisies, delphiniums, larkspurs and gypsophila.

NOTES.

Hart & Vick are enjoying a busy season in plants, seedlings, etc. Aster plants are very scarce, due to worms destroying many of them. Chas. Watford recently commenced his duties as a seed salesman with the firm.

The peony show, under the auspices of the Florists' Association, was staged in the Convention Hall annex, June 12-14, with Geo. T. Boucher in charge.

Jos. Werdein has been engaged by the Unique Candy Shop to act as manager for the new floral department the firm expects to install at an early date.

Geo. Kramer is at present working on models for the decorations of the industrial exhibition to be held here in the near future.

The rose show to be given by the local Rose Society is scheduled for June 16-17 at the Convention Hall annex.

J. M. Keller left recently for San Francisco, Calif., where he is attending the Shriners' convention.

Wm. L. Keller is at Sodus, on Lake Ontario, where he is having a fine time fishing.

Jos. Schum & Sons have a fine crop of irises and peonies. CHESTER.

COMMENCEMENT AND WEDDING TRADE BRISK.

With the numerous school commencements and wedding functions, the florists are enjoying a continuous round of business, many shops reporting daily clean-ups. Roses are the favorites and in excellent condition, Columbia and Mrs. Chas. Russell leading. Premier, Hoosier Beauty, Milady, Ophelia, Mrs. Geo. Shawyer, Sunburst, Killarney, Mrs. Aaron Ward, Cecile Brunner and even other kinds meet with ready sales. Among outdoor offerings calendulas, daisies, which grow wild in this country, sweet peas, gladioli, Cape Jasmine, from the south, snapdragons, Rubrum lilies, callas, etc., are plentiful. The plant trade is still booming, as the recent heavy rains have extended the season. The planting of all crops is very backward this year.

Geny Bros., the enterprising and capable florists, had the misfortune to be in the path of a very serious hail storm recently, 50,000 lights being smashed. No damage was reported on the stock, however. The loss was partially covered by insurance. M. C. D.

PATERSON, N. J.—McCabe, the Florist, is the name of an up-to-date flower shop recently opened at 368 Grand street.

OMAHA, NEB.—Paul Swoboda, brother of Geo. Swoboda of Hess & Swoboda, recently came on here from Pittsburgh, Pa., with his wife and family. Mr. Swoboda, who has had considerable experience as a grower and collector of orchids, talks of locating in the west.

DALLAS CONVENTION, JULY 5-7.

The ninth annual convention of the Texas State Florists' Association will be held at the Fair Park coliseum, Dallas, July 5-7. An excellent programme, with timely addresses by able speakers and numerous entertainment features, is being prepared and will be announced later. Dallas has long used the slogan, "The City of the Hour," and the meeting will be known as "The Convention of the Hour," and the officers of the association fully expect to have it live up to all that the slogan implies. Florists from other states are cordially invited to be present and see what a Texas convention is like and enjoy the southern hospitality for which the state is noted.

The trade is urged to make exhibits. There is ample room in the coliseum, and no charge is made for space. Those wishing to make reservations should communicate at once with Henry Greve, care Dallas Floral Co., Ross and Masten streets, Dallas, Tex., who will gladly take care of all requirements.

The officers of the association are: Otto Lang, Dallas, president; E. C. Suchy, San Antonio, vice-president, and Lewis J. Tackat, Fort Worth, secretary-treasurer.

Indiana State Florists' Association.

NEW ALBANY MEETING, JUNE 21-22.

The June meeting of the State Florists' Association of Indiana will be held Wednesday, June 21, at 3 p. m. at the greenhouses of Anders Rasmussen, at New Albany. On June 22 the members of the association will make a trip to the Wyandotte caves. This will be well worth your while, and we should have a large attendance.

Give your attention to the following details of the trip: they are important. A chicken dinner will be served at the cave at a cost of 75 cents. The cost of the trip through the cave is $1, which is a reduction of 50 cents. Those of you who intend to go should bring old clothes or overalls to wear in the caves, there not being enough at the caves to supply a large crowd. Do not forget this. It is important that as many as possible come to New Albany in automobiles, so we will have enough to make the trip and not have to engage any extra machines.

It is absolutely necessary that the members fill in the card that has been mailed, so the necessary arrangements for the trip can be made. This is a small thing to do and will help considerably. Fill it in and mail at once. If you want rooms reserved, indicate it on the card, also the capacity of your automobile and how many will be in your party. Bring the children, so they can visit the caves. The train for New Albany leaves Indianapolis at 7:55 a. m.

Plant Quarantine in California.

A report from Los Angeles, June 8, says "The whole quarantine aggregation is now on the coast and meet here today. A dinner was given to the party by the local trade. Interviews given by quarantine leaders at Sacramento, reiterate their intention to make no modification in the present operation of Plant Quarantine No. 37." Our correspondent says: "These are days of fanaticism, prohibition, and God only knows what other kinds of drastic laws, rules and regulations that make the average business man sweat blood. If 'every lane has a turn' this long and difficult one ought to come to an end soon."

Coal.

Union coal miners claim that non-union mines were unable to fill 50 per cent of the demand for coal. The operators in coke regions, they say, were demanding $4.50 a ton for soft coal, to cover the cost of maintaining guards at the mines. The pre-strike price was $1.25.

Secretary Hoover, of the Department of Commerce, in a letter to Homer D. Jones, Chicago, president of the National Retail Coal Merchants' Association, June 8, criticised him for the refusal of his association to co-operate with the government in the prevention of profiteering, which was brought out in recent correspondence between Mr. Jones and the secretary. Mr. Hoover declared there was no justification for the increase of $1.75 a ton to the consumer in Chicago.

Botanical Foundation.

A botanical foundation with unlimited finances came into existence at Yonkers, N. Y., with the recent appointment of Dr. J. M. Coulter, head of the botany department of the University of Chicago, as director. W. B. Thompson, Wall street financier, and a group of other millionaires in New York have joined to establish a foundation to do for plant life what the Rockefeller foundation does for human life. The foundation not only will devise means of combatting all forms of fungus and decay attacking plants, but will endeavor to evolve new and useful plants. The laboratories will be at Yonkers, adjoining the estate of Mr. Thompson.

National Flower Again.

Washington, D. C. — Representative Kissel, of New York, has introduced a bill in the house of representatives providing for the adoption of the daisy as the official national flower of the United States, which is addition to the recent bill of Representative Taylor, of New Jersey, designating the Mountain laurel as the official flower, as announced in our issue of May 20, page 890.

In London.

Americans attending the recent exhibition of the Royal Horticultural Society of England, at Chelsea, included Prof. Arno Nehrling, of Cornell university, Ithaca, N. Y.; E. H. Wilson, of the Arnold Arboretum, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; and John C. Wister, secretary of the American Rose Society, and president of the American Iris Society, Philadelphia, Pa.

American Peony Society.

The latest information is that the annual exhibition and meeting of the American Peony Society will be held in the Armory, Hamilton, Ont., June 16-17, with the Tecumseh hotel as headquarters.

Canada Express.

The prepayment of charges on express shipments destined to points in Canada, effective since April 15, 1920, has been cancelled and shipments for the dominion will be accepted with charges collect, effective June 15.

BUSINESS DULL.

Hot weather during the week ending June 10, made business duller with the retail florists than it otherwise would have been, as a large proportion of the population had gone to the sea shore. There is some difference of opinion relating to the volume of Memorial Day business. Summed up, we believe that the trade in natural flowers fell off. Speculators from Boston, Mass., brought in quantities of artificial stock, sold it cheaply and doubtless injured the business of some of the retailers.

NOTES.

This city is an agreeable place to visit at any time of the year and particularly attractive in June. The fine homes with ample surrounding grounds; the many fine trees and the great displays of flowering shrubbery make up a series of pleasing landscapes. And then there are the parks, for they are leading attractions. The rose garden at Elizabeth park is well known throughout the country. On our visit, June 8, only a few of the earliest sorts were in bloom, but there were many attractive features in hardy perennials. In the lagoon or winter garden thousands of water lilies were in bloom. At a distance parts of the lagoon looked like one great white bed. The bedding out of tender plants is completed in all the parks and many attractive features are promised with a little growth.

Out at the range of the W. W. Thomson Co., West Hartford, we found great activity in chrysanthemum planting. This firm has had a heavy cut of carnations and sweet peas. In one large house they have a fine crop of tomatoes and we are now picking them.

Carl Peterson, Whiting Lane, West Hartford, grows a great stock of bedding plants as well as cut flowers, and is a hard and successful worker who knows how to use garden tools. Making up window boxes is at present a feature at this range.

Geo. G. McClunie and G. W. DeFlong, Main street retailers, stated that the sales of artificial stock by transient dealers was injurious to their business. Mr. McClunie made an unsuccessful effort to have it stopped by the city authorities.

The Spear & McManus Co., of the Asylum street colony of retailers, thought that their Memorial Day business was as good as last year.

B. Yannelli & Sons, 31 Annawan street, have a considerable glass area and grow both plants and cut flowers and have had a good season.

At both the Coombs' stores it was stated that they had no complaint to make concerning Memorial Day trade.

At Lane's retail store, 180 Asylum street, we noticed attractive features and signs of prosperity.

At Welch's Flower Shop, which is very attractive, we found business progressing favorably.

Kenneth Mackay recently opened a retail shop in the Bond Hotel building.

TRADE CONTINUES ACTIVE.

Trade has continued active during the past week. Many June weddings have already taken place, and more are scheduled for the next two or three weeks. Numerous high school commencements and that of the Evansville College this week have added greatly to the volume of sales. Funeral work also has been fairly good. Roses and carnations continue in demand, and the quality is excellent. Sweet peas are selling satisfactorily. General trade conditions continue to steadily improve. The year, taken as a whole, has shown some improvement in trade over the corresponding period of last year. Dealers report the coal strike has not worried them in the least, and in some instances they have sufficient supply of coal to run them for several months. Outdoor plants are badly in need of rain.

Ernest L. Lutz, proprietor of the Maple Wood Gardens Greenhouses, Boonville, was at Indianapolis, Ind., last week attending a district meeting of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association. An inspection of the Davis Gardens at Terre Haute was also made. Mr. Lutz has been engaged in the floral business at Boonville since the close of the late war.

Mel H. Lockyear, of the Lockyear Floral Co., was at Boonville June 6, where he made an address before the weekly meeting of the Boonville Kiwanis Club and read some of his original poetry.

W. B. C.

Bridgeport, Conn.

Among the interesting people in the flower trade are the Herthals, who are known as the West End Florists. C. E. Herthal is a landscape gardener and devotes much of his time to that profession. Mrs. Herthal and their son look after the shop.

We could not fail to call on a brother member of the New York Florists' Club, Carl Cornelius Reck of John Reck & Son. We found a well stocked and prosperous store, and it was stated that both Memorial and Mothers' Day business had been satisfactory.

R. H. Hawkins, formerly at 1223 Main street, is now finely located on Fairfield avenue in the Stratfield Hotel building. He is ably assisted in the business by Mrs. Hawkins.

Amongst the oldest firms are James Haran & Son, who have a range and also an attractive store on Main street.

James Duggan, in the Post Office arcade, has a neat store and seems prosperous.

The Park Garden Flower Shop is an attractive and well-ordered enterprise.

BULBS, PRESENT and FUTURES

When you buy imported bulbs from us, you buy them by measure, in centimeters or inches and so accepted by us. This means much, as against those people who sell "firsts," "seconds" or "thirds" and give you no assurance as to what such grades measure.

BUSINESS IS A TRIFLE BETTER.

Business was very quiet last week, and the returns were very disappointing to the growers. Stock arrived in very poor condition, owing to the hot weather and the greater portion of it had to be dumped or sacrificed in order to make room for the new shipments that kept pouring in. Carnations were affected most, and roses popped open almost as soon as they reached the store. Stock in general showed the effects of the weather, but the quality is better at this writing owing to the cooler weather, and there is more life in the market than there has been for some time. Peonies are in large supply and are selling well, considering conditions. There are plenty in storage to last until some time in July, according to the dealers handling them in any quantities. Gladioli are a big factor in the market and are seen featured in the window displays and in the refrigerators of the retail stores all over the city. Roses are arriving in quantity, and the same holds true for carnations, with good stock obtainable in both lines. Lilies are quite a factor in the market, but are not selling as fast as they should. Lily of the valley is holding its own and so are orchids. Snapdragons, calendulas, sweet peas, daisies, delphiniums, larkspurs, statice, gaillardia, gypsophila, feverfew, lupines, cornflowers and all other miscellaneous indoor and outdoor stock is included in the offerings. Some late lilac is seen at one of the stores, and pond lilies are obtainable at a few of the establishments. Greens are in fair supply, with new ferns arriving in large quantities, and the supply of storage stock rapidly decreasing.

The Crucifixion of a Race

Here is tragedy.
The oldest Christian nation in the world is being crucified on the cross.
Only the spirit of pity and sacrifice that came into the Armenia and its people from martyrdom and death.

The black dogs of famine children are old in sorrow;

they are the only children, perhaps, who have never laughed.

within the next few weeks, unless you come to their rescue.
These are not the children of dren of the bread lines, who will rejoin the ranks of the June 11 was plant day at the Speedway hospital. Mrs. Griswold, who has been interested more or less in the welfare of sick and disabled soldiers, with the aid of school children, bought enough plants to cheer the boys for some time to come. The school children at Portage Park contributed enough money to buy 400 plants, and it took Peter Pearson, president of the Commercial Flower Growers' Association, a day to deliver them. Mrs. Griswold was so pleased with the results and co-operation received that she will endeavor to make it both an annual local and national affair.

Miss Marie Evelyn Risch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John P. Risch of Evanston and Raymond O'Donnell of Detroit, Mich., were married at the St. Nicholas church, Wednesday, June 14. The happy young couple will make their home at Detroit and have the best wishes of the trade for a happy and prosperous married life.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Chas. Elliott of Park Ridge, made a fine exhibit of outdoor sweet peas in six varieties, which he stated were all seedlings of his own raising. These were sown last November, carried through the winter cool but under cover and planted April 15 in the open from pots. The varieties, each of which received the club's certificate, were named Highland Mary, rose pink; Miss Winifred Jones, cream pink; Miss Myra Valentine, light blue; June Bride, white; Mrs. David Lloyd George, oleander pink, and Mrs. Chas. Elliott, blush. Mr. Elliott promised a paper on sweet peas to be read at one of the next season's meetings.

Guy W. French spoke against the substitution of baskets of fruit for baskets of flowers in the case of members who are sick, this being contrary to the club's rules, and inconsistent with the practice advocated by the trade of saying it with flowers.

Hans Jepsen invited the club to hold its next November meeting at his establishment in Maywood and inspect the large stock of chrysanthemums which will be at their best about that time.

The next regular meeting of the club will be held October 5.

BOWLING TOURNAMENT.

The bowling tournament, held after the meeting on the third floor of the Chateau building for the purpose of picking a team to represent the Florists' Club at the Society of American Florists' convention tournament in Kansas City, Mo., August 15-17, brought out much keen competition. The team representing the seed trade made the highest scores for the evening, leading the retailers by seven pins. Leonard H. Vaughan, captain of this team, was the star player of the series with the high individual score of 238 and an average of 195 for the three games played. Allie Zech was handicapped by a sore thumb. Six teams were entered in the tournament, representing the various branches of the trade, as follows: Retail florists, John Huebner,

Be sure that the name MEYER is on every spool of green Florists thread that you are buying, and you will get the original and best green Florists thread on the market. A great many of the salesmen on the road and the Florists' supply houses are substituting a cheap and inferior green Florists thread to take the place of the Meyer Green Silkline and Florists' thread.

Therefore, if you cannot get the real article send the goods back and order direct from the manufacturer and you will get the best. Guaranteed two ounces of actual thread to the spool, 16 ounces to the pound.

SUMMER DULLNESS DEPRESSING.

There has been considerable business the past week but flowers of all kinds are so plentiful that the demand hardly makes a dent in the stock, which accumulates and keeps prices so low that as one wholesaler put it who had a busy spurt on: "It looks as if we were doing $1,000,000 worth of business but when it is all counted up there is very little in it for anybody." Although peonies are going out there are still quantities seen and to make matters worse growers from New York state are shipping in some of their surplus. Roses are overly plentiful; all very good stock for so late in the season. Columbia appears to be the favorite although it is the most abundant. Four cents is the price for those who want 25 or 50 with stems 12 to 18 inches long, but 50 cents to $1 per 100 is the figure for 500 or more to the street men. The answer is that the retailer has his already sold for $1.50 to $2 per dozen while the street man is glad to double his money even at the low price. Carnations are coming in excess shipments and with some growers, though smaller, are of good quality but do not ship well and as there are many more than the local market can handle; prices rule very low, five to 10 cents a bunch to the clean up men. Outside stock is still overabundant; one wholesale house took in over 1,000 bunches of Larkspur belladonna the past week, the boys saying they got the blues handling it. Callas still hold out, mostly the Godfrey which stands the hot weather better than the Aethiopica. Easter lilies are also in full supply, so much so, that 10 cents is top price except when bought by the dozen, the exceedingly hot days of the past week bringing in next week's stock along with this. There will come a turn soon however as the outdoor material goes off and roses and carnations go below par, then the lily which is always standard in hot weather and ships splendidly in bud, will make handsome returns. Home grown asparagus is now to have an inning as the southern stock shows little more than skeleton sprays when it arrives and is not salable the second day.

week's issue, page 1042, there were very encouraging signs of a revival of interest, getting together to push the business collectively and a strong belief that the future had much in store for the trade if it will reach out and grasp it. Edward Reid's report of the Mother's Day campaign was very encouraging, he stating that with so much money raised on such short notice and coming so freely from all branches of the business, he felt sure that a well planned campaign laid out to quicken sales when flowers were most plentiful, would meet with a support that would be very gratifying.

A great opportunity to boost the business was seen in the coming Sesqui-Centennial in which the Florists' Club could become an important factor by taking an early interest and offering practical advice to the managers of the exhibition in all matters pertaining to plants and flowers and their display both in garden and decorative effects. There was also a strong hope expressed that this city would soon have an annual flower show on a large scale that would grow to be the social event of the year and become a great factor in increasing the love for flowers. This would now be a permanent fixture but for the reason that there was no building of sufficient size in which it could be held. The determination to secure the convention of the Society of American Florists, for 1926, the year of the Sesqui-Centennial, was another step forward in line with the other progressive propositions. The meeting adjourned.

NOTES.

A large wholesaler is of the opinion that the business needs better co-operation by both growers and retailers with the wholesaler. There are frequently great rushes in the early morning with a number of buyers all wanting to be waited on at once and all the phones at the same time ringing, calling this or that salesman from the floor, there is a confusion that could all be avoided if they would send their orders in the night before. Then growers frequently ship without notice large blocks of cut flowers without asking as to the condition of the market. "A grower made a shipment last week of almost 4,000 Easter lilies of which we knew nothing until they arrived." This is not good business and a man who has that much at stake ought to know better. Growers ought at all times to keep in close touch with their wholesalers, both as to what to grow and when to have it in quantity, as it is absolutely necessary to have a well balanced market to produce the best returns.

The Florists' Base Ball League was organized at a meeting in the S. S. Pennock Co.'s store, on Monday last. It is hoped to make it a 10-club league. Those who have definitely joined are the S. S. Pennock Co., Leo Niessen Co., M. Rice Co., Bickmore Greenhouses, Robert Craig Co., Independent, H. Baytsdorfer & Co., H. F. Michell Co., the Burton brothers, and probably Henry A. Dreer. The games were much enjoyed last season and all eyes are now fixed with envious pride on the A. M. Campbell silver trophy won last year by the S. S. Pennock Co.'s team, but which this season has only a nine to one chance to hold it. The first game will be played at Fairmount park, Thursday, July 6, games to follow as per schedule now being arranged, for every Monday and Thursday until September. splendid shape for the time of year. Forty cows have recently been added to the Jos. Heacock dairy at Roelofs. The herd must be kept up to around 200 to insure 150 milkers about 1,500 to 1,600 quarts a day being the product all bottled and sold as certified milk. Roses in the large houses are looking very well for the season.

Callas, carnations, roses and larkspurs are features of the Berger Bros. stock. Good gladioli are also seen in quantity. When asked about business John Berger said: "We manage to get away with most of the stock but it takes a lot of work these days."

Peonies, larkspurs and roses in variety are features with the Philadelphia Grower's Cut Flower Market. Bench rose plants from the August Doemling greenhouses at Lansdowne have had a good sale for planting outside.

The Leo Niessen Co. has handled an immense quantity of flowers the past week but find prices far from satisfactory for the good quality of the stock. Easter lilies, Mrs. Chas. Russell roses and lily of the valley are features.

Harry D. Manuel, of the Ardmore Flower Shop, Ardmore, reports a very satisfactory business since his opening at Easter.

S. S. Pennock, president of the Society of American Florists, addressed the New York Florists' Club, June 12.

George Aeugle is on the sick list and his many friends wish him a speedy recovery. K.

WEDDING, FUNERAL WORK FAIRLY ACTIVE.

There is little that is encouraging to report relating to the condition of business. A few of the retailers are having wedding decorations and there is a normal amount of funeral work. Taken together this keeps orchids and lily of the valley steadier than they otherwise would be. The hot and sultry weather is greatly increasing the supply of stock and in roses and carnations the quality is deteriorating. The American Beauty roses are poor and there is little demand for them. In sweet peas, while there is a flood of short stemmed stock, there is but little that can be called good. In addition to the peonies and the above mentioned there is now in the market a heavy stock of coreopsis, galliardias, Sweet William, feverfew, baby's breath and wild spiraea, and the street vendors are able to take their choice of such a number of things.

June 12.—Hot weather and humidity worked havoc on the wholesale market last week. Many carnations came into the market asleep or quickly lapsed into that condition, thousands being thrown out. Of possibly salable stock much of it went at 50 cents per 100, some even less. Roses opened up fast and many were lost. Quantities of garden stock were practically unsalable. One of the most experienced wholesalers has stated that it was the worst week for business since 1912. Although there is supposed to be some call for orchids this month there was a decided drop in prices.

CENTRAL PARK.

Under the headline: "Prevent This Outrage on Central Park," the Evening Mail, June 2, published a vigorous leading editorial. Excerpts follow: "The Author's League is extensively advertising what it magniloquently calls a 'Grand Fete Champetre and Midnight Carnival,' at the Central Park casino 'and grounds,' on Friday night, June 9, to which an admission fee of $11 a person will be charged." "The Evening Mail herewith enters a vigorous protest against this arrangement. It is to be presumed that the league, or whoever is promoting the affair, has obtained permission from the authorities. If so, this permission should be revoked. Central park is a great playground for all the people. It must be kept free from all commercial enterprises, whether the beneficiary is an individual, an association or a philanthropy. If the Authors' League can give a benefit there, what is to prevent the Skillet Molders' Protective Association from doing likewise? If private clubs are to be licensed to make such use of the park, what is to prevent some adroit organizer from creating some purely nominal club and using the park for his own personal gain? Here is a quotation from an announcement of the affair in the Authors' League Bulletin: " * * * We also get the grounds surrounding it (the casino), whereon we plan to erect booths, awnings, stalls, etc. We are working toward the general effect of a combined lawn party, costume dance and carnival. * * * A multitude of festooned colored balloons, to be eventually released and sent tossing over the heads of the crowd. Costumes of every conceivable kind and color. Confetti. A noble collection of trumpets and drums."

We will add, that it will be seen from the price of admission that it is aimed to make the affair appear high-brow, with some features of a county fair and circus side show thrown in. Later, Mayor Hylan directed Park Commissioner Gallatin to rescind the permit. The Tribune announced that Tony Sarg was chairman of the fete, and he "almost wept." In contrast to the ballyhoo authors, we will reverently mention an author widely different. Mrs. Mary Virginia Terhune, better known by her pen name, Marion Harland, died in this city, June 3, age 91 years. For 75 years she had been writing and the tens of thousands that have read her books can testify that they were all uplifting and instructive.

NOTES.

A storm of wind, thunder, lightning and rain swept the city on the afternoon of June 11. It only lasted about 15 minutes, but in that short time 50 lives were said to have been lost with over 100 injured. Dozens of row boats were overturned on Pelham Bay and eight bodies have been recovered, with twice as many missing. The lower part of the city suffered little. Fragmentary reports from Massachusetts indicate that considerable greenhouse glass was smashed by hail.

Mrs. Hahn, widow of the late Walter Hahn, died at her home in Maspeth, an outlying section of this city, May 28, aged 79 years. She was born in Germany but had long resided at Maspeth, where her husband carried on a growing business previous to his death in 1903. Mrs. Hahn is survived by one son, Waldemar Hahn, well known to the patrons of the Cut Flower Exchange.

John A. Foley, formerly a well known expressman in the wholesale district, was in a hospital for several months with a severe attack of pneumonia, but is now convalescent. He has given up the express business and now with his wife has a retail florist shop at East Orange, N. J.

The Boston Transcript asks: "Is it the popular idea of Memorial Day merely to decorate the parks with newspapers?" Newspapers in the parks are untidy, but not such an eyesore as our statue of Civic Virtue that stands in City Hall park.

John De Vincent, well known in the retail trade, who spends the summer at his home and garden, Park Ridge, N. J., is bringing in fine peonies to Sam Gilbert in the Eighteenth street market.

Manager Forman of the supply department of the Henshaw Floral Co., 31 West Eighteenth street, has recently shown us a fine stock of imported fancy pottery.

The Jos. Manda Co., West Orange, N. J., is sending to Traendly & Schenck, 436 Sixth avenue, fine stock of Cattleya mossiae and other rare kinds of cattleyas.

At a fashionable wedding in St. Bartholomew's Episcopal church, June 1, the 10 bridesmaids all carried blue delphiniums. The bridal bouquet mainly of BROOKLYN NOTES.

Wm. J. Kenney, formerly of Boston, Mass., who came here when the T. F. Galvin store opened, is now manager for Trepel Florist, Inc., at its store, Broadway and Halsey streets.

Morris Zarnow, who now conducts the shop known as the Marguerite Flower Co., 1392-1394 Broadway, reports good business.

One of the finest stores in this borough is that of Mrs. Katie Kopp, Broadway and Chauncey street, and it is well patronized.

The Clinton Florist, D. Halikas, proprietor, 406 Myrtle avenue, reported a good Memorial Day business.

H. Landsman, 888 Quincy street, has been having good sales of plants of which he keeps a fine stock.

REDUCED CONVENTION FARES.

A rate of a fare and one-half for the round trip, on identification certificates, for members and dependent members of their families has been authorized for those attending the meetings of the American Seed Trade Association, the Association of Official Seed Analysts and the Wholesale Grass Seed Dealers' Association to be held in Chicago, June 21-23. The reduced rate is contingent, however, on an attendance of not less than 250 members of the organization and dependent members of their families at the meeting holding regularly issued certificates from ticket agents at starting points, showing payment of a normal one-way fare of not less than 67 cents on the going trip.

Tickets for the usual one-way fare for the going journey must be purchased June 17-23, inclusive, and not on any other dates. Be sure to ask the agent for a certificate in purchasing ticket and do not make the mistake of asking for a receipt. If it is impossible to obtain a certificate from the local agent, buy a local ticket to the nearest point where a certificate and through ticket may be obtained to Chicago. Call at the station at least 30 minutes before the departure of the train for the certificate and ticket, signing your name to the former in ink.

Immediately on your arrival at the meeting, present your certificate to the endorsing officer, C. E. Kendel, as the reduced fare for the return journey will not apply unless you are properly identified, as provided for by the certificate.

A joint agent of the railroads will be in attendance June 21-23 to validate certificates. If you arrive at the meeting and leave for home prior to the arrival of the joint agent, or if you arrive at the meeting after the joint agent has gone, you cannot have your certificate validated nor secure the benefit of the return reduction. No refund of fare will be made on account of failure to either obtain a proper certificate or on account of failure to have the certificate validated.

If the necessary minimum of 250 regularly issued certificates are presented to the joint agent, and your certificate is validated, you will be entitled to a return ticket via the same route as the going journey at one-half of the usual one-way tariff fare from the place of meeting to point at which your certificate was issued up to and including June 27.

Return tickets issued at the reduced fare will not be good on any limited train on which such reduced fare transportation is not honored.

California Seed Crops.

Waldo Rohnert, of Gilroy, writes: "The acreage is much below normal in all items, running from about 20 to 25 per cent on lettuce to 75 per cent on onion. Seasonable spring rains have brought the crops forward in fair condition, especially lettuce, but much of that crop was sown late and the ultimate result is uncertain. Early radish appears excellent but that sown late is very uncertain and I think will show only a small yield.

"So far as biennials are concerned, onion is only fair as all of the crop growing in the lowlands suffered from too much moisture. There are probably not more than 300 acres of good onion in the entire state this year. Beet is practically a failure and carrot is still doubtful, but will hardly make a normal yield. The acreage planted to parsley, parsnip and salsify is much below the average and a forecast is rather difficult at this time, although a normal yield cannot be expected. Sweet peas are looking well. Business conditions have been exceedingly good and there is little doubt but that prices are advancing."

The L. D. Waller Seed Co., of Guadalupe, advises: "Prospects for annuals, which is our specialty, are good at this time. Many kinds are in full bloom including all of the sweet peas. As a result of the very careful work we have been doing at our 50-acre experimental tract the past few years, our strains of sweet peas are showing exceptional purity, so much so, that we have been agreeably surprised at the extreme rareness of a rogue. We fear one crop will not be over-abundant; the Ten Week stocks are showing such a high percentage of doubles that we wonder where the seed is coming from.

"We raise only a limited number of varieties of perennials and biennials but all those we do grow show prospects of an excellent crop."

The Henry Fish Seed Co., Carpinteria, writes as follows: "In the matter of production of beans exclusively for the wholesale trade, we can say the early part of the season was favored with frequent rains and later a continued cool weather with little late rain. We have lately had warmer weather, which we like now at planting time. We anticipate the yield from our crops will be 25 per cent to 40 per cent greater than last year on an acreage more than twice that of last season. While the sales to date have been very satisfactory, we still expect to have a moderate surplus to offer for fall delivery."

Northern Seed Business.

Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis, Minn., write as follows:

"Our early expectations for the present season have been more than fulfilled in the volume of business to date in all departments. The peak of the season was reached on Monday, April 24, when we received more orders than on any other day in five years. The week of May 1 to 6, exceeded in number of orders all previous records for the corresponding period, particularly in our bulk garden seed and packet departments.

"Our season is later than normal, very little seeding having been done prior to May 1. For that reason, we expect that the demand for seeds will continue well into June.

"Local retail trade is about the same as last year. Market gardens are seeding a large acreage, especially in peas, cabbage and onion.

"We are of the opinion that useful surplus stocks must be nearly exhausted. The extraordinary weather conditions in all seed producing countries during the past six months, and a reduced acreage in the culture of biennial crops especially, may cause acute shortages in many important varieties before another season.

"On the whole, we believe that conditions in the seed trade will be on a more satisfactory basis for all concerned before 1923."

Southern Seed Business.

H. G. Hastings of Atlanta, Ga., summarizes the past seed trade season in the south as follows: "Seed business in the south this past season has, so far as we have been able to learn, been generally unsatisfactory. Late summer and fall business, 1921, was fairly normal. Beginning early in January, some parts of the south suffered severe drought, other parts were almost continuously rained upon. Under both conditions, garden and farm work was practically at a stand still, when they should have been active. This delayed seed buying with the usual result, we are all familiar with. General business conditions are just about turning the corner and we look for distinctly better business in 1923. The south was the last section of the country to feel the depression and it is natural that it will be the last to recover. We anticipate a return to normal conditions in this section by October or November."

LILACS bloomed in China before the days of Confucius, and in Persia before the time of Cyrus.

BURLAP has advanced 2 cents per yard on light weights and 2½ to 3 cents per yard on heavy weights.

FRENCH growers are now quoting Manetti stocks at from $6.50 to $13.00 per 1,000 in Orleans, according to grade.

MONROE, MICH.—The salesmen of the Greening Nursery Co. held a meeting here June 7-8, over 100 being present. Chas. E. Greening, president of the concern, and others addressed the gathering.

The forty-seventh annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen will be held at the Hotel Wolverine, Detroit, Mich., June 28-30. The programme for this meeting will be found in our issue of June 3, page 1012.

SPRAYING walnut trees with lead arsenate at a strength of six pounds to 50 gallons of water is an effective method of controlling the butternut curculio, says the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture.

FLUSHING, L. I.—The Bloodgood Nurseries recently had two men arrested for the alleged theft of trees from its establishment. The men accused are Edw. Chafe and Boleslaw Charkinsky, who were held to the court of special sessions under bonds of $500.

THE June 5 bulletin of "Plan to Plant Another Tree," popularized by the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association, contains instructive articles on "Delphinium or Hardy Larkspur," "Columbines," and "Cultivate Now." Questions on trees, shrubs, flowers and gardening are answered without charge in the bulletin by J. A. Young, secretary of the association, Aurora, Ill.

Rosa Moyesii.

Rosa Moyesii, which was introduced by Wilson from western China and which has received a great deal of attention in England and in the middle United States where it is greatly valued as a garden plant, and as a parent in breeding new races of roses, has proved until this year a failure in the arborescence. The plants have not usually been entirely hardy here, and the flowers have been few and of poor quality. The plants, however, on the southern slope of Bussey hill were not injured last winter and are now covered with flowers. Rosa Moyesii is a large shrub up to 10 feet in height, with stout branches sparingly armed with short straight prickles and blood red flowers from an inch and a half to two inches and a half in diameter. The deep orange-red fruit is two and one half inches long, contracted below the apex, and as beautiful as the flowers.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, June 8, 1922.

Providence, R. I.

VOLUME AT LOW EBB.

The very hot weather of the past few days has brought out immense quantities of peonies and stock of all kinds, with the result that values are very low on all items at the present writing. Good peonies can be bought as low as $3 per 100. Although bedding and vegetable plants have sold rather slowly this season, sales the past week increased, which makes it more encouraging for the growers. June weddings have started, and it is keeping most of the stores fairly busy, although so far there has not been any large decorations of note.

The Biltmore Floral Store will open soon on the ground floor of the new Biltmore hotel, Washington street, and will be one of the finest additions to the trade. They will have a large establishment, with an entrance on Washington street, also one from the hotel corridor, and one of the finest ice boxes in the city. The refrigerating plant has a large coil of pipes in the ice compartment of the box, which is kept at any degree of temperature, doing away with the old-fashioned idea of ice.

John Roth & Co., located on Broad street for a short time, have moved again. H. A. T.

SIOUX CITY, IA.—Rocklin, Lehman & Co. have taken over the Glassacres Garden Nursery Co.'s greenhouses of this city.

VINCENNES, IND.—W. A. Reiman, Jr., of W. A. Reiman & Son, peony growers here, is attending the peony show in London, Ont.

They All Advertise.

A hen is not supposed to have Much common sense or tact,
Yet every time she lays an egg,
She cackles for the fact.
A rooster hasn't got a lot
Of intellect to show,
But none the less most roosters have Enough good sense to crow.
The mule, the most despised of beasts,
Has a persistent way
Of letting folks know he's around
By his insistent bray.
The busy little bees they buzz,
Bulls bellow and cows moo,
The watchdogs bark, the ganders quack,
And doves and pigeons coo.
The peacock spreads his tail and squaks,
Pigs squeal and robins sing
And even serpents know enough
To hiss before they sting.
But man, the greatest masterpiece
That nature could devise,
Will often stop and hesitate,
Before he'll advertise.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Annual Meeting and Exhibition, Syracuse, N. Y., June 15.

A Memorable Meeting.

Because of the notable work done by Dr. E. M. Mills in organizing a number of rose societies across the state of New York and because of the interest among amateurs in central New York state, the annual meeting of the American Rose Society was this year held in Syracuse, N. Y., June 15.

The officers of the Syracuse Rose Society planned and carried out a series of events which resulted in a day that will long remain memorable to the officers of the national society and others who were fortunate enough to enjoy this privilege.

The day began with the judging of the Syracuse rose show staged in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A., and except for the reduced number of exhibits, due to the ruinous rain storm of four days previous, this show reflected a standard highly creditable from the viewpoint of quality as well as quantity.
The park department had an extensive exhibit in the non-competitive class.
The judges were Frederick L. Atkins,
Rutherford, N. J., and John H. Dunlop,
Richmond Hill, Ontario.

At 12 o'clock the entire party of visiting rosarians and others, accompanied by 25 or 30 rose lovers in handsome high-powered cars, were whisked away over the hills and dales of this wonderful scenic country to Lake Skanateles, where luncheon was served at Krebs, famous to tourists, a fame certainly well deserved, as we soon found out from the luscious abundance of repast, followed by a feast of reason and a flow of soul with Dr. Mills presiding.
H. P. Dennison, who said, if he had his way all roses would be red, extended to the invited guests a cordial welcome, responded to, on behalf of the American Rose Society, by President Pyle, Leonard Barron, editor of the Garden

Magazine; John T. Roberts, lawyer, granger and farmer; A. L. Shepard, secretary of the Rochester Rose Society; F. L. Atkins, and Prof. E. A. White.
Each in turn regaled the guests with wit and wisdom rosewise. Krebs will ever remain famous along with central New York state's hospitality in the minds of visiting rosarians.

Another 20 miles run brought us to the magnificent home of Mr. and Mrs.
Hiscock, the former presiding judge of the court of appeals of the state of New York. Here was found a rose garden of luxurious appointment, exquisite taste and excellent culture;
complete beds of twenty roses of a kind, such as La Tosca, Willowmere and others.

In this notable garden was held the business meeting with the usual reports showing the treasury in a more healthy condition than for many years past and resulting in the re-election of the former officers, whose terms had expired in 1922, for the ensuing year:
Robert Pyle, president; F. L. Atkins, vice-president; John C. Wister, secretary; Charles H. Totty, treasurer. The following directors, whose terms expired in 1922, were re-elected for a term of three years: James Boyd, Dr.
E. M. Mills, George H. Peterson.

The Evening Session.

The evening meeting was held in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. and was attended by probably three hundred people and was in charge of the visiting rosarians, with the floor of the auditorium entirely devoted to rose exhibits. The audience after inspecting the roses arranged themselves in the gallery, and after the opening address by Dr. Mills, fifteen minute speeches were made by President Pyle on "The American Rose Society"; Samuel E. Hill-ger, president of the Auburn Rose Society, on "The Building of a Local Rose Society"; F. L. Atkins, on "Use of Roses in Public Places"; Fred C. Wallace, of Canandaigua, N. Y., on "Help for the Amateur," and J. Horace McFarland, on "Climbing Roses and Climbing Memberships," in which he clearly pointed out that the success of a rose society either local or national, depends absolutely upon the activities of the members themselves. He cited, as an example of the world wide influence of the American Rose Society, that he had just received a letter from a Countess in Italy, who, by reason of affiliation with the American Rose Society, had enjoyed the opportunity of entertaining in her garden a rose lover from Norway who was also a member of the American Rose Society.

It is impossible to express in cold type the enthusiastic appreciation felt by the visiting rosarians for the kindly reception and abundant hospitality offered them on this memorable visit.

In Auburn June 16, 1922, we were met by Samuel E. Hillger, president of the Auburn Rose Society, Mr. Adams, secretary, and by David M. Dunning, patron of the rose, long an eminent rose grower of Auburn. The officers of the American Rose Society were taken on a tour of Auburn, beginning with the famous prison, in which have been developed separate rose gardens for the men and for the women, not to mention the greenhouses. Then to the gardens of the Auburn Theological Seminary, Dr. Stewart presiding. The appreciation for beauty at this institution is evidenced in part by the magnificent Tiffany stained glass window which adorns the chapel.

Local Gardens.

We visited also the gardens surrounding the residence of the famous General MacDougal, George Pierson and Mrs. C. W. Ross. This series of visits found their culmination in the garden of David M. Dunning, whose success in growing outdoor roses has for many years made his home a mecca for rose lovers. A specimen of Frau Karl Druschki in veritable billows of bloom with wrist size trunks 10 feet high was only one of the outstanding varieties which included among others most prominently, Mrs. Weymyss Quinn, Glorie Chedane Guineasau, Maman Turbat, Lady Pirrie, Gustav Grunerwald, G. Amade Hammond, Avoca, a plant in full bloom, six feet high. Cissie Easlea, one of the richest yellows, though not quite the favorite with Mr. Dunning as is Daily Mail.

A lion rose on a trellis 12 feet high was a perfect blaze of color. He preferred Willowmere to Los Angeles and Red Letter Day, while similar in color was much more vigorous than Kitchener of Kartoun. Mr. Dunning's choice among hybrid perpetuals, of which there were many, were Anna de Diesbach, Baron de Bonstetten and Ulrich Brunner.

Having looked in at the country club the party was welcomed at the home of a miracle worker, at least you would think so if you realized the transformation that had taken place since April, 1920, when Mr. Ferrin had begun with bare ground. Today he welcomed to his home some 75 guests who came, saw and were filled with delight upon seeing the display in full bloom, of some 300 rose plants, including not only climbers, the best of which was Paul's Scarlet Climber, polyanthas, among which Greta Kluiss, and Marie Parvie were outstanding sorts, the latter a most inveterate bloomer, but probably most distinguished among the roses in this new garden, where tree roses planted only a year ago last autumn but with heads of generous spread with 12 to 18 blooms to a plant. After a delightful luncheon from the dining room overlooking the beautiful Lake Owasco, Mr. Ferrin explained that it did not require a million dollars or a large property to have roses, but he moderately presented this little example of how he had started with a swamp, and in less than two short years had demonstrated the possibility of a rose garden on a 30 by 100 foot lot, within easy reach of a modest purse. The demonstration was indeed a delightful example. Mr. Ferrin called in turn upon the newly elected president of the American Rose Society, who gave a short address on "Popularizing the Rose."

J. Horace McFarland, who was introduced as editor of the Rose Annual, presented several groups of the best roses and those especially adapted for use as shrubs. F. L. Atkins was introduced as father of the tree roses that Mr. Ferrin had planted, and demonstrated to the audience how tree roses may be successfully grown.

At Auburn.

Returning through Auburn the party visited the scene of the rose show to be staged in the Chamber of Commerce the following day, and as they left town were impressed with the completeness of Auburn hospitality, by hearing the chimes from a neighboring church peal forth the "End of a Perfect Day."

In this little two day journey, the officers of the American Rose Society were fortunate in being able to visit the Rochester Rose Show. For more than one generation has Rochester been known as the "flower city," but it remained for the young blood of the present day of floral enterprises, to put Rochester on the map again rosewise. Through the capable career of this organization, started by a master hand within the last two years and stimulated into active service by the rose patron of these parts, Dr. E. M. Mills, they have grown until the rose show of this year marks a triumph for scope, extent and quality. Other people have much to learn and as do nearly all amateurs, but when you can get close to 1,000 people to come out of a night and study your roses, (to say nothing of the arduous labors of staging such shows on the part of many of the busy business men and hustling housewives), you have certainly made great progress, and so far as it appeared to some of the visitors, it would seem as though Rochester would soon be in the lead, indeed, if not already there.

John Dunbar, of the park department, with his assistant, Mr. Dukelow, used two entire tables to display climbers and species of bush roses in extensive varieties, clearly labeled. Outstanding among the exhibits by the amateurs was a huge bowl of Old Gold, a first prize winner, a stately display of Paul's Scarlet Climber, and a charming vase of Souv. de Claudius Pernet.

Very few nurserymen were in attendance at the hour of our visit. Charlie Malloy was there, an integral part of the former Ellwanger & Barry, and right in his element. Albert L. Shepard, secretary of the Rochester Rose society; Mr. Glenn now with the Vick Seed Co. and Mr. Baird, were all busy active boosters among the larger group, who are making the Rochester Rose Society the largest in the Empire State.

Carnation Sprays.

The custom is now in growing carnations for market to sacrifice all the flowers on a stem save one, so that the production, in order to get quality, is only about one-fourth of what it might be.

Charles P. Mueller, Wichita, Kans., reverses this plan when he desires to get a quantity of any particular variety or color, by removing the terminal or first bud when it is well along. The remaining from three to five buds, depending on the variety, will then come along quite evenly, opening at about the same time, making a fine spray that works up in clusters or baskets, or can be put into boxes of cut flowers. This treatment is particularly useful for the Mothers' Day trade, providing a much larger stock than under the old single flower method of culture.

Mr. Mueller has a neighbor who grows his Laddie this way all the season and finds it to be much more profitable than when he only got the terminal flower. While these sprays do not stand up like those on a single stem they are somewhat of a novelty and will be found useful in many kinds of floral arrangements.

WASHINGTON SOCIETY WEDDING DECORATIONS.

Washington Society Wedding Decorations

The first cabinet wedding of the administration gave not only society but also the artist an opportunity to display its splendors. Candidum lilies and long trailing asparagus decorated the altar before which Miss Catherine Hughes became the bride of Chauncey Lockhart Waddell. The stately lilies and green arranged in the tall altar vases, were in keeping with the simplicity of the Bethlehem chapel of the cathedral of St. Peter and St. Paul, where the chosen few of the family and diplomatic circles were invited. The bride's simple gown of satin, relieved by pearls, was further enriched by her bouquet of lily of the valley which the society editor of the leading Washington paper, the Star, described as "a marvel of the florist's art, a fan-like background of white ostrich feathers and a shower of the lilies and gauze ribbon completing the dainty ensemble." The pastel shades of the gowns of the bride's attendants were further enhanced by their bouquets of Butterfly roses combined with that novelty which is an ever-increasing joy to the florist—blue lace flower. The finishing touches were added by delicately toned bows of brocaded ribbon matching the respective gowns.

But at the Pan American Union, where ample space welcomed both society and decorator, the Louise Flower Shop reigned supreme with pink ramblers. For the first time the massive white pillars of the hall of the Americas were decorated, with long trailing sprays of the rambler extending from the palm and fern banked bases to the very thirty-five foot tops. The north end was a bower of green, delicately relieved by pink rambler and candidum lilies, furnishing an admirable setting for the bridal couple and the secretary and Mrs. Hughes to receive the three thousand guests. At either end of the background were vestal virgin stands of lilies and ramblers, sprays of the latter reaching the floor. Pink roses and blue delphinium were used in decorating the tea table in the Columbus room where the bridal party and the president and Mrs. Harding were served. The same decorations were used on the tea tables in the map room.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

The coming week will be the last of the season, the first of July ushering in the new business year for the florist. Many other lines of trade close their books January 1, but the busy florist retailer is then in the middle of his best trade period, and while the books are kept up to date, the large stock is changing and being turned so frequently, with the working out of well planned campaigns, that no summing up will at this time give an accurate account of the results of the year's business. On July 1, however, when stock in all lines has been sold as close as possible, a balance can be struck that gives exactly the profit for the preceding twelve months.

In the all important matter of the inventory, be sure to mark off depreciation of delivery cars, decorative appliances, and other such stocks that show the season's wear. Any appreciation of real estate is to be added and the increased revenue it would bring if rented to other firms charged up so as to get as nearly as possible the overhead or cost of doing business. There is nothing more important than exactly the percentage of cost, in transacting a dollar's worth of business. The rent, salaries, delivery, light, heat, waste, deterioration of stock, bad bills, stationery, paper, cut flower boxes, advertising, and many other incidentals are all nibbling at the dollar, and as long as they exist, you must stand aside until each is satisfied.

It is a good time to review the business of the past year, month by month, and see where, here and there, it could have been improved, more economically conducted and perhaps increased in volume. The greater the amount of business within the store's facilities the less the overhead and larger the profit. It is keeping busy all the time, making intensive use of the annual floral holiday opportunities and others that you create or bring about to fit in between, that makes the most use of the fixed expenses.

Begin right now along economic lines in keeping the store force busy, making up all kinds of stock in prepared foliage wreaths, these in regular sizes are used every day in the year, and especially at holiday seasons are sold in great quantities. The most valuable asset at a busy season, or in an emergency, is time, or the readiness of the employees to at once turn out work that this preparedness has enabled them to have in stock for instant delivery.

Good Easter lilies will be the standard stock from now on for sprays and other floral work, they do not deteriorate with hot weather as does other greenhouse stock and have exceptional good shipping qualities. They also keep longer than most other flowers out of water.

Rambler rose sprays should be made the most of while they last, they are very efficient in all decorative effects and arrange well with other flowers. Practical pruning has much to do in producing fine sprays, all the old flowering wood should be cut away as soon as the blooming period is past. The neglected plants soon get into a tangled mass of weak shoots from the old wood that is easily mildewed and production for next year greatly impaired.

Display cut flower boxes made of tin, in stock sizes, and painted to resemble the regular holders, can be used with good effect for displaying flowers in window or cut flower case. There should always be a box or two nicely arranged, the artistic placing of the flowers giving them a "take me" appeal that often makes the sale. The advantage of the metal box is that it does not sag, the flowers can be sprinkled frequently, and when sold the contents are transferred bodily into the folding box of the same size.

This is the time to go over and revise the mailing list, adding the names of those to whom plants or flowers have been sent by customers during the year and prospects obtained in the many ways open to those on the alert. Envelopes and special post cards can now be addressed in sets, sufficient for the entire season. Direct publicity is by this means available to the store's patrons and prospects on the shortest notice or as quickly as the matter can be gotten from the printer. If the addressing had to be done at a busy time it would most likely be delayed or perhaps postponed until the opportunity was lost. There is no question but great results accrue from keeping the entire list of customers and others, all flower buyers, constantly in close touch with the store by frequent notices relative to the plants and flowers in season and special and quantity sales as they occur. Special post cards that cost but one cent to mail will carry the message and be sure of at least a once over glance, which if it arouses interest means a visit to the store, with most likely, purchases of the specials or other articles. When regularly sent out or as occasion demands these notices are a wonderful stimulant to business.

Hollyhocks with their gay shafts of color are splendidly decorative and can be displayed in window and store to good advantage at this time.

PLANT NOTES.

Office House Cleaning.

Nearly all growing establishments at the present day have what is termed the office, and during the busy season, in many places, but little attention is given to keep it in a tidy condition. Now is the time, after the carnations are housed and before the fall work commences, to have a thorough cleaning up of the office and workroom and get them in readiness for the coming season. Get all the papers filed away in proper shape and fix up all accounts as far as possible, and thereby get rid of much of the worry and trouble. Clean up the workroom and give it a good coat of paint, and straighten out the supplies. If the stock of baskets has grown dirty, get a little gold paint and give them a coat of this, which will certainly make them more attractive than the dingy supplies too often seen hanging on the walls or standing around. The florist who seldom appreciates how the customer likes to trade in a clean, up-to-date place, and often endeavors to excuse the dirty appearance by remarking: "It is impossible where so much dirt is handled to keep the place clean." Such a one is only fooling himself. The present-day customers, of whom many are ladies, know better; they see other places that are kept neat and clean, and they cannot be imposed upon with such tales. Now is the time to get everything shipshape for the fall and winter trade.

Anemone Japonica.

One of the most useful perennials for the fall is the Anemone japonica. It blooms at a time when flowers are very scarce, and if planted where it can be protected from the early frosts, will produce quantities of bloom that can be made of use in all classes of floral work. The successful blooming of this plant depends much upon its summer culture. If the season is dry, it will require constant watering, in fact, a good soaking. It is a good plan to place the hose in a bed of this and let the water run until the ground is thoroughly wet, and do this as often as may be required. It will amply repay in the long strong shoots, full of blooms, that will be produced in the fall. The florist not possessing a good stock of this beautiful perennial should procure some of it and plant a bed for fall cutting.

Compost Pile.

The extra help that is so often employed during the spring trade can be utilized for a few days, before they are let go, in getting together a good compost pile, and there is no better time of the year than the present to do this. The sod can be taken off now after the mowing with no great amount of grass upon it, and if stacked at this time, the warm summer days will soon rot the sod and make the pile fine and mellow. So many growers will spend their money for coal and labor and skimp on that most necessary thing for good production, the soil upon which the plant depends for its culture, and again put the matter off until the fall, when the days are cold, the soil too often full of moisture, and the hauling poor, which makes the work more expensive, and in the end, not having as good an article for the succeeding year. It is not necessary to stack the manure with the pile at this time, but if ground bone is to be used, it is better to sprinkle it into the pile now. Bone dissolves slowly and the earlier it is incorporated in the soil the better, and it also helps the rotting of the sod. Take advantage of the slack time with both the men and teams and get the compost pile up at once.

Pansies.

For winter blooming the seed of pansies should be sown early. Procure a strain of seed that will produce large flowers, and unless they are to be grown in considerable quantities mixed colors are to be preferred. To obtain plants enough for winter blooming it will be better to plant the seed in flats and place them in a cool, shady location in the house, where they are much more easily cared for than out in the open. If such a location is not to be had, they can be sown in a cold frame and a sash that is quite heavily shaded placed over them until the plants begin to grow. As soon as large enough they should be planted in a cold frame until the bench is made ready, about the middle of September, in the house. The soil for winter growing should be good, and of the richest, in order to obtain large flowers, and the house in which they are planted should be maintained at a cool temperature, about 45 degrees at night, after settled fall and winter weather commences. Pansies are not, as a rule, troubled much with insect pests, but sometimes in the fall, in the houses, they are attacked by green fly and they are quickly checked in their growth if the aphid gets a good hold upon them. A careful watch should be maintained, and if they are found to be infested with aphid, constant spraying with nicotine solution will keep the insects down.

Delphiniums.

This perennial has become quite a popular cut flower for summer use and is very decorative and showy. Those that have a stock can increase the plants of the better varieties by propagation at this time. When the plants bloom, those that produce the best spikes and are of the best colors should be marked. After the blooms are cut the small growths that break from the stem are very easily rooted. Prepare a bed in a shaded frame and insert the cuttings, watering heavily when first put in. They will need frequent syringing during the hot weather and will root in three or four weeks, when they can be either potted or planted in a frame where they can be given attention. As soon as well established they can be planted in their permanent location, but should be given a little protection during the first winter by throwing a little old straw or some such material over them.

Bougainvilleas.

The plants of bougainvillea that are through blooming should be cut back into shape and potted in preparation for the next season's growth. Much depends upon the summer care of all hard-wood stock if nice specimens are to be grown. They should be plunged outside in a frame or placed in full sun in a light airy house. Outside culture is far preferable for all this class of stock in order that a good strong growth, well furnished with foliage, may be assured. Be sure that they never get too dry. The great danger of all hard-wooded stock is letting it dry out, for it does not show it as quickly as the softer growing plants, but the check is more severe and the plants seldom fully recover from it. The young stock rooted earlier should be placed in a similar location, and kept well pinched back into shape, until enough shoots have been obtained to insure a good shapely plant, when they can be allowed to grow freely, but any extra strong leaders are better cut back during the season. Any chance flowers that show should be picked off at once, that a good strong stocky plant may be obtained and the strength all retained for that purpose.

Carnation Plant Shipments.

PACKED IN BOX FOR EIGHT WEEKS.

That young carnation plants taken from pots, can be boxed, transported long distances and arrive in good condition, has been fully demonstrated as shown in the following article, taken from the May 31, issue of the "British Horticultural Trade Journal" describing one of the features of the recent Chelsea flower show:

C. Engelmann, Saffron Walden, does a large export trade in young carnation plants, and invariably consignments on their journeys to foreign parts are seven or eight weeks before reaching their destination, but testimonials usually come to hand regarding the packing and arrival in first-class condition. Mr. Engelmann said he had never seen one of his own consignments after being packed for eight weeks, so for his own edification and that of others he had two boxes packed eight weeks before the show and two boxes four weeks before the show, sealed and signed by Lord Lambourne, president, and Mr. Dykes, secretary R. H. S., and placed in cold storage in London. The boxes were sent to Saffron Walden on May 22, returned to Chelsea on May 23 and opened in the presence of Lord Lambourne and Mr. Dykes. The plants had not turned a leaf, they looked as fresh and indeed were as fresh and as full of health and vigor as they were when packed, neither had any one plant moved a fraction of an inch from its original position, amply demonstrating the suitability of the method of packing adopted. To see the boxes opened, the carnations looking as fresh as if they had been packed eight minutes instead of eight weeks, made the export of carnations seem easy—but it all depends on knowing how to do it. Mr. Engelmann has certainly solved the problem, and can, with confidence, despatch plants to any part of the world. The boxes, after being opened, were on view in the Scientific Tent of the R. H. S.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.—Gen. A. J. Gooch, who has been associated with his sister, Mrs. R. E. Darbee, in the florist business in this city for some time, has purchased the establishment. Mrs. Darbee plans to spend a year in European travel, and upon her return, will open one of the finest flower shops in this country.

THE S. A. F.

Trade Exhibition Aug. 15-17.

From reports received, it would seem that a few prospective exhibitors in the trade exhibition have the idea that all the space in the exhibition has been sold. This is not the case. The floor ing final return limit, providing a train selected reaches the original starting point prior to midnight of the date limit. Certificates will be furnished on application to the secretary of the society. One certificate will suffice for each member, and includes the dependent members of his or her family. These certificates should be properly filled out before presentation to the ticket agent.

ladies at the convention. This folder is already prepared, and is in the hands of Mrs. A. M. Herr, the secretary of the organization, and, on completion, will be sent out from the Society of American Florists administration offices.

The Official Programme.

President S. S. Pennock has recently spent a day or two at the secretary's office, in conference as to the official program for the convention, with the result that the draft of the programme is nearly completed, and will be ready for press very shortly. In addition to the business which may be considered, more or less, as routine, subjects pertinent to the florists' industry, some suggested through our membership, are finding places on the program, and promise to be most interesting.

National Publicity Campaign.

The publicity committee are pleased to observe a little more than ordinary enthusiasm on the work of the campaign considering the time of year. As will be seen from the subscription returns herewith, the campaign is a live issue in the thorough acceptance of the term. These returns really may be considered as our "honor roll," and while, perhaps, none of the amounts records seem big, they are important as units in the fund's maintenance. Of the items recorded, mention might be made of the $25 per month subscription of John Breitmeyer's Sons, Detroit, made direct to the campaign, and segregated from other subscriptions to publicity work made by this firm. A substantial subscription is also recorded as from J. C. Vaughan of Chicago.

In the past week the secretary's office has been busy sending out memorandums of subscriptions by a number of subscribers. It is earnestly hoped that these memorandums—one hates to call them "bills"—will receive immediate attention. It is a case of "money makes the mare go!" with the committee, and with money in hand they are prepared to carry out their plans for what they consider the best advertising to be obtained in the magazines—and it should always be remembered that the advertising pages of the best magazines are laid out many weeks in of the exhibition building is so laid out that there is a large oval space in the center, with arcades at the east and west. The space in the oval is, as has been announced, all reserved, but there are several very good locations still to be had in the arcades, none of them at a disadvantage in comparison with the other locations. Prospective exhibitors, therefore, are urged to send in their applications for space without delay, and may rest assured that with promptness on their part they will be accommodated with reservations.

All exhibitors are advised that any decorative material, coverings, etc., used on their exhibits must be fire-proofed. This is not a regulation of the Society, but of the fire department of Kansas City. Indeed, it is a requirement in all cities of the first class. Exhibitors who carry such material with their exhibitions would find it advisable to have the fire-proofing done before shipment, thus avoiding much trouble and delay.

The following exhibitors are in addition to the list published last:

Robt. Craig Co., Norwood, Del. Co., Pa.
Joseph Heacock Co., Wyncote, Pa.
Lindley Box & Paper Co., Marlon, Ind.
Morehead Mfg. Co., Detroit, Mich.

Railroad Rates.

Members and delegates, and dependent members of their families, journeying to Kansas City, will be able to purchase round trip tickets at the rate of one fare and one-half on the identification certificate plan, good via the same route in both directions only. Return tickets must be validated at Kansas City by ticket agents at the regular ticket offices of the lines for which they are issued, on any date to and includ-

Convention Business.

The state vice-presidents are urged to send in their reports early. These reports, under a new arrangement entered into by the executive board, will be printed in full in the new annual volume which will be a feature of the society's records in the coming year. State vice-presidents who attend the convention may bear in mind that the official programme will provide for a meeting or council especially set apart for them.

Commercial Flower Growers' Association

The annual meeting and banquet of the Commercial Flower Growers' Association of Chicago was held at the Hotel Randolph, June 15. The business meeting was called at six p. m. with an attendance of a good representation of this branch of the trade. President Peter Pearson presided. The feature and principal business was the election of officers which resulted as follows. Peter Pearson, President, George Ball, vice president, Otto Amling, secretary, Paul Amling, treasurer. Andrew Benson, trustee for three years, taking the place of Walter A. Amling. Peter Pearson was chosen to represent the association at the National Flower Growers' annual convention at Kansas City in August.

With the adjournment of the business meeting, the members met their ladies, who with a number of invited guests, enjoyed a very good dinner which was given in the same room. The tables were nicely decorated with flowers, a novelty being baskets of growing pink hyacinths, which were just as beautiful as those seen at Easter. This was a little surprise by President Pearson who demonstrated that other spring flowers can be retarded the same as lily of the valley.

At the close of the dinner President Pearson called attention to the local publicity campaign in which the growers were so deeply interested and asked H. E. Larson, who represented Hilmer V. Swenson & Co. to give some data relating to their handling of this advertising through the local papers. Mr. Larson stated that at the recent convention of the advertising men of America, a prominent English delegate had stated that America was 50 years ahead of any other nation in publicity work.

Local campaigns, he said, such as florists were carrying on in Chicago and other cities, were unique, as they were almost alone in this effort to create a demand for their products. There were several national campaigns such as those of the orange and raisin industries, paint and a few others, but all these were national. He said the interest in the local campaign was increasing very satisfactorily as shown by subscriptions, one wholesale house paying in May last year $803.00, and raised it this year to $1,100.00. He displayed the advertising copy now being run in the local press for June, which in one insertion in six papers with a combined circulation of 1,800,000 cost $700.00. This called attention to weddings and wedding anniversaries and how appropriate flowers were for these occasions.

C. H. Porter of the Kirkland-Porter Co. who had charge of reading and pictorial publicity gave an interesting account of this branch of the local work. They had found it difficult at first to get anything across about Mothers' Day on account of the profiteering propaganda engineered by Miss Jarvis. Only one paper was favorable, but they finally convinced the others that their viewpoint was wrong, and florists were not gougers. Photos were just as interesting as reading matter and they had succeeded in getting across a lot of pictures in which flowers were carried or used in various ways. From May 1 to June 15, in six local papers they had been able to have published 207 stories and pictures which occupied 34,112 agate lines which if paid for at the regular rates would have cost over $20,000. The combined circulation in which these notices and pictures appeared, amounted to 74,550,000 copies all of which should help in making it the custom to wear and use flowers.

Carl A. Rock and Loren R. Miller officials of the Uptown Exposition Co. spoke of the very prominent part the florists had taken in their last successful show, particularly praising Peter Pearson's energetic efforts. Herman Schiller stated he would like to see a national flower show brought to Uptown Chicago, which, with the help of the florists of that section, who were a unit in matters pertaining to the general good of the trade, would he felt sure, be a grand success.

President Pearson then described the local advertising that had been used the past season, copies of which were shown on a large screen. He said that newspapers were by far the best medium for local publicity as in this way was built up interest, enthusiasm, desire, and then action. If it is kept up the trade is bound to prosper.

After several very good amusement features by vaudeville artists, dancing was enjoyed the balance of the evening.

Kansas City, Mo.

THE CONVENTION CITY, AUG. 15-17.

Kansas City, when it invited the members of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists to meet within its gates, did not do so merely for the meeting alone. Kansas City is an important component of the nation. Its importance, judged by its growth as outlined in the following paragraphs, is constantly increasing. Financially it exceeds more than a dozen cities larger in area and population. To keep itself in tune with the nation its advancement along industrial and all other lines of human endeavor must be equally as far reaching.

For this reason the visit of any organization whose object is trade, business, art, music, education, religion or in any other effort is the establishing and maintaining of higher ideals is doubly welcomed. As an important component part Kansas City welcomes the analysis to which it is subjected annually by thousands of visitors and convention delegates.

It might be well to emphasize at this point that few cities have the excellent convention facilities afforded by Kansas City. It is, in both a geographical and anatomical sense, the "Heart of America." Even as all roads led to Rome in the days of the Empire, so all roads of this great nation lead to Kansas City.

Thirteen trunk lines of railroads with 32 subsidiary lines bring passengers by rail. For convention sessions it is the cheapest place for delegates to gather in the aggregate, for the average railroad fare and average traveling time from all points of the country to Kansas City are both lower than the average time or rate to any other city. All national trails of importance lead to Kansas City and recent improvements in road conditions has swelled the traffic to enormous proportions. Kansas City is the gateway to a huge industrial and agricultural region, the great southwest.

These facts alone assure the prospective visitor that accommodations here for his care and comfort are more than ample. In the downtown district can be found more than one hundred hotels, with unequalled scope of service. Restaurants, coffee shops, cafes, and cafeterias are numerous and efficient. Theatres are the latest in construction and show the latest in films, vaudeville and drama. In short, Kansas City is an ideal convention city, ranking with the largest in the east or extreme west. But, aside from the fact that it has the facilities for the material comfort of convention delegates, Kansas City has much to offer in the way of civic beauty. A short historical sketch at this point may serve to illustrate the accomplishments of this gateway to the west.

The State of Missouri, last year, celebrated its one hundredth birthday. In 1821 Kansas City was but a cluster of small villages, where caravans were outfitted for their long and perilous journey into the unknown west. The "Town of Kansas" as Kansas City originally was known, was incorporated in 1839. The name came from a tribe of Indians called by the French "Voyageurs," the Kahns or Kansas. It did not come, as many erroneously believe, from the name of the state of Kansas, as all the territory to the immediate west was then known as the Nebraska territory. The state was named later and from probably the same source.

Kansas City's historical setting may not be as bright as that of many older American cities but it has a deep interest to the student of American life and progress because of the rapid transition from the Indian to the civilization of the present day. In addition, the "City of Kansas," the name by which it was known during the days of the Civil war, was the greatest factor in the building of the great west. During the Civil war Kansas City was the key point to the west for which both Confederacy and the Union struggled. Here in the early days of the war was fought the battle of Westport, 29,000 men being engaged. At the end of the third day of fighting the northern forces sent the southern army down to defeat.

Then began an era of progress which has had few equals in the civic history of America. The trend of civilization moved rapidly towards the west and the passing pioneer halted, surveyed the difficulties and stayed to conquer. In 1880, however, there was but 85,000 people in the city and its environs. This was 40 years ago. Today, in greater Kansas City, there are more than a half million, with an increase recorded in the census just closed of more than 30 per cent in the last 10 years. Kansas City began work on its boulevards in time to insure their being established within the city rather than being forced written by Andrew Wright Crawford, to build them around the outskirts, and great areas were preserved for residential purposes. Kansas City is America's most beautiful city. An article city planning expert of Philadelphia, says in part:

"Of all the actual accomplishments that American cities can boast, none surpasses the park and boulevard system of Kansas City. That system is making Kansas City famous. It is in its completeness, the pervasiveness, in the way that it reaches every quarter and section of the city, that it surpasses the park systems of other cities of the world. European authorities freely admit that in park system American cities lead the world. These foreigners point to Kansas City as the best example of this branch of city planning."

Kansas City will present to the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists the making of a beautiful picture. Fifty years hence, the artist will find it unfinished but growing in beauty and splendor, for there is nothing to prevent the city adding to the beauty that is now within its borders. Cliff Drive, a small part of the system, is built in the sheer bluffs that line the Missouri river on the north. For three and one-half miles the visitor is carried along the smooth surface of this most beautiful drive in America, where scenes of majestic grandeur follow in rapid succession. Every foot of the drive is a delight to the visitor, both from the magnificent view afforded and because of the daring of its conception.

The reciting of the additional advantages of this system, such as the 32 large parks, including Swope Park, the third largest in America, the beautiful colonades, baths and monuments, the spacious flower gardens along the boulevards and in parks will have to come later. It is sufficient that Kansas City is judged the most beautiful. The natural corollary is that these things should be seen by the average American who is interested in national beauty and civic improvement. There are many other things about Kansas City that are well worth the attention of the visitor. Around the city are the most beautiful residence sections of the nation. Not a dozen palatial residences, but hundreds, set in broad open spaces with beautiful garden spots and well kept lawns. "More beautiful than Hollywood," say the Californians and "the best in the country," according to realtors from all over the nation.

Scattered throughout the city are beautiful churches and excellent schools. In 40 years Kansas City has leaped from last to first as an educational center and the new buildings are models of efficiency and adaption. Kansas City is the center of a region which has always been peculiarly responsive to broad religious and educational programs. Industrially, of course, it holds a high rank, being the gateway to the great southwest. Its energy and progressiveness has brought it to the attention of the whole world for purely financial lines of endeavor. It is, however, in its responsiveness to the things of the spirit that Kansas City has so well earned the title of the "Heart of America."

Kansas City hears the call of the north or the voice of the south. Here the east ends and the west begins. It blends the culture of the east, the vision of the west, the energy of the north and the hospitality of the south. Its citizens, the sons and daughters of pioneers, welcomes the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists.

Roses at Chestnut Hill, Pa.

Wyndmoor, Chestnut Hill, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia has long been noted for its rose specialists. Myers and Santman, and the Burtons, John Burton now retired, whose mantle has fallen on his two sons, George and Alfred, who have separate establishments. All three firms, while they also grow other roses, have specialized in American Beauty since its first introduction and nowhere is it better grown than as seen at these various greenhouses. It has been said time and time again by many that the American Beauty has seen its best days, was in fact running out, deteriorating and those growers who believed this, soon had their stock going that way. Where they know how to grow this rose and have faith in it, there is still to be found American Beauty equally as prolific and of as good quality as when first introduced.

When scientifically grown, they produce three good flowers to the plant which sell at from 50 cents to $1.50 per flower wholesale through the winter and 50 cents during late spring and early fall. They must return more money, however, than other roses as there is much more labor attached to their culture. For the best results, young stock must be planted each season during May and early June in fresh sod soil. This changing the stock each season involves a lot of expense. The entire summer is spent in building up strong plants for the winter campaign, the young stock must receive no check but be in a thrifty growing condition ready to take hold of the soil immediately. When first planted each is in the center of a little basin of soil and watered separately as required, later when they have taken hold the soil is leveled and the watering is over all. If the whole bed was soaked at first before the plants were strong enough to take up the moisture, there is danger of the soil becoming sour.

The original main stem, or what might be called the mother plant has no value except as it nurses or brings along the bottom breaks, which come up strongly from the base after the first month. Only three of the best of these are allowed to grow. When the original mother stem attains a good height it is pinched and when the new shoot forms a bud, it is the first flower cut for sale, generally in August. A stem as long as possible is taken with this, as the ground breaks are then coming up strong with vigorous foliage and the old wood is no longer desirable.

The matter of cropping or having the flowers in quantity at periods of greatest demand is an important feature that has been fairly well solved as any one who has seen these houses just previous to Christmas can testify.

The matter of price has also been in a measure insured by the growers, who in scanty shipments, except on orders at stated prices, have been able to more or less establish values that are satisfactory. These growers claim that with all the competition of such varieties as Hadley, Premier, Columbia, Russell, Scott Key, and others the American Beauty is still today in the minds of the public, the standard of excellence and helps wholesalers in the sale of other varieties, when customers feel they must carry this old favorite in stock.

Myers and Santman have just finished planting 52,000 American Beauties, the first going in the middle of May and finished June 20. Temporary railroad tracks, lengthwise over the low benches on which run side dumping cars, carry new soil in and take away the old. The train consists of six cars which are hauled to the houses from the field on a continuation of the same tracks by a Ford tractor, which running on the road along side pulls them as mules do a canal boat. Hilda, their light sport of Maryland, which has always paid well is going out this year to be replaced by Pilgrim. American Legion has done very well here, paying 25 cents per plant during May. A house of their pink sport of Premier looks very good, but is expected to go off like its parent during the summer. They still grow three house of Sunburst for the color.

George Burton's American Beauty houses are about all replanted, there are quite a few more than last year, when the crop was very satisfactory the season through. A house of 3,500 Butterflies had produced over 50,000 buds which in the returns loomed up big. Mrs. Russell was doing well but proved too inactive in midwinter. Columbia could be re-planted each year for the best flowers, but a house now in four years was still going strong.

American Beauty soil that is removed each year from the benches still contains a wonderful lot of energy. Corn when planted in this grew tremendously, so strong was it that the immense ears formed were not normal and not more than half set with grains. Again planted the second year there was still very vigorous growth with unusually large ears which were then well grained. The third year crop without any additional fertilizer was almost as good as the second. It is thought that with a winter's frost and cover crop or two ploughed in, soil would again be in good condition for most greenhouse plants.

Alfred Burton whose specialties are American Beauty and Mrs. Russell, both of which are grown with the best result, is still cutting American Beauties. A large bench from which all the wood was taken for cuttings, came back about the middle of May and then produced quite a crop of good flowers, but Mr. Burton said he would not advise this for the flowers alone. The Mrs. Russell looks very well and will produce a good summer crop.

Clods Crumbled by Lime.

Lime is a clod-killer. It helps crumble lumps of soil which have already formed, and it tends to prevent other clods from forming, according to the January issue of Timely Soil Topics, a monthly pamphlet issued by the department of soils, of the Ohio State university. Earl E. Barnes, soils and crops specialist, writes the current number.

Prof. Barnes cites experiments which show that the addition of one per cent of lime to a soil in bad physical condition reduced the hardness of the clods 72 per cent. Limestone, he says, acts to break soil up into smaller particles. Clods which have been limed will often crumble to pieces after they dry out. This assures a good mechanical condition in the seed-bed; one which, without lime, could be had only through repeated harrowing and dragging, if then.

Winter weather, too, is a great foe to clods, but attacks them most effectively only when the land lies bare. This, of course, requires fall or winter plowing. Professor Barnes remarks, and he strongly recommends such practice, except where the land is located in hilly sections, because of the danger of erosion. Soils containing organic matter and lime in abundance will not be likely to form clods. The effect of lime as a soil flocculator, apart from its many other virtues, is often sufficient to justify its use.

SALEM, ORE.—C. B. Clancy, florist, filed a petition in bankruptcy, May 31. Liabilities are given as $14,117.08; assets, $3,577.21. Schedule shows 155 creditors.

PRESIDENT HARDING favors legislation which will return alien property amounting to $10,000 or less.

SECRETARY JOHN YOUNG, of the Society of American Florists, announces elsewhere in this issue, that a rate of a fare and one-half has been made for the Kansas City convention, August 15-17.

Bulb Prices.

It is noted that recent California prices on anemones are from $27.00 to $35.00 per thousand, while the prices in Holland are from $2.00 to $7.00 per thousand. On ranunculus, the Holland prices are from $1.50 to $3.50 per thousand for named kinds, while the California prices are $40.00 per thousand. In other words, anemones can be bought in Holland for about one-tenth of the California prices and the ranunculus for about one-fifteenth.

Hail.

One of the most severe and freakish hail storms ever experienced visited Omaha, Neb., June 18. A. Hooze lost 8,000 to 9,000 feet of glass, no insurance; L. Henderson, 4,000 feet, Louis Zadina, 350 lights, and the J. C. Robinson Seed Co., Waterloo, 400 lights.

At Joliet, Ill., June 17, the Chicago Carnation Co., lost 90 boxes of glass by hail, and the Davis Co., 20 boxes.

Portland Rose Show.

As we go to press reports from the annual rose show of the Portland Rose Society, held June 20-23, presage a very successful exhibition, the quality of the flowers exhibited being exceptionally fine. E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., and Howard & Smith, Los Angeles, Calif., have offered their latest introductions in roses as prizes in a number of the classes.

National Publicity.

Well written summer advertising is now being run by the publicity committee of the Society of American Florists in a number of the most popular magazines. It is single column, illustrated with cuts that fit in with the suggestions of the reading matter. Such appeals are bound to create new business which should be followed up by the trade in displaying clippings of the advertisements in their windows, and forwarding of good sized checks to assist the committee in keeping the campaign going at full speed.

Coal.

SUPPLIES AVAILABLE.

It has been estimated the stock of bituminous coal, in the hands of railroads, industrial consumers, public utilities, retailers, and unbilled coal, April 1, 1922, approximated 68,650,000 tons. Assuming a weekly consumption of 8,100,000 tons, the total consumption up to June 3 was 74,250,000 tons, of which 38,164,000 tons were received from the mines working, the balance being taken from stock. There is, therefore, estimated to be in storage, June 3, 1922, approximately 32,564,000. Of this tonnage, 12,564,000 can be safely used before there is danger of a coal "panic."

Stocks are not, however, evenly divided. It is, therefore probable some localities may already be below a safe figure, but with production continuing as during the eighth week of the strike, and assuming the coal now being produced can be evenly divided, it will be four to five weeks before a general shortage occurs.

Greenhouse Building.

In speaking of greenhouse additions, erected to further supply a market already apparently overstocked, a prominent grower reasoned it out as follows: "As long as I can remember, there has at times been periods of overproduction, when the red flag, 'stop building and let the demand catch up,' was waved most vigorously. Then again during a good part of the year, supply and demand balanced quite evenly with periods when shipments were very light and unsatisfactory. Now, if the careful, practical grower so manages his plant as to show a good profit, and desires to increase his glass area, it is nobody's business but his own. Why should he listen to or take heed of the improvident man who manages his place in a slipshod way, and whose idea of better times is to wait until they come. If such growers would practice better cultural methods, and make more intensive use of their houses, their higher grade stock would soon bring them the prosperity they are now waiting for. Nothing is so common and easy to grow as ferns of the Boston type, but there are many growers with houses full of plants for which they find no demand, while others turning their stock twice as fast can scarcely satisfy their customers. The secret is quality and having the supply when it is in greatest demand. Such successful growers build more houses because they need them and so it will be to the end of time."

National Association of Gardeners.

1922 CONVENTION AT BOSTON.

The plans are now well under way for the annual convention of the National Association of Gardeners which will be held this year in Boston, September 12-15.

President Robert Cameron of Ipswich, Mass., has selected the following convention committees, of which W. N. Craig, ex-president of the association, of Brookline, Mass., is general chairman. Banquet and entertainment committee: Andrew Rogers, chairman, James Mothven, William Downs, Stewart A. Forbes, Henry Stewart, A. P. Dewar, L. B. Whyte, Gordon P. Stewart, John G. Duguid, William Till, Percival C. Veinot, James Donald. Programme committee: Patrick W. Burke, chairman, W. D. Nicholson, John Morris, W. D. Coutts, Thomas H. Westwood, Peter Arnott, Donald McKenzie. Ladies' reception committee: Mrs. Hammond B. Tracy, chairman, Mrs. W. N. Craig, Mrs. Wm. Anderson, Mrs. George Stewart, Mrs. Duncan Finlayson, Mrs. Andrew Rogers. Finance committee: William Kennedy, chairman, Frank Murray, Peter Miller, Wm. Anderson, George F. Stewart, Eric Witterlund, Herbert W. Clarke, Wm. R. Thornhill, John L. Russell. Transportation committee: Walter H. Golby, chairman, Julius Heurlin, Duncan Finlayson, Alfred E. Parsons, Wm. C. Rust, James Marlborough, B. Hammond Tracy, James Wheeler. Publicity committee: William N. Craig, chairman, Gustave Thommen, E. J. Farrington.

The members of the association in and around Boston are most enthusiastic to make the 1922 convention, which will be the second N. A. G. convention to be held in that city, a rousing success to show how the association has progressed since the first Boston convention was held there. Interesting and instructive trips to inspect the many fine estates and historic landmarks of that part of New England where the convention will be held are being arranged, as well as lively business sessions for the discussion of problems of vital interest to the members of the gardening profession.

The proposed course for training men in the gardening profession which is to be established at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass., under the supervision of a committee of the National Association of Gardeners and the college authorities, was adopted recently by the board of trustees and directors of the National Association of Gardeners. This decision was unanimous, as the board of trustees and directors believes the association is taking a step in the right direction in giving the men interested in making gardening their life profession, an opportunity to gain a theoretical and practical knowledge of gardening under proper supervision.

Class of 1922, Davey Institute of Tree Surgery. Thorough scientific education, plus practical skill trained into them, makes these young athletes master Tree Surgeons

A Million Dollar Business in Saving Trees

By Martin L. Davey, General Manager

THE business of The Davey Tree Expert Company is now running at the rate of one million dollars for 1922. It has taken more than twenty years of steady building to reach this volume. The Davey Company sells nothing but service—the service of carefully selected, highly trained, scientifically educated Tree Surgeons, who save trees without guessing or experiment, when they can be saved. This service is available almost everywhere in the eastern half of the United States. Nearly fifteen thousand clients have been served up to this time, many of them regularly.

Lieut. Colonel Frank K. Hyatt, treasurer of the Pennsylvania Military Academy, in a letter written to The Davey Tree Expert Company, December 2, 1921, said:

"Three of your men are performing tree surgery at the college and while I had only engaged them for two days, their work was of such character that I was compelled to hold them longer. In fact, they will probably be with us four or five days.

"They seem to have thorough knowledge of their work and the foreman in charge is a very unusual man. It gives me pleasure to congratulate you on the character of work which your employees are doing."

This letter is typical of many hundreds of voluntary letters of commendation received by the Davey Company from its clients. They come regularly from every section served by Davey Tree Surgeons. It is significant that nearly every letter emphasizes the high-type men, their apparent skill and ability to do their work with accuracy and thoroughness and speed, but more particularly the fact that they are diligent and zealous workers.

The evolution of Davey Tree Surgery compared to the automobile

I do not presume to say that every last client is 100% satisfied. That would be too much to expect from a human organization. But more than 95% of the clients are fully pleased with both the work and the service. Nor would I claim that the Davey organization has always been as good as it is today, nor that the methods employed have always been as remarkably good and successful as they are now.

Davey Tree Surgery has been before the public nearly as long as the automobile, and its development has been almost parallel. You will easily recall the automobile of fifteen or twenty years ago. You recall how often it broke down, how many times it was laid up by the roadside? You remember its imperfect mechanism, its poor lighting, the hard job of cranking? Well, the fundamental principles of the automobile were the same then as now. The wonderful advance has been made in the refinements and the mechanical improvements. Then think of the really marvelous piece of machinery that you buy in the modern automobile!

Just so with Davey Tree Surgery. The fundamental principles were the same fifteen or twenty years ago as today. It was then relatively crude and imperfect. But honest effort and a determined purpose have produced refinements and mechanical improvements and scientific accuracy that are both marvelous and inspiring.

Only two or three men out of a hundred applicants are finally accepted

However, it is the human element of the Davey organization that I wish to describe. The high-type men, their surprising efficiency, their zeal and skill and knowledge are the result of something back behind. That something is a policy that could produce no other result.

From time to time we need additional men. We run advertisements in the cities within a reasonable distance of our headquarters, giving our specifications. Many replies are received. An information blank is sent to each applicant, in which he must give his life history. If a hundred information blanks are returned, our experience has shown that not more than fifty seem to meet our requirements. The others are cast aside.

We then send our representatives to these cities and notify the fifty to report at a certain hotel for personal interviews. Out of the fifty men thus interviewed, we select not more than five who seem to be the right kind.

A regular training field where practical training is given to every man

These five are brought in to Kent (Ohio) for practical training, where we maintain a regular training field. These five are put through a thorough course of practical training for several weeks, at the end of which we select not more than two or three as qualified and made of the right stuff.

Thus, out of an original hundred definite applicants, we get not more than two or three. The process of selection, though it is severe, works wonders and gives us unusual men for the very important work which we do.

Those who finally pass are sent out into the field, always under the direction of master Tree Surgeons. They simply grow into the work and acquire almost intuitive skill.

A chief expert travels regularly from squad to squad

Then, we have a chief expert who spends all of his time traveling from squad to squad to check up on all the details of the work and the merit of each individual—to see that our high standard is consistently maintained. Occasionally he tells us that a certain man is not our kind and should not be in the Davey organization. That man is promptly dismissed. Very often he tells us that certain men are doing especially fine work and recommends advancement. Such men are promptly advanced.

So the really good men remain with us—and they like their jobs mighty well. Naturally enough, they give superior service.

Constant supervision by local representatives

In addition to this, a number of squads are under the constant supervision of each local representative, of whom we have nearly thirty, whose highest self-interest requires watchful care of the interests of each client, to see that he gets the maximum service.

More than this, we require periodic reports on every man in our field force. Our local representatives give detailed monthly reports on the foremen under their supervision. Each foreman gives a monthly report in great detail concerning each man in his squad. Every bit of information from every source about each individual goes into his personal service record. And every one knows that his service record is complete and strives to keep it good.

The only place in the world where the science of Tree Surgery is taught

When a man in the field force has reached a proper state of development, he is brought in to Kent to attend our resident school. This course covers two years—four months each year. We maintain a regular school with complete library and laboratory equipment and a corps of instructors with fine scientific training from various colleges and universities, plus special training in the Davey organization. There is no other school in the world that teaches Tree Surgery, so we maintain the Davey Institute of Tree Surgery as a matter of practical necessity.

In this school we teach only those things required to make real Tree Surgeons—nothing superfluous or unnecessary. The course includes Botany and Dendrology, Pathology and Entomology, Soils and the Feeding of Trees, Spraying and Fruit-growing, and above all the Theory and Practice of Tree Surgery.

Every man in the Davey organization is a trained man—Davey trained

When a man has been with us long enough, has had the necessary amount of complete training, and has demonstrated to us his ability and qualifications, he is entrusted with the handling of operations—then and only then.

"Do it right or not at all.—JOHN DAVEY.

Every man in the Davey organization is a trained man—Davey trained. If a man should apply to us for employment and say that he is an expert and understands all phases of the work—recommends himself highly—we say to him, if we should happen to need men, "All right, you may start in at the bottom and show us." Very few of them ever come and we are just as well satisfied. Our experience has shown us that not more than one in ten of these so-called tree men from the outside is the right kind of man. None of them are real experts when they come to us. All of them have many things to unlearn.

The Davey Research Department does the experimenting—the client's trees are never experimented upon

In addition to all these other things, we maintain a Research Department in charge of scientists of practical experience. It is their duty to work out every scientific and practical problem of Tree Surgery, as fast as possible. They gather data from every available source, particularly from the experience of the Davey organization, in addition to original experiments. Every experiment is conducted in Kent by our Research Department and never on the trees of a client.

For instance, our Research Department has worked out a list of "forbidden trees," those which experience has demonstrated are not worth complete treatment or do not respond properly to treatment. On these trees our experts are permitted to do only first-aid work.

A national organization that carries with it an assured protection to tree owners

There is no other national organization in our field. There are, of course, many local imitators. It is an unfortunate fact that there are mighty few good ones among them. We would be happy if they were all good and well qualified. But who will supervise them? Who will train them? Who will provide the discipline that will hold them to high-quality service? Who will pass judgment on the results of their work?

There are quite a number, who have never had any contact with the Davey organization, who claim falsely that they are Davey men. There are some, unfortunately, whom we have been obliged to let go for obvious faults, who attempt to capitalize on the prestige of the Davey name, to our detriment and to that of the profession we have built up and have endeavored to honor.

The unseen things that make quality are only possible because of large volume

In the Davey organization it is the unseen things (rigid selection of men, practical and thorough training, supervision of chief expert and local representatives, resident school, Research Department, standardization of methods and organization discipline) that make real quality and lasting merit. On a business of nearly three-quarters of a million dollars in 1920, we spent three times as much on these unseen things which make quality as we made in profit. In spite of the depression, we did a business of almost six hundred thousand in 1921 and spent four times as much on these hidden things that make quality as our profit amounted to. The business of the Davey Company is now running at the rate of one million dollars for 1922.

Davey methods have been standardized. Davey work is the same in Boston as it is in Chicago, the same in New York as in Kansas City, the same in Montreal as in New Orleans. Davey experts are of uniformly high type, all thoroughly trained, all carefully selected and developed. And best of all is organization discipline that requires and maintains a constant high standard down to the smallest details of work and service.

JOHN DAVEY
Father of Tree Surgery

John Davey gave to the world the science of Tree Surgery. Before the publication of his first book, the original "Tree Doctor," not even the idea of the scientific treatment of trees existed. John Davey created the term "Tree Surgery." Every fundamental principle of it was the product of his genius and love. Every improvement and refinement has been worked out in the organization which he brought into being and inspired. But the greatest contribution which John Davey has made to the world, has been to translate into popular form the fact that the tree is a living, breathing organism.

MARTIN L. DAVEY

General Manager, who made of a father's dream a business reality and built the Davey organization.

"And yet the tree lives—it breathes. It has a real circulation. The tree digests its food and assimilates it. It has sexual processes that are just as real and beautiful as in any other form of life. It has the power to adapt itself to its environment. To be sure, it lacks intelligence and a nervous system and the power of locomotion. But in all the other elemental processes the tree functions just as truly as man himself.

"This question of reforestation is of monumental importance. America can not continue to exist as a virile, forward-moving nation unless we protect what we have and start to build up that which we have so ruthlessly destroyed. We can not afford to be a nation of vandals much longer. America must reforest, or America must drink the bitter dregs of national decline and impotency."—Excerpts from a speech in Congress, March 3, 1921, by Martin L. Davey, of Ohio.

A tree-man may fool the public but he cannot fool us

It has seemed to me that the greatest thing the Davey organization does for its clients, over and above all these other things, is that of relieving the client of all worry and responsibility in the selection of the men who are to treat his priceless trees. A tree-man may fool the public, most of whom know little about trees. But he cannot fool us. A man must be right in every sense of the word or he cannot go very far in the Davey organization.

We, who know Tree Surgery values, select the men to whom this work of very great importance is to be entrusted. We know they are right and worthy of your confidence and our confidence or we would not send them to you. They come to you with our seal of approval.

They carry with them the most priceless possession we have—our reputation. We are as jealous of that reputation as a good woman is of her good name. Business and professional successes are merely results. The causes are behind the scenes. And that is the reason for this little story of the Davey organization.

BUSINESS IS IMPROVING.

The weather was extremely hot all last week and the government thermometer registered 95, the highest mark for June 16, save one, in 50 years. The temperature in the greenhouses was about 120 to 130, according to the thermometer, consequently it affected stock considerably and business as well. Trade was dull all week and the averages as a whole were as disappointing, if not more so, than those of the previous one. The demand improved greatly, June 16 and 17 and there is more life to the business now than there has been all month. Peonies are in large supply and in good demand at advanced prices. Gladioli are good property and are cleaning up better than for some time. Roses are in good supply but receipts are not anywhere near as heavy as they have been. The new seedling rose, Golden Ophelia, is included in the shipments, and is a welcome addition to the other varieties. Milady are arriving in good condition and the quality of the roses throughout is really better than one would expect, following the hot weather. Carnations are about done, although some of the stock offered finds ready buyers. Lilies are to be had in fair sized quantities at a few of the stores. Iris, pond lilies, daisies, larkspur, feverfew, candytuft, delphiniums, pansies, statice, sweet peas, snapdragon, lupines, lily of the valley, orchids, gaillardia, cornflower, gypsophila and other miscellaneous indoor and outdoor stock is included in the shipments. Vacations are now in order and quite a number of familiar faces will be missed in the wholesale market for a couple of weeks, starting the first of next month. The biggest part of the trade is planning to spend their vacation at the Society of American Florists convention at Kan-

PETER REINBERG, INC., PICNIC.

The picnic given by the employees of Peter Reinberg, Inc., at Erhard's Grove, Park Ridge, last Sunday, June 18, was a most enjoyable affair and all their friends in the market who attended with their sweethearts or families are still talking about it. Louis Hoeckner, manager of the Reinberg firm, led the way to the grove, followed by several large trucks and autos, and it is estimated that there were close to 100 people present, counting the children. After partaking of a hearty luncheon, the sporting events on the programme were started. The ball game, consisting of a team selected and captained by T. E. Waters crossed bats with another under the leadership of Fred Nicklas. Tim Water's team won by a score of 20 to 8 in five innings when the game was called to keep the Babe Ruths from making any more homers. Two more games were played and umpired by Baby Nicklas, whose decisions were so erratic that the only thing that saved him from receiving a beating was the fact that he was so small. The races were next in order with Tim Waters acting as master of ceremonies, and Fred Nicklas as official starter. There were events for the men, women and children with beautiful prizes for the victors. The fat man's race was an added attraction and was won by Louis Hoeckner, who ate up the prize long before the race started. The bald headed men's race was next and was a comedy from the start. Fred Nicklas was the first to line up with his hair bobbed purposely for the occasion. John Enders was next and was given a handicap, owing to having the least hair of all. Tim Waters managed to squeeze in this event somehow, and so did Gus. Alles, who copped the bunting by breaking all previous records. No one answered the call when the fat ladies' event was announced, but several entered the contest when Tim changed the fat to plump. The race was close and resulted in a tie because Tim and Freddie were so impressed with the beauty of the con-

NOTES.

The Kroeschell Bros. Co., well known local manufacturers of greenhouse boilers and florists' refrigerating apparatus, has been consolidated with the Brunswick Refrigerating Co., of Brunswick, N. J., under the style of the Brunswick-Kroeschell Co., and will maintain manufacturing plants in both locations, capitalization, $3,000,000. A new local factory is under way at Diversey boulevard and Keeler avenue, where it is said the administration building will occupy a frontage of 150 to 200 feet on the former thoroughfare.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is offering a good supply of the early flowering hardy phlox, Miss Lingard, which the proprietor is cutting in quantity at his Highland Park place. The local retailers use this variety quite extensively each season and keep the tables at this place well cleaned up on this item at all times.

Miss Lillian Hagen, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hagen, and Julian Scholtz, were married June 10. A large number in the trade attended the wedding celebration and joined in wishing the happy young couple a pleasant voyage down the sea of matrimony. Mr. Hagen is with the John Kruchten Co.

Mangel always has an artistic window display at his Palmer House store, consisting principally of beautifully arranged baskets of all the choicest offerings in cut flowers with an appropriate background and a refreshing touch with running water underneath. Where are the ducks this summer?

Frank Oechslein is rebuilding the boiler house and service buildings recently destroyed by fire, with many improvements. The original structure was of wood but the new one is of brick, and up-to-date in every respect. It is expected the work will be completed next month.

A. L. Vaughan & Co. report a great improvement in trade with a heavy out-of-town call for peonies and gladioli, which they are handling in quantity, in addition to their usual line.

Poehlmann Bros. Co., is cutting from a heavy crop of summer roses, especially Mrs. Chas. Russell, now arriving in exceptionally fine condition at this establishment.

Peter Hoefelder, with Kennicott Bros. Co., returned June 19 with a nice string of black bass from a few days fishing at Twin Lakes, Wis.

Mrs. Margaretha Sinner died at her home at 6516 Ridge boulevard, June 17, an account of which appears in the obituary column this week.

A decided improvement in the demand for flowers and pot plants developed during the past week. Buying is on a better scale and orders are getting larger as a rule. One of the best features is the funeral demand which has been especially brisk. There has also been quite a few parties and weddings. Parties incidental to the commencement exercises at the various high schools and Ohio State University was a means of stimulating business to a marked degree. All of the retailers have been getting a portion of the business and have profited accordingly. Garden flowers are now in the market to a large extent. They consist of the cornflower, daisy, delphinium, and rambler roses. Pot plants are selling fairly well and there is also some demand for shrubbery and vines but the season is now about over. The staple varieties on the market are roses, carnations and daisies. Roses are mostly Columbia, Premier, Sunburst and Butterfly. They retail from $3 to $5 per dozen. Carnations are of excellent quality and find a ready sale around $1.50 per dozen. Indications point to a good trade during the coming month or six weeks.

F. T. D. MEETING.

The Ohio section of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association held a meeting at the Chittenden Hotel, June 16, with about a score present. The principal business was a talk by J. F. Ammann of Edwardsville, Ill., on the plans and scope of the association. He told of the service being rendered, and gave statistics showing the growth of the telegraph movement. Steps are being taken to redistrict the country, and in that plan Ohio will likely comprise one district. Each district will have a man who will be in charge and look after the interests of the members. The bright prospects before the association were shown by the speaker. Those present from out of town were: C. E. Sharpe, Mt. Vernon; Charles Duerr, Newark; H. S. Inlay, Zanesville; C. L. Humphrey, Zanesville; J. M. Rogers and E. E. Edgecomb of Dayton.

NOTES.

A well attended flower show held at Arlington, Marble Cliff and Grandview Heights under the auspices of the community committee, June 17, was the occasion for the display of a number of varieties of roses and garden flowers. The three named villages are suburbs of Columbus and annually hold a community field day. C. G. Thornburg was first; C. E. Eckhart, second; Mrs. H. W. Phearson, third, and Frederick Nesbitt, fourth, in the display of roses. Mrs. King Thompson won the first prize for the best display of delphinium. Iris displays were won by Mrs. H. Penny, first; Mrs. Grace Miller, second. The best variety of garden flowers was won by Mrs. Charles Butterworth, first; Mrs. Ray Spencer, second, and Mrs. H. W. Phearson, third.

The principal speaker at a recent meeting of the Columbus Horticultural Society and the Columbus Iris Society at the State University was Edmund Secrest, Ohio state forester, who told of the formation of a Wild Life League, which will be similar to the one functioning in the state of West Virginia. He believed that the people of Ohio should be interested more and more in the flowers, trees and birds, and thus asked for support in the organization of the league. Mr. Secrest stated that additional appropriations would be forthcoming for reforestation. There has been a desire on the part of flower lovers to secure a wild flower preserve in Ohio, and a location near Sugar Grove was suggested by him.

The Columbus Iris Society has donated 2,000 iris roots and plants to superintendent McClosky of the storage dam park for beautification purposes. Superintendent McClosky, is now planting the iris and announces that he will be glad to receive donations of climbing roses, shrubbery and vines of all kinds. He is not provided with funds for the purchase of flowers and shrubbery.

T. J. Ludwig has been having an excellent window display which is bedecked with roses, carnations, pot plants and garden flowers most artistically arranged. Mr. Ludwig reports a decided increase in business since Memorial Day.

The Wilson Seed & Floral Co. has been specializing in landscaping and outdoor work with considerable success, according to Henry F. Wilson, head of the company. The sale of grass seeds has also been a big feature at this establishment.

Carl W. Huber is cutting a large number of carnations which are finding a ready sale. Mr. Huber has been busy on getting the benches set up and planting flowers for the fall season.

The Fifth Avenue Floral Co. is cutting carnations, roses and sweet peas for the trade. The quality of the flowers is generally high and demand is good. According to the manager prospects for the remainder of the summer are excellent.

The Vanity Flower Shop has been having exceptionally good trade during the recent commencement exercises, furnishing bouquets and corsages.

J. W. L.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Calling recently on Alfred L. Zeller, proprietor of the wholesale growing business, long known as Charles Zeller & Son, we talked of this proposed retirement from that line, which will occur July 1. The property has been sold and the greenhouses, on Leffort street near Flatbush avenue, will be torn down to make room for business and residence buildings. It is 44 years since the business was located there and since the death of his father in 1903, Alfred L. Zeller has conducted it as a grower of plants. He intends to re-enter business this fall as a retailer, and announces that he will be able to furnish anything required in the nursery or florist lines. Mr. Zeller, as was his father, is a capable and highly respected figure in the trade and we wish him continued success.

MARKET IS OVER SUPPLIED.

The past two weeks have been hard ones on the trade, especially the wholesaler, due to the fact that the extremely warm weather has brought everything in at one time and it has been difficult to find an outlet for it. Even the street merchants do not attempt to do business with the weather as warm as it has been here for some time. And then again, with the exception of a few large funerals and school commencements and several weddings, there is no demand for stock, as the box trade has about dropped out of sight, and who can blame them with every yard full of blooms of every description. For the past several years the people of this district have come to life and have planted their yards and beautified their property with hardy blooming plants and shrubs, and the landscape gardeners and firms dealing in that class of plants have reaped a harvest, until now those who are the real flower buyers have plenty of their own at this season and are not in the market for any cut flowers for the home. Another factor at this time of year is the farmer who has a small patch of coreopsis, sweet william, delphinium, and other garden flowers, who brings them to market with his fruits and vegetables and who does not know their value and figures that anything he gets for them is velvet, as several years ago he did not bother to bring them in, but just let them bloom themselves out on the place. American Beauties are over for this season and from what we understand, there will be more of them next season than for several years, as some growers are planning to increase their planting. Of the roses, the white is the most popular this month and the double White Killarney is the best that is handled in this market. Reds and yellows have also been popular for commencements. Of the pinks, Columbia is proving the best warm weather rose. The supply of lily of the valley has fallen short of the demand at times, but there is usually enough to go around. Carnations are going out fast, but at that the quality is better than usual for so late in the season. Gladioli are more plentiful and it will not be long until they will be here in quantity. Delphinium is popular and is being used extensively in wedding decorations. The supply of Easter and calla lilies is small and the quality is not of the best. Garden flowers are seen in profusion and include coreopsis, gaillardia, larkspur, baby breath, achillia and sweet william, all of which help out, but as stated before the quantity is too large for the demand.

Geo. C. McCallum Co. is on a business trip to the firm's Detroit Branch, where they have moved into their new store, which gives them one of the finest wholesale rooms in the country.

FUNERAL TRADE BRISK.

Mother's Day was very good throughout New Brunswick. Funeral trade at present is increasing. Prices for all stock are higher than before the war (1914), although fuel and taxes have not declined to the previous levels.

John Bebbington, veteran plantsman, in this section for 50 years, is still hale and hearty and keeps in close touch with his work. He reports both flower and vegetable crops in good condition. He considers that a young man beginning in the florist business has better opportunities in the smaller town than the larger cities, such as New York, Chicago, etc.

J. B.

Boston.

A BETTER MARKET.

The market this week experienced a change. There was not much change in price but stock cleaned up better and very little had to be carried over from one day to another as the case had been for two weeks previous. Stock has also diminished somewhat in quantity though there is quite a volume of flowers arriving daily. This is not noticeable as trade is better and stock cleans up quite readily. The biggest call has been for white flowers for weddings and red for graduations. The prices obtained on these are quite as good as at any time. Peonies are nearly through and gladioli are arriving more abundantly, though the latter still bring a good price. Lilies of the valley and orchids are still selling well, the present demand extending since Easter. Lilies have been scarce and the call has been big this week both for callas and Easter lilies for church weddings. The business in general has improved a hundred per cent over a week ago.

NOTES.

The peony show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society was held at Horticultural Hall, July 17-18 with a considerable number of fine exhibits. The leading prize winners were T. C. Thurlow's Sons, Inc., and Wilton B. Fay, the former receiving a silver medal for the most effective display.

Oak Ames, director of the Harvard Botanic Gardens has resigned. It is expected he will continue as assistant professor of botany, a position he has held at the Bussy Institution since 1915.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club held their ladies' night on Tuesday, June 20 at Horticultural Hall. There was a buffet lunch and dancing.

Trade with the local dealers has been fairly good during the past week or 10 days, although funeral work has not been as active as it was a month or two ago. As a rule this is the best work the dealers have during the summer months. The commencement exercises of the Evansville College were held Thursday and Friday of last week and this added considerably to the volume of work for the florists. There were also a number of large weddings taking place and several more are scheduled for the next two or three weeks. There have been a great many calls for pot plants and shrubbery of various kinds. Peonies are now out of the market and the local growers report they had a much better season than last year.

The William Blackman Floral Co. moved into its new home at 410 Main street the first of this week, one of the best equipped flower houses in this end of the state. The new store consists of three departments, the salesroom, office and storage and workroom. The storage room has a carbonic gas machine and latest designs of storage boxes to keep flowers fresh. The salesroom is finished in ivory and is most attractive. The Blackman company is more than 60 years old and said to be one of the oldest concerns of its kind in the state. The company grows practically all of the stock that it sells and has one of the largest and best equipped greenhouse plants in the city, with over 122,000 square feet of glass. George H. Blackman, manager of the store, says that with the new equipment, the firm will be in better position than ever to give prompt and efficient service.

Prizes were awarded to the exhibitors in the June show of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, which opened June 16, in the Narragansett Hotel ball room. The display includes cherries, strawberries, a few vegetables and many varieties of flowers, plants and shrubs. The feature exhibit was that of the Frederick Peck estate, of Barrington, whose exhibit of fruit, vegetables and plants was very unique. In the professional and commercial classes several of the downtown stores took

Be sure that the name MEYER is on every spool of green Florists thread that you are buying, and you will get the original and best green Florists thread on the market. A great many of the salesmen on the road and the Florists' supply houses are substituting a cheap and inferior green Florists thread to take the place of the Meyer Green Silkline and Florists' thread.

Therefore, if you cannot get the real article send the goods back and order direct from the manufacturer and you will get the best. Guaranteed two ounces of actual thread to the spool, 16 ounces to the pound.

prizes. The show was a great success, requiring a lot of hard work and effort on the part of the committee, which was duly appreciated.

Florists generally had a good business the past week with graduating classes and June weddings. The biggest call was for roses and carnations, the former having the best call. The past few days stock has shortened up and prices have advanced rapidly. The demand for peonies and gladioli is increasing, and they are selling well from $2 to $3 per dozen retail. Easter lilies, callas, daisies, and other small flowers sold well.

The Biltmore Flower Shop opens to-day, June 17, and is a picture of delight, finished in a dull white and gold, it is one of the finest in the city. Mr. Popkin, who is manager of the store, is also the hotel florist, and has had several large dinners and dance parties since the new hotel opened. He looks forward to a very promising future, and from the way business has started, there is no doubt of his success.

WEDDINGS AND COMMENCEMENTS A FACTOR

The business of the past week shows the season to be fast waning and settling into the summer quiet. There have been quite a few weddings which helped, and about the regular demand for funerals on which so much depends. This has also been the height of the commencement season, and quite a good deal of stock has been used for these events. But with all this, there has been considerable surplus which had to be handled in one way and another, mostly through the street men. Rambler roses are now in, but much of the stock presents a scraggy, mildewy appearance, that is anything but inviting. Hydrangea arborescens alba has made its appearance and will take the place of peonies in decorative work. There are still quantities of Larkspur; far too much to make any kind of worthwhile returns. Other outside flowers are still plentiful, the spring or early summer crop of sweet peas being of very good quality. Russell, Premier, Columbia, Butterfly, Ophelia, and White Killarney roses are in full supply, all the growers seeming to try to fatten up their June averages. Quality is fast retrograding. Carnations are almost out for the season, although some growers send in very good stock which brings a fair price. A nickel to 10 cents a bunch prevails, however, in the Saturday cleanup for the general average. Easter lilies are strengthening, and will soon get on a good summer basis. Callas are almost over. Greenhouse gladioli were never finer. They are a splendid addition to any retail stock, being very effective in either window or store display. There is a fairly supply of cattleyas, but anything like 25 or more have to be ordered ahead to insure delivery. Lily of the Valley is sufficient for all de-night. Two months ago Wm. Munro, Drexel Hill, uncovered one of these dormant sowings, which with the help of a constructive greenhouse specialist, sprouted so vigorously that there is now a house 40 x 200, finished, benched, and planted with Hadley roses. H. I. Faust, Merion, planted seed for a double structure 56 x 200 nearly two years ago, which only started into vigorous growth a month ago, and is now a finished plant that is a real ornament. One of the old houses that was removed to make room for this structure, built 25 years ago of cypress, was so well preserved that it was sold to be erected elsewhere. The large St. Leonard plant is to be doubled in size, with the construction of another house of equal capacity to be erected by the Lord & Burnham Co. Roses are then to be the specialty.

THE BEST ROSES.

While much of the necessary replanting of the rose houses has been done, growers have been in a quandary as to the choice of varieties. Columbia appears to be first selection as the best all-round-the-season kind. Premier, which runs it a hard race in winter, fails badly in hot weather. Ophelia replaced by many with Butterfly, is again gaining friends as it has been shown that with proper culture it is as good as ever. Pilgrim is gaining in popularity and in the additional plantings will be quite a factor the coming season. American Legion, while a bit sleepy in the dark days of winter, is very strong in the fall and also in spring and summer. Mrs. Russell has not been increased in quantity, being only grown by those who understand its peculiarities. John Burton has said that the best variety to grow was the one that would do the best for you, which is excellent advice. American Beauty specialists are slightly increasing their plantings this season. Hadley is a problem to many, but those

NOTES.

John Burton and wife motored to Summit, N. J., the past week visiting Mr. and Mrs. John N. May. Every florist's community has what is known as its "Old Guard" leading men who have grown up together in the trade and taken an active part in organization work for the betterment of the business. These two distinguished veteran florists, now retired, each an ex-president of the Society of American Florists, belong to the "Old Guard" of the Nation, as in their long active business life they were always foremost in all activities for placing the business on a higher plane. May they enjoy many more years of health and happiness.

The Leo Niessen Co. report that, considering the season, stock is moving fairly well, but they could handle a lot more business and still have good variety to choose from. Russell, Columbia and Double White Killarney are leading rose stocks. Easter lilies, Cattleyas, and lily of the valley are also features.

Edward Reid says it is hard work to move the various overstocks as they come in, but finds consolation in the fact that if there was no surplus in the spring and fall, there would not be enough stock to go around in the winter when he takes a pride in being able to serve his customers.

Easter lilies, roses, sweet peas and gladioli are features of the Berger Bros. stock, which they find quite sufficient to meet all demands. Plants, which were handled the past winter with success, proved such a convenience to customers

Martin Samtman, wife and daughter, sailed on Saturday from New York for Europe, to take a well earned vacation, most of which will be spent visiting old friends and relatives.

Columbia and Double White Killarney are features of the rose stock of the Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market. Easter lilies and outdoor sweet peas are also features.

Paul Berkowitz spent several days the past week at the New York branch of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., where he finds the business very encouraging. K.

SLOW DEMAND AND HEAVY SUPPLY

Following the storm of June 11, that left so much death and destruction in its wake, the weather turned decidedly cool. It brought more comfort in living, and to some extent, stayed the deterioration of stock, but has had no appreciable effect on the condition of business. Summer dullness is here, and the trade is trying to make the best of it. There have been a number of wedding decorations, but they make little impression on the great volume of stock arriving. Aside from these, and funeral work, the minds of the people are on other pursuits than the enjoyment of flowers. There has been a tremendous exodus for Europe, 6,000 having sailed on June 10. Many had previously gone, and others will be going till at least mid-summer. Although roses are general spoken of as being poor, there is enough fairly good stock to supply all demands. In the limited output of American Beauties, there can be little choice, as almost all of them are of poor quality. In Columbia, Madame Butterfly, Premier and the limited supply of Francis Scott Key, fair stock can be found. The last week, ending June 10, left its mark on the bulk of the carnations, but they keep pouring into the market, some going to the stores at which a correspondent, who must have a sense of humor, has called, "attractive prices," others to the street vendors, and great numbers to the dead carts. The supply of peonies is not so heavy as at the first of the month, but counting what are in cold storage, there is a surplus. Some good gigas and other cactleyas are arriving, but the demand is light and prices have fallen below normal for the month of June. In sweet peas, the greenhouse stock is about down to rubbish, and nothing good has yet arrived from the outdoor cuts. America and other fine gladioli are arriving in quantity and are being effectively used by the retailers in window decorations. The supply of garden stock is out of all proportion to the demand, noteworthy in that respect, being gypsophila, which piles up in a number of the wholesale stores. It is pretty and useful, when any use can be made of it. Another nuisance is a great stock of cut rambler roses, with sweet williams, gaillardia, coreopsis, cornflowers and other stock that may be classed as "wild."

June 19.—A whole week of comfortably cool weather has put the market in a somewhat better condition. Better roses are arriving than during the hot spell and steamer business has increased the demand for such stock. There is yet much sacrifice and loss in common and inferior stock, but that is inevitable considering the quantity that arrives.

NOTES.

There is some complaint among retailers, that department stores are getting better bargains in the wholesale district than they are. We do not set up as arbiters, but in justice, must favor the retailers, as they buy heavily when there is a strong demand at high prices. So far as we have observed, when natural flowers are in limited supply, the department stores fall back to and push their artificial stock. In times like the present, they bid for popular favor.

Alfred T. Bunyard, of Madison avenue and 48th street, is in the Post-Graduate hospital, having undergone an operation for appendicitis, June 14. He stood it well, and the latest report is that he is resting easily. Being a comparatively young man, and of previous regular habits, it is believed that he will have a rapid recovery.

Reed & Keller, 122 West 25th street, have reported good Memorial Day business. At their factory, at the above address, every working day is a busy one, and the inventive mind of William N. Reed is always devising something new. He has both the brain to design, and the hands to carry his designs into effect.

The Morning Telegraph, of June 15, had the following item: "Peter Brown, the 49th street florist, was the proudest man on the grounds (Belmont Park) after his namesake got home." It will be noted that Peter Brown, the florist, has a strong affection for Peter Brown, the horse that won the race.

We have recently noticed at Traendly & Schenck's, fine stock, for the season, of the Columbia, Madame Butterfly, Premier and Crusader roses, grown by Robert Simpson, Clifton, N. J. Mr. Traendly and family will go to their summer home, Rowaton, Conn., July 1.

J. W. Hauser, of Madison avenue and 56th street, has been doing jury duty. In the meantime, workmen have put a roof over the sidewalk in front of his store in preparation for two stories to be added to the building, but he intends to stay it through.

Stoumpas Brothers, Park avenue and 86th street, are keeping their store well stocked with all seasonable flowers. They have stated that there does not seem to be much difference in the condition of business from that of previous summers.

Frank Grumbach, of Jamaica, is having a new carnation house, 40 x 150 feet, erected in Baldwin, near the M. Matherson range. It is believed that Mr. Grumbach will start his son in business for himself.

Samuel Seligman's bankruptcy case is scheduled for hearing July 19, in the United States Court House and Post Office building, in the Borough of Manhattan, city and county of New York.

H. G. Perry, manager of the Charles A. Dards store, has gone, with his family, to North Scituate, Mass. Mr. Perry will make occasional return trips to the store during the summer.

At the store of David Clarke's Sons, Broadway and 75th street, we have recently noticed a fine collection of white and blue hydrangeas, grown at their Fordham Heights greenhouses.

Christatos & Koster have opened their summer store at West End, N. J., and Morris Christatos is in charge there. His brother, Robert, is looking after the Madison avenue store.

The best carnations, recently noticed, are Eureka, Ward, Cottage Maid and Matchless, that are being received by Herman Weiss from W. D. Howard, Milford, Mass.

A. Ehmann, who has been long in the business, and is now finely located at 136 West 72nd street, says that business is about the same as in the average summer.

G. E. M. Stumpp is spending most of his time at the Southampton, L. I., store. It was recently stated at the 5th Avenue store that steamer business was good.

Meyer, of Madison avenue and 58th street, says he is not worrying over the florist business. It is supposed that he has other sources of income.

The Nippon Florist, 265 Columbus avenue, is making an attractive display of goldfish globes and tanks, all well stocked with the fish.

American Seed Trade Association.

CHICAGO CONVENTION, JUNE 21-23.

The fortieth annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association began at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, at 10 a. m. Wednesday, June 21, with a gathering larger and more optimistic than a year ago at St. Louis. The crystal room where the meeting convened was well filled, and most of the prominent firms of the country were represented by members or others.

Lemuel F. Owen of the Chicago Building Exchange made the address of welcome, and President Olds' address was heard attentively. It struck a practical note in urging that the promotion and publicity campaign which the association had inaugurated with reference to home gardens, through the National Garden Bureau, be extended to the province of field seeds.

The tariff committee's report presented by J. C. Vaughan, chairman, and Curtis Nye Smith, attorney, was of particular interest to the members because of the pending revision of the tariff. Mr. Smith, in answer to a question, expressed the opinion that the tariff bill would be enacted by Sept. 15, though he said there was no certainty about this, nor about the rates which would be fixed.

G. F. Bradley of Cleveland, O., chairman of the committee on postal laws, delivered an unusually interesting report. He said a special ruling upon the mailability of insecticides had been obtained from the department, which held that they were unmailable in any quantity and subject to a heavy fine, therefore seedsmen should be warned of the danger of incurring this penalty. He called attention to a recent ruling, permitting the mailing of sealed fourth-class matter where its contents were certified to, and permission to open for examination was given, in a form prescribed by the department. He congratulated the members on the removal of the tax on parcel post shipments and submitted to the convention, the matters of protesting against the use of the government postal frank by county agents in soliciting orders for seeds; and advocating the issuance of postal certificates for 25 cents, 50 cents and 75 cents which would be used in mail order remittances.

Charles P. Guelf, of Cambridge, N. Y., read the report of the committee on necrology, giving the obituaries of the prominent members of the association who had died during the year.

Leonard H. Vaughan, of Chicago, announced that the entertainment committee had arranged a boat ride for Wednesday evening to give all attending the convention a view of Chicago's water front and an opportunity to visit and get acquainted.

The seed analysts, attending their convention coincident with the seedsmen, were invited to attend all the entertainment features provided for the seedsmen and their ladies, and to attend the seed trade banquet as the guests of the association.

The programme includes Report of Membership Committee, by Alex. Forbes, Newark, N. J., chairman; Report of Committee on Garden Bureau, Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago, chairman; Report of Committee on Nomenclature and Registration, Francis C. Stokes, Moorestown, N. J., chairman; "The Growing of Vegetable Seed in California," Lester L. Morse, San Francisco; "Seed Borne Diseases," Dr. C. R. Orton, Secretary Crop tion Between Seed Trade and Seed Analyst Associations," W. L. Oswald, Chicago; Report of Committee on Experiment Stations, H. H. Miller, Bloomington, Ill., chairman; Report of Committee on Seed Testing Apparatus and Publicity, C. C. Massie, Minneapolis, chairman; "The Farmer and the Seedsmen," James R. Howard, President, American Farm Bureau Federation.

The entertainment includes luncheon at the Drake hotel Thursday, for the visitors, after which they will be taken to the wonderful Chicago movie theatre, which is one of the finest places of amusement in this country. The association banquet takes place Thursday evening.

The first four days of convention week have been delightfully cool and enjoyable.

President Olds' Address.

When a year ago you elected me to the high office of president, I accepted the honor with some misgivings, not knowing whether I could fill the position acceptable or not. I have learned that the work the president is expected to do is by no means confined to the annual convention. It is an all-the-year-round job. I have found that almost every day of the year, one or more matters come to the president's office for consideration. I wish in this report to touch on a few of the questions that have come up during the year and to give my impressions and suggestions on the things that seem to me of most importance at this time.

First of all, however, let me extend a special word of greeting to the members of the Association of Official Seed Analysts, who will be with us more or less during our convention. At your meeting at Toronto last December it was found that a majority were in favor of the meetings of the seed trade associations. Our counsel, Curtis Nye, who was representing us there, took occasion therefore to extend to you a cordial welcome to participate in our open meetings. I am glad that he did this and that we are to have you with us. I wish to give the analysts at this time an earnest invitation to join in our discussions and mingle with us socially. We want to get acquainted. We are learning that the objects and purposes of seedsmen and analysts are so nearly the same that the best results can only

NECROLOGY.

We mourn today the loss of six members who have been taken from us during the past year, including a former president, J. M. Lupton, and a much revered honorary member, Dr. W. W. Tracy. The complete list of those who have passed away is as follows: Hiram W. Buckbee, of H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill.; J. M. Lupton of J. M. Lupton & Son, Mattituck, N. Y.; Harrie B. McCullough of J. M. McCullough's Sons Co., Cincinnati, O.; M. S. Griffith of Griffith & Turner Co., Baltimore, Md.; Walter D. Ross of Ross Bros. Co., Worcester, Mass., and Dr. W. W. Tracy of Washington, D. C. Later on, our committee on necrology will present proper memorials, but let us at this time stand for a moment in silent tribute to these, our fellow members, who have passed on, purposing in our hearts that the courage and fidelity we have seen in their lives, shall inspire us to more noble living and greater achievements.

SEED LEGISLATION

A great amount of work has been done during the year by our Legislative Committee, Mr. Chas. D. Boyles, chairman, and Kirby E. White, vice-chairman. We were indeed fortunate in having two such men in our most important committee. They have not only given generously of their time, but have made long trips at their own expense. I wish also to heartily commend the work of our counsel, Curtis Nye Smith. He has been largely the guiding spirit in all our work, especially in legislative matters. He has carried on a large amount of correspondence with state representatives and committee members near future. We have been working on this matter of lower freight rates along with many other organizations and business firms all the year and the agitation has no doubt had its effect. Mr.

Alexander Forbes, Newark, N. J.
Vice-President American Seed Trade Ass'n.

Boyles, of our Legislative Committee has done a lot of work along this line. At one time he was assured by the railway executives that the ten per cent reduction of last fall on "Farm Products" would include all agricultural seeds, but later the railroads decided that the list was likely to be too long and ruled out seeds. Then a series of joint petitions to the railway executives was prepared by Mr. Boyles, and signed by the presidents of the American Seed Trade Association, the Wholesale Grass Seed Dealers Association, and the American Farm Bureau Federation. These seemed to have no effect at the time.

At the national agricultural conference at Washington last January, which I attended as representing the seed trade, the matter of high freight rates received large attention, and to my mind was the most important single item the conference had to consider. Just recently the joint congressional commission of agricultural inquiry, has completed its report on "Transportation" and congressman Sydney Anderson, chairman of the commission, who was also chairman of the agricultural conference, says "The largest single industrial endeavor is represented by transportation; it is the thing closest to our public welfare, yet its problems and relations seem but little understood." Mr. Anderson recommends in his report the establishment of a national transportation institute on broad lines to continue the study of the subject. We may be called upon as an association to have some part in this movement.

FREE SEED DISTRIBUTION.

It is perhaps a waste of time to talk about doing away with congressional free seed distribution. My predecessor however, H. G. Hastings, was quite hopeful a year ago that something might be done about it, and it did look at one time during the past year as if congress might be converted. Certain it is that the farmers do not care for free seeds. All the agricultural papers are with us and doing perhaps all they can. I found it comparatively easy to have a resolution condemning free seed distribution introduced at the national agricultural conference at Washington, and it was passed unanimously and with applause. The farmers do not want free seeds. But congress, convinced against its will, is of the same opinion still.

SEED LAW SUPPLEMENT.

Our counsel informs me that he has about finished the work of preparing a supplement to the seed laws of the United States, and the separate states, containing the new laws of 1921 and 1922. This is to be offered the original subscribers at cost, the same as before, and I recommend that our secretary be authorized to purchase a copy for the association.

UNITED ADVERTISING.

I want to commend most heartily the work of the garden bureau as carried on by Leonard Vaughan and his committee. From a purely business standpoint this appeals to me as very effective advertising, and I believe that every dollar put into it by our members during the past three years has been money well invested. A year ago I raised the question whether or not

C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O.
Sec'y-Treas. American Seed Trade Association

somewhat the same plan could not be applied to field seed advertising. Mr. Burdett, our very efficient director of the garden bureau, says that it can. To quote from his report of last year, he said, "I want to say that the propaganda can be applied very successfully to the promotion of farm and field seeds." Then he called attention to the campaign put on by the fertilizer manufacturers, through their self developing committee, with headquarters at Washington, stating they were spending a large amount of money each year in that department, with very satisfactory results. I want to suggest that for the coming year we make a start in this direction, either adding it to the work of the present garden bureau committee, perhaps changing the name of the committee, or else creating a new committee for this new line of work.

TRUTH IN ADVERTISING.

Along in April last one of our Illinois members called my attention to an advertisement of a certain Kansas firm which he said had been running in many of the leading farm papers, particularly in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and the South. The advertisement was headed "Red Clover, $11.00 Bushel" and went on to quote ridiculously low prices on a number of staple field seed items. It was of the same stripe as the advertisements that have been put out by certain Iowa and Illinois firms of rather unsavory reputation during the past few years, and I am sorry to say these advertisements have been accepted by some of the best agricultural journals. These people try to make the farmers think that they can buy first class seed at prices which are below the market, and many of the farmers either believe it or else seem to be perfectly willing to be fooled once.

Along this same line, a leading seed analyst has written me as follows: "During the past season of seed analysis work, I have found instances where seed advertised for sale in farm papers and also weekly papers, have been very largely misleading, and on account of the low prices quoted, no doubt many were induced to buy. I found some of the seed, which was offered in connection with these advertisements, to be of very poor quality. I believe that 'Truth' in advertising is very essential in the seed business, and I further believe that something should be done to bring this matter to the attention of the seed trade association in such a way that action will result, and that the evils now existing can be corrected. I think you will agree with me when I say your firm and other firms in the wholesale business are obliged to meet the competition of the advertising referred to above, and consequently are placed at a very great disadvantage."

My suggestion in connection with this subject is that a resolution be adopted by this convention to the effect that agricultural papers be asked to use the utmost caution in accepting seed advertisements from unknown firms, or from firms not in good standing as members of this association and that before using an advertisement from a firm not holding a membership with us, they insist that such firm be vouched for by

BUSINESS INTEGRITY.

On January first I sent out cards to all our members as a New Year's greeting, bearing a quotation from Article II of the Constitution. These cards read as follows: "Our Purpose - To improve and perfect a standard of business integrity, which shall include purity of stocks, honesty of representation, carefulness of obligations and promptness in execution."

The phrase "Business Integrity" might have been needed years ago when our constitution was first written, but at this time it seems to me it is much more needed. As a result of the war, we all know there was a letting down of moral standards. Business men generally have realized this during the past year or so, and have been taking steps to improve the situation. Considerable has been accomplished but much remains to be done, and we of the seed trade, because of the very nature of our business and because of our peculiar temptations, need to give the matter special consideration.

Let us realize what it means to hold a membership in the American Seed Trade Association, an organization which stands for the highest honor and for absolute fair dealing in every transaction. I know we have had much to contend with during the past two seasons. With the business depression and the lack of orders on the one hand, and unfair competition both from the government and from unscrupulous seed firms on the other; it has surely been discouraging. Most of us know what it is to have financial troubles. Many have been dangerously near actual failure, while some have had to give up entirely.

But let us be encouraged. Conditions have improved and are still improving. Ours is a great vocation. Seeds are fundamental. Very much depends on the sort of seeds we furnish and the way we furnish them. We have had some great men in our association. Their lives should inspire us. Let us resolve that we will give real service and that we will be true to the ideals set forth in our constitution.

Considerable attention has been given by rotary clubs throughout the country the past year, to the importance of having a written code of ethics or business methods in every organization such as ours. I think this is a good idea and recommend that a special committee be appointed by the incoming president to prepare a code of ethics, and submit for our consideration at our next annual convention. We could not of course expect to cover every matter of difference likely to come up, as between growers and wholesalers or between wholesalers and retailers by a hard and fast set of rules, or to say just exactly what our conduct should be at all times in our dealings with the public, but broad principles could be laid down that would help very much. Article II of the constitution furnishes a beginning for the work of this committee, but I think the whole question should be further developed.

To sum up, my recommendations are: First, that Curtis Nye Smith be retained as our counsel for the coming year. Second, that the secretary be instructed to procure a copy of the new supplement to the seed law. Third, that united field seed advertising be taken up for the coming year as well as united garden seed advertising. Fourth, that a resolution be adopted asking the agricultural papers of the country to exclude from their columns all seed advertising of firms not members of the American Seed Trade Association, unless endorsed by the seed analysts of their respective states. Fifth, that a special committee be appointed to prepare a code of ethics.

John Lewis Childs Estate.

In the final report filed June 14 of the appraisement of the estate of the late John Lewis Childs, Floral Park, N. Y., who died March 5, 1921, the total value is $630,706.48. The personal property amounted to $582,469.74, and his realty holdings $48,238.74. Deductions total $188,884.84, leaving a net estate of $441,821.64. The entire estate is willed to his widow, Mary Caroline Childs, of Floral Park.

The chief items in the personal assets consist of 1,950 shares preferred in John L. Childs, Inc., valued at $195,000; 1,800 shares of common stock in the same firm valued at $173,970, and 310 shares of the Preferred Accident Insurance Co., valued at $154,860. Cash in banks aggregated $20,608.01.

Mr. Childs had an equity of $25,859.38 in an 84-acre farm near Franklin Square, and an equity of $8,354.86 in a 16-acre farm at Little Neck. His collection of mounted birds, which was regarded as one of the choicest in this country, is valued at $7,391.40. A collection of minerals and precious stones is appraised at $2,500, while his collection of mounted mammals has a valuation of $275. A portrait of John Burroughs, naturalist, is valued at $500.

Mr. Childs owned a large library of works on minerals, birds, fruits, mammals, etc., which is valued at $11,500.

The Flowerfield establishment at Northport consists of 819 acres and was deeded to the company in consideration of $125,610.

Government Inspection of Onion Sets.

The United States department of agriculture, bureau of markets, under date of June 14, has sent out the following letter to the trade:

"Fruit and vegetable shippers will undoubtedly be interested to know that, effective July 1, 1922, the food products inspection service, maintained by this bureau, will have authority to make inspection at shipping point. If you ship onion sets, or other perishable products, on which you wish a government certificate, setting forth all the facts regarding the quality and condition of the shipment at time of inspection, this service will be available upon request. A small fee is charged for each inspection. This fee is $4 for carloads and $2.50 for any quantity not more than half an ordinary carload.

"If you desire to use this service, we would appreciate a letter from you, stating the number of cars you expect to ship and the date of shipment, in order that we may be in position to arrange for handling the work."

This seems to be a new move by the department.

California Vegetable Seed.

The general growing condition of vegetable-seed crops in California is better than at this time last year, according to reports received during the week ending June 10. The rainfall has been more nearly normal in all sections and it is anticipated that less irrigation will be required than for the past two years.

Many of the crops, however, are two to three weeks late and some replanting of lettuce and radish has been necessary. The planting of garden pole beans has been completed and the season has been ideal for germination of the seed and development of the young-er plants.

There is an increased acreage of most kinds of vegetable seed in California over that of last year, although dealers have been slow to place contracts, and growers, some of whom still have a surplus on hand, have been reluctant to plant a speculative acreage.—Government Report.

On June 15, James H. Burdett, director of the National Garden Bureau, broadcasted a talk on perennials, from radio broadcasting station KYW, Chicago. This being the season for sowing seeds of many perennials for garden use, he described briefly the desirability of a flower garden, the peculiar merits of perennials, some precautions which should be taken in sowing and transplanting them, and gave a brief list of the sorts most popular and easiest for amateurs to grow. Several gardening talks have been broadcasted from Chicago by representatives of the National Garden Bureau this season, and the bureau hopes, in another year to establish a regular service to broadcasting stations.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—So many trees have been required for park purposes and new streets at the capital, that the government nurseries at Fort Dupont have been unable to meet the demand and it is proposed to establish a new tree nursery of 30 acres in Anacostia River Park, sanction for which is asked in a bill now before congress.

FOUR hundred trees, which will be planted next fall in New York parks and along some of the principal thoroughfares, were recently purchased in Chicago and other cities by Francis D. Norway Maple.

Following the native white and red maples and the box elder (Acer Negundo), the Norway maple (Acer platanoides) is now covered with its clusters of yellow flowers; and of the trees of large size which grow in New England only the red maple and some of the willows are more conspicuous in early spring. The Norway Maple, which in spite of its common name in this country is not exclusively a Scandinavian tree but is widely distributed over Europe and reaches the Caucasus, is one of the few European trees which grows well and attains old age in our northeastern states. There are, however, a few other European trees which have grown to a large size here, and the horsechestnut, the white and the fragile willows, some of the poplars, three or four of the lindens, the elms, the beech and the birches often are as much at home as they are in western Europe, but not other European tree has been more generally planted in the eastern states during the last fifty years than the Norway maple which flourishes from southern New England to the Potomac. It is a round-topped tree with wide-spreading branches, sometimes a hundred feet high, with a trunk three or four feet in diameter, although trees of such size have not yet been produced in America; it has comparatively smooth light brown bark, smooth pale branches and dark green lustrous leaves with pointed lobes, which turn yellow in the autumn. The flowers, which open before the leaves appear, are arranged in compact round clusters. The fruit is clustered and smooth with large spreading wings. The Norway maple is able to bear without injury the conditions of American city life, but its branches naturally spread so wide that it cannot wisely be used except to shade exceptionally wide sidewalks. Few of our native trees grow so well in the immediate neighborhood of the seacoast. The seedlings of few trees have shown a greater tendency to variation, and many of the varieties of the Norway maple have been largely propagated by European nurserymen. There are a dozen or more of the most distinct of these varieties in the Arboretum collection, and among them are some handsome plants. The variety columnare is one of the best of the trees with fastigate branches although it is broader and less columnar than the form of the sugar maple with erect growing branches Acer saccharum (var. monumentale), or the fastigate red maple (var. columnare). One of the handsomest of dwarf trees is the variety globosum, a round-topped bush branching from the ground. The large and symmetrical specimen of this plant which had been growing since 1888 in the Arboretum was badly injured by the heavy snow and high winds of the severe winter of 1919-20. It has now made new branches and will soon be as handsome as ever. Forms of this tree with deeply divided leaves are var. dissectum and var. cucullatum, the eagle claw maple. These are small trees which are more curious than beautiful. The most popular of the varieties of the Norway maple is the var. Schwedleri. Early in the season this tree has bright red leaves which before summer turn dark dull green. The color of the spring leaves attracts nurserymen, and this tree has been planted largely in the neighborhood of eastern cities. The dull unnatural color of the mature leaves makes this, however, an undesirable tree for general planting. More attractive is the variety Stollii with large three-lobed leaves, purple as they unfold but later dark green. This is one of the most distinct of all the forms of the Norway maple in the Arboretum collection.—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, May 5, 1922.

COACHELLA VALLEY, CALIF., expects to harvest 100 tons of dates.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—A state potato and apple show will be held here during the week of December 4-9. It will be held in conjunction with the annual meeting of the Michigan State Horticultural Society.

THE acreage of onions in 20 states is estimated at 43,325 acres, as compared with 42,370 acres in 1921. New York has 7,620 acres this year; California 7,300 acres. The acreage in Texas has increased from 800 acres last year to 2,000 acres this year, a record.

A FOKKER airplane will carry 1,000 pounds of fancy asparagus, freshly cut, from farms in Gloucester county, New Jersey. By the air schedule, it is expected to have the asparagus on the dinner tables of New Englanders within five hours after it leaves the farm.

Prices of Indoor Fruits and Vegetables.

Chicago, June 20.—Cucumbers, per two dozen, $2.50; lettuce, leaf, 3-lb. box, 18 cents; mushrooms, per pound, $1.00-$1.10; tomatoes, per pound, 15 cents; radishes, doz. bunches, 75 cents.

New York, June 17.—Cucumbers, $1 to $2 per dozen; mushrooms, $4.00 to $6.00 per three-pound basket; tomatoes, per pound, 15 to 30 cents.

Vegetable Movement.

The total carlot movement of 13 leading lines of fruits and vegetables for the week ending June 17, was 16,223 cars, an increase of more than 4,000 cars over last week's shipments. This increase is due to heavier movement of cantaloupes, watermelons, new potatoes, peaches, onions, tomatoes and early apples. Cabbage, celery, lettuce, old potatoes and strawberries moved in lighter volume. Prices for potatoes, cantaloupes, tomatoes and watermelons are lower. Good peaches held steady to firm.

Early Irish Potato Production.

Production of 20,672 cars of 200 barrels each of early Irish potatoes in the states that produce and ship after the early southern crop has gone to market is forecast from the condition of the crop on June 1 by the United States department of agriculture. This is an increase over 1921 of about 1,700 cars. The indicated yield per acre is the same as the reported yield last year and the acreage planted is greater.

Production in New Jersey is forecast at 10,951 cars, or a little less than the 11,125 cars of 1921. Production in Kansas is forecast at 2,816 cars as compared with 2,923 cars in 1921. Increased production is indicated in all of the other five states comprising the group. Maryland will have 3,375 cars as compared with 2,722 cars last year; Kentucky, 1,635 cars as compared with 1,225; Oklahoma, 1,089 cars as compared with 472; Missouri, 542 cars as compared with 338; and Arkansas, 264 cars as compared with 160.

Tomatoes for Canning.

Acreage planted to tomatoes for canning purposes this year is estimated at 205,900 acres by the United States department of agriculture, as reported by canners May 1. In 1921, the area of canning tomatoes was 87,900 acres, with a production of 430,631 tons. In 1920, the acreage totaled 230,600.

Estimates of the acreage in New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland are somewhat uncertain, as only a part of the crop has been set out, but conditions indicate a total of about 64,400 acres in these three states. California will have 30,000 acres; Indiana, 47,500; Missouri, 10,800; New York, 9,000; Virginia, 8,300; Ohio, 7,700; and Utah, 5,100 acres. About 68 per cent of the total acreage will be in New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Indiana, and California.

Recent rains on the eastern shore of Maryland and in Delaware and New Jersey have furnished an abundance of moisture for tomatoes, and the crop is being transplanted as rapidly as possible.

Commercial Truck Crops.

The condition of the early Irish potato crop June 1 was 78 per cent of normal, according to the United States department of agriculture. This was an improvement of one point since May 1, but it was two points below the average for the preceding seven years.

The commercial crop of watermelons had a condition of 83 per cent on June 1, which was the same as on May 1. The June 1 condition was five points above the seven-year average. Cantaloupes had a condition of 84 per cent June 1, or one point less than on May 1, and three points above the seven-year average.

Among other truck crops, tomatoes had a condition of 85 per cent June 1; asparagus, lettuce, and onions, 89 per cent; snap beans and cucumbers, 80 per cent; cabbage, 86 per cent; and strawberries, 88 per cent.

For the entire cabbage crop, which includes the farm crop as well as the commercial crop, a condition of 91.2 per cent on June 1 is reported. The entire onion crop condition was 90.4 per cent; watermelons, 82.6 per cent; cantaloupes, 86.5 per cent; and blackberries and raspberries, 92.6 per cent.

Lancaster County Florists' Association.

The 116th regular meeting of the club was held at the home of A. F. Strickler of Engleside on Thursday, June 15, with almost 100 per cent attendance. Mr. Strickler is a market gardener with flowers as two-thirds of his output, and a collection of outdoor flowers such as found only in places like Dreer's or Michell's. In addition to these he grows some vegetables and everything that he has is given the best cultivation, one of the party who visits his grounds frequently made the remark that they never saw a weed on the place. The home is on the banks of the Conestoga and a delightful old country mansion, presided over by Mrs. Strickler with the same care that is given to the out of doors, perhaps some of the credit for the conditions outside might be given to her.

President H. K. Rohrer called the meeting together on the lawn. Mrs. L. K. Vondersmith and Miss E. Strachan who are establishing a business in hardy stock, and Edgar Herr were proposed and elected to membership in the club. E. F. Barr in behalf of the State Nursery Association asked the club to make a contribution to the work they are carrying on to discover a method of checking or exterminating the Japanese beetle. After some discussion the club voted $25.00 toward this purpose.

Charles B. Herr reported on the trip to Stafford and Elmer Weaver on the Dreer establishment at Riverton. Mrs. Chas. Newbold of the F. & I. Tobacco Products Co. gave a short talk on their industry and its relation to the florists business.

Picnics were the next point of discussion and we are fortunate in having two for them to look forward to, the first at Reading next month and the second at the home of B. F. Barr in August. The Reading trip will be for seniors, with the Barr trip for families and a few of our friends.

After the meeting refreshments were served in the shape of home grown strawberries, ice cream and as much of Mrs. Stricklers' famous sponge cake as one could eat with coffee as a final. The host and hostess were given a vote of thanks for the delightful evening and a rousing three cheers, after which there was an automobile parade back to Lancaster.

ALBERT M. HERR.

Nassau County Horticultural Society.

The annual rose show of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held in the Nassau County Club, at Glen Cove, N. Y., June 13. Besides roses there were entries of outdoor flowers, fruit and vegetables. Fine roses were exhibited. Mrs. Herbert L. Pratt led in the number of prizes taken in all classes, capturing 14 first and three second prizes. Other first prize winners were: Arthur V. Davis, for 12 sprays rambler roses; Mrs. A. C. Bedford, for best 25 sprays sweet peas; Mrs. Andrew Fletcher, for best vase, 12 spikes antirrhinum; Mrs. A. C. Bedford, for best table decoration of outdoor flowers and best basket of roses, arranged for effect.

Mrs. Harold I. Pratt, sister-in-law to Mrs. Herbert L., took first for best vase of flowering shrubbery and several first prizes for vegetables.

American Sweet Pea Society.

Annual Meeting and Exhibition, Boston, Mass., June 24-25.

Weather Conditions Unfavorable.

Through no fault of the officers and members of the American Sweet Pea Society, their annual meeting and exhibition came near being a failure.
There were but few exhibitors and only a limited amount of stock was staged. It is but just to state that under past weather conditions the exhibits were creditable.

The ancients had a god—we think they called him Jupiter Pluvius—who, to drop into Wall Street parlance, they believed to be a "bear" on weather, so if the weather was bad they blamed him, but had to put up with it. We have no superstitious beliefs about the weather, but when it is bad we too have to grin and bear it. Briefly stated, for five days previous to June 21 there was almost continuous rain throughout Massachusetts, which for the time being ruined the sweet peas to the extent that the greater part of them were unfit to exhibit.

Edwin Jenkins, gardener for Girard
Foster, Lenox, Mass., was the only exhibitor that mustered enough stock to compete for the Hutchings Memorial cup, which called for the finest 12 distinct varieties, 20 sprays to a vase, correctly named, in addition to which the W. Atlee Burpee Co.'s prizes were awarded. In this exhibit the following named varieties were noted: Daisy K.
Elliott, Ravenswing, Cecily, Floradale
Purple, Hebe, R. F. Felton, Felton's
Cream, Rose Elliott, Constance Hinton,
Alex. Malcolm, Mrs. Tom Jones, Masett's Ingomar.

The Hutchins Memorial cup, to be held for one year only, for the finest 12 distinct varieties, 20 sprays to a vase, was won by Edwin Jenkins, gardener to Girard Foster, Lenox, Mass. This exhibit was also awarded the Burpee trophy cup, and a first prize.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting was held in Horticultural hall on the afternoon of June 24, with a small attendance. President Sperling opened the meeting with a brief but pleasing address. He, like all present, deeply regretted that weather conditions had been so unfavorable.
The secretary's report showed the society to be in a flourishing condition.
Treasurer William Sim reported all bills paid and a balance of $446.34 on hand.

All the officers were re-elected: W. A.
Sperling, New York, president; David Burpee, Philadelphia, Pa., vice-president; William Gray, Newport, R. I., secretary; William Sim, Cliftondale, Mass., treasurer. It was voted to hold the meeting and exhibition of 1923 in Boston. After a brief general discussion the meeting adjourned.

Massachusetts Hort. Society Exhibits.

The old reliable Massachusetts Horticultural Society can always be depended upon to provide some good stock for an exhibition. It did so on this occasion and its assistance turned what would have been a failure into a success.

The main exhibition was held in the large lower hall, under the supervision of James Wheeler. A bountiful supply of late blooming peonies from the nursery of T. C. Thurlow & Sons, Inc., West Newbury, Mass., was arranged around the walls on a background of cedars with fine effect. The Thurlows also exhibited other groups and a table of peonies. On the table fine seedlings were noticed, and such named varieties as Alfred De Musset, Jules Calot, Constant Devered, Madame Mancher, Eugene Verdier, Venus, and La Landresce. There was a creditable exhibit of cut hybrid perpetual and climbing roses. In all the collections we thought Dr. Van Fleet the most attractive rose.

A particularly interesting exhibit consisted of 14 pots of seedling shower tuberous begonias, by Mrs. Lester Leland, Manchester, Mass. (Eric H. Waterlow, gardener). All were finely flowered in a variety of pink and yellow shades. This was the most novel exhibit in the hall.

On the afternoon of June 24, Dr. Robert Huey of Philadelphia, Pa., delivered a lecture on "The Culture of Outdoor Roses," beautifully illustrated with stereopticon views of blooms of many kinds.

Notes of the Exhibition.

The Hillcrest Gardens, Weston, Mass., made a good display of garden roses, attractively arranged on a background of tall delphiniums. In the small side hall there was quite a collection of wild flowers.

George Kerr, the sweet pea expert for the W. Atlee Burpee Co., attended the show and meeting, but brought no exhibits. He thought Mars was too near the earth.

Among the cut ramblers, Silver Moon, Gardenia, Prof. C. S. Sargent, American Pillar, Philadelphia Rambler and White Tausendschon were noticed.

A. J. Fish, New Bedford, Mass., makes a specialty of climbing roses and his exhibit contained a number of well known names.

Wm. Gray, Newport, R. I.
Secretary American Sweet Pea Society.

When John H. Stalford could come all the way from Maine, more local men might have attended.

Among the interesting rose exhibits were the hybrid teas by David Tyndall, Brockton, Mass.

Sweet Peas at Floradale.

Sweet peas in California are reported to be making a splendid growth this season the accompanying illustration from a photo taken first week in May at the Floradale farms of the W. Atlee Burpee Co., Lompoc, Calif., shows their early flowering varieties to have been well advanced at that time. They are now ripening and the promise of a good crop of healthy plump seed is assured.

Three novelties, Burpee's Orange, Cheerful and Sunburst Improved, will be offered in quantity in 1923. Each of these varieties have been awarded certificates of merit. Mrs. Warren G. Harding, sent out last year, is also a quantity production. Over 150 acres are devoted to the culture of sweet peas for seed, the greatest care being taken in roguing and keeping the various varieties true to name and color.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

It is now vacation time, and while some are away and others looking forward to pleasant outings and trips they have been planning for a long time, there must still be careful supervision of the business, which at this season is at its lowest ebb. At times, however, generally on account of the demand for funerals, the diminished store force is taxed to the utmost to meet the requirements of a busy day. It is very important to keep in close touch with the market at this time in order to be able to locate scarce stocks, such as lily of the valley, cattleyas, choice roses, Easter lilies and other items that when the demand is light appear to be plentiful, but when the big orders commence to come in, shorten up and the limited supply is soon exhausted.

While large stocks of standard supplies are not desirable at this time, there should be sufficient palm leaves, ribbons, chiffons, letters, script, and other accessories on hand ready for instant use. It is not only annoying but adds considerably to the expense to have to hold an order up until something is obtained to complete it.

Next week will usher the glorious "Fourth," the nation's holiday. While the store will be closed all day, arrange a good showing of flags together with red, white and blue flowers. Such a window if given a good setting with the necessary foliage as a background, will be sure to attract attention and be talked about, which is the best kind of publicity.

A good window decoration for a few days at a time in summer, can be used to feature the "Florist's Telegraph Delivery" service. Tie up a dozen assorted-sized cut-flower boxes, and address these with tags received from florists in distant cities, who will be found very willing to exchange tags with you for a similar purpose. An open box of nicely arranged flowers gives the impression that the others are also full. The window cards and literature of the F. T. D. are to be conspicuously used, all of which with a background of plants will make a very showy window, and sure to result in increased out-of-town business.

CIBOTIUM SCHIEDEI.

The lace-like fronds of the cibotium, the most beautiful of decorative ferns, while delicate in appearance are quite sturdy. The plant if given ordinary care will last a long time and if damaged, will come back in fine condition after a summer term in the greenhouse. It is most effective as a decorative plant for store or window. In many florist's windows they have grown until they became too large for the limited space. They make a fine background for a summer display when medium sized plants, arranged growing on a mossy bank, extend their fronds over a miniature pond filled with water lilies.

Keep the firm name to the front and associate it at all times with quality flowers. In addition to outside signs a narrow beveled glass strip with the firm name in gilt letters will find a conspicuous place on the floor of the window next the glass. This should have a flush wooden backing with small blocks keeping it at an angle of 45 degrees. Frequently there is but one sign above the cornice and this cannot readily be observed except from across the street. Even the name on the glass is not easily seen by one close up, as it is generally placed above the line of vision so as not to interfere with the display.

BURPEE'S EARLY FLOWERING SWEET PEAS, FLORADALE FARMS, LOMPOC, CALIF.

W. Atlee Burpee, Jr. and Farm Manager Harry Buckman on Inspection Tour.

Many florists carry on their business under the name of the building they are in, or the street or block in which the store is situated, while others simply hang out the sign, "Florist." This is not good business, as a man's name is personal and should be his most cherished possession. Personality is a great asset in a well conducted business. Building and street names, if they have attained any prestige, lose this when, as is often the case, the business has to be moved to other locations.

Boys and girls, young men and women, will if observing and they stay around long enough, pick up considerable knowledge about the business, but they would get along much faster if they are given a little instruction. Most proprietors and others are so well up in preparatory work and all the succeeding steps to finished floral arrangements, gained from long experience, that it becomes second nature to them. A little time taken to impart some of this knowledge to those anxious to learn will be well invested, and greatly increase their efficiency.

Asters will soon be on the market and become one of the summer staples. Their soft bottom foliage should always be removed, as in the jars of water it becomes foul almost over night. A little formaldehyde in the water will prevent fermentation and keep the stems and foliage intact. About three drops to a two-quart or gallon jar will be sufficient. An ordinary dash bottle such as is used for condiments, filled with one part formaldehyde to nine parts water is a quick method to apply, as a dash or two is sufficient.

Have you seen the very effective advertisements now being run by the national publicity in the popular magazines, to increase the demand for flowers. Tie up with this work by displaying clippings of these ad's in your windows. They will bring you business, and in return, send in your check to show that you appreciate the work of this energetic committee.

"On National Advertising."

Reply to a criticism of G. E. M. Stumpp, New York, by P. F. O'Keefe, of the P. F. O'Keefe Advertising Agency, Inc., Boston, Mass.

In the June issue of another publication is an article, purporting to have been written by C. E. M. Stumpp. The article is headed, "On National Advertising: A Florist's Opinion Rendered Without Varnish." Mr. Stumpp is a florist of New York, and the national advertising he refers to, is the "Say it with Flowers" campaign from which he has received benefit, together with thousands of other florists from coast to coast.

Mr. Stumpp's reason for writing the article—if indeed he did write it—is hard to imagine, but what he has accomplished, is a lengthy tirade of abuse of the efforts of the committee of publicity of the Society of American Florists, which is extremely unfair, unfounded and wilfully misleading. It would be unnecessary and unprofitable to answer Mr. Stumpp's article, were it not for the fact, that what looks like a deliberate effort to thwart the unselfish work of the publicity committee, if allowed to go unchallenged, might result in unsettling the minds of those florists not in close touch with the publicity work, and who might wrongly construe Mr. Stumpp's real motive.

It is strange indeed, then, at this late date, after the publicity committee entrusted with the advertising have attained the result they set out for, that he should now come forward and strew it with ashes, in the hope of spoiling a success beyond anything he dreamed of.

The reason why so many people succumb to the temptation to criticize advertising, is because it requires no constructive ability to do so. There is no constructive ability shown in Mr. Stumpp's article, a fact which escaped Mr. Stumpp as clearly as everything else regarding the florist advertising escaped him, for he ends up by stating that he considers his offering, "constructive criticism."

Let's look for it.

Paragraph No. 1 is a story about "a nigger, who rode a mile on a merry-go-round, and got no where." Very constructive.

Paragraph No. 2 seems to give the key to the "joke," which is to the effect, that the advertising of the Washburn-Crosby Co., for Gold Medal flour—"Eventually, Why not now?" is no good, because "Very few people know what kind of flour it is." We venture the remark here, that, Mr. Stumpp couldn't name any other flour than this to save his soul, unless he got help from some one. And for his information, no brand of flour can show within a tenth of the sales of Gold Medal. They should worry whether Mr. Stumpp likes their advertising. He is eating their flour.

Paragraph No. 3: "A man said to me the other day: 'You florists certainly put over the greatest slogan ever put over, and then you died. What happened to you?' Here evidently is a slogan greater than 'Eventually, Why not now,' because no one has any doubt as to what it wants you to do, or what it refers to. How many millions of dollars have been spent to advertise Gold Medal flour we do not know, but there have been millions, and yet the florists did, for less than $100,000, a better job. Mr. Stumpp, however, is unaware of even having made this point himself for he says in paragraph No. 4: 'I have thought it over, and not only that, talked it over. Everybody is looking for national advertising, clamoring for it, but none of us seem to want to put any money into the publicity fund.' Then he asks, 'Why,' and we wonder if he calls this constructive criticism. You can't build without material, you know, Mr. Stumpp, even though you can criticise without constructive ability.

Paragraph No. 5 is a story of an Irishman and a gambler going to church, ending with a pointless remark about the publicity committee getting "sore." if they read Mr. Stumpp's article. Here is Mr. Stumpp's big idea, we believe, for he says he wants to make them "sore," so they will do some advertising to help Mr. Stumpp's business, even though he says he won't help himself.

Paragraph No. 6 concerns the buying of a suit of clothes. You take it, if you like it. Paragraph No. 7 says: "You can't do that with the florist advertising. You take it," he says, "like it or not." This is not so, as you know, Mr. Stumpp, for you received an advance proof of every advertisement sent out, and wrote not one single word about it to the committee or anyone else. You forget, Mr. Stumpp, that the publicity committee, consisting of five leading florists and men of standing and ability, pass on all advertising of every kind, and either reject it or approve it before it is issued. If this publicity committee is not capable, write and say so, and ask that they be removed, giving your reasons, Mr. Stumpp.

Paragraph No. 8: "Say it With Flowers is ancient history." Nice constructive criticism here, men.

Paragraph No. 9: "The florists' business is better adapted for advertising than anything else." Verily, here is a broad statement from a man who confesses he knows nothing about advertising. Why is it, Mr. Stumpp? Do people have to have flowers? If they love them to the extent that they place them above all other desires of life, why advertise them. You mistake the purpose of advertising, which is not to make pictures that please, but messages that prompt action. It is easy to make a picture on paper which makes people exclaim—"What a beautiful advertisement." It is another thing to make an advertisement that makes people say—"That must be worth having—worth doing—worth seeing."

Also in Paragraph No. 9 we find that the man who sees no merit in the advertising of "Eventually, Why not now," or "Say it with Flowers," makes this statement: "If an advertising man can take a pile of bricks and make you long for them—what should he be able to do with an armful of flowers?" We join with Mr. Stumpp in asking, "what indeed"? We long for a pile of bricks at this moment and for a purpose which even Mr. Stumpp may guess—unaided at that—but no advertising man made us long for it, and no advertising man ever made anyone else long for a pile of bricks, by intention or accident.

Someone must have told Mr. Stumpp that a campaign of advertising to create favorable public opinion to use bricks, for more permanence and beauty in building, has been launched. We venture the opinion that Mr. Stumpp has not the slightest conception of this campaign, nor could quote one single word from it, unless it be the word "brick," let alone giving one example of anyone who ever longed for bricks because of the advertising.

Paragraph No. 10: This is beyond us. It sounds like a man repeating a formula for enticing sleep. Listen to it. "All an advertising man can do, is to go by what has been done, and the essence of advertising is in doing something different. Knowing these facts, we know that we know very little." Say it over a few times, and see if we are not right. It certainly makes no sense. What does that word essence mean there, and what facts does he refer to? But wait, here is the constructive criticism coming at last.

Sweet Peas Outdoors.
Single Plant in Four-Inch Pot, Ready to Set Out.

Paragraph No. 11: "But we can tell the effect of advertising, and the best test is on the little bell on your cash register, and a dumb bell can hear that." You are right, Mr. Stumpp, as every fair-minded florist will attest. Since the "Say it with Flowers" campaign was started four years ago, the business of florists, generally, has been going so strong all over the country, that the cash register bell has rung loud enough for a dumb bell to hear it.

Paragraph No. 12: "Is there any reason why the florists should not have what they are clamoring for, and are willing to pay for?" No reason, Sir, unless you are able to succeed in hurling a monkey wrench into the machine and stopping the contributions for a national campaign of a size worthy of the cause. Are you paying your share, Mr. Stumpp, and getting others to pay theirs?

Paragraph No. 13: About other people advertising to sell more than people need.

Paragraph No. 14: Thousands of features could be advertised.

Paragraph No. 15: "In my opinion," and then listen to what Mr. Stumpp believes the best feature of the thousands he says exist. Get men to wear a "boutonniere bouquet." A single flower bouquet! There at last is a constructive idea. Is it not sublime? He wants the florists to get enough money together to change over the habits of thought of men, so that each will wear a boutonniere every day. Could this be done? It might, but no advertising man in his senses would attempt it with an appropriation less than a million dollars. And after it had been done, what then? What profit in selling a single flower? For just as surely as the single flower idea was popularized for men, women would follow suit, bless them, and then how about the dumb bell hearing the cash register jingle!

There are three more paragraphs to this, but that effort of the flower in the buttonhole was Mr. Stumpp's swan song, as it was his entire repertoire, so far as constructive criticism was concerned.

Now, we would humbly suggest—because we have the florists' interests vitally at heart as their advertising counsellors—that Mr. Stumpp, instead of spreading himself in florists' magazines to secure some free publicity for himself, write a frank letter to the mem-

THE S. A. F.

The Kansas City Convention.

Arrangements for the 1922 convention of the society, to be held in Kansas City, August 15, 16, and 17, are rapidly approaching completion, and a most successful gathering is looked for. The convention is to be housed in one of the finest buildings in the country adapted for such purposes. Convention further to conveniences in this direction the secretary has arranged with the trunk line associations for the privilege of sending certificates in advance to every member of the society, so that personal applications for them need not be made. These certificates are all numbered and recorded so as to render them traceable in the event that they are used by others than members of the society, the reduced fares applying only to bona fide members of the society.

The Trade Exhibition.

Already about 55 exhibitors have made reservations of space in the trade exhibition, and many prospective exhibitors are in correspondence with the secretary's office in regard to space. It looks as though every foot of available space will be taken up. The Kansas City brethren are well organized, and have about 18 committees working upon local details of arrangements, and the resulting plans for the comfort and convenience of visitors will shortly be announced. Without doubt, the attendance will be of record character.

Membership Dues.

Recently, from the secretary's office, bills were mailed to all members in arrears for dues, and these members are urged to make prompt remittances. The society is in need of these funds, as they are applied wholly to the expenses of the society, which, necessarily, are quite large. Immediately upon receipt of checks for dues, membership cards are issued to those sending them, which must be presented by all in attendance at the convention.

National Publicity Campaign.

It is pleasing to record that quite a number of subscribers to the campaign fund have, in the last week or so, responded with checks covering the memorandums of subscription indebtedness recently sent out from the secretary's office. Still, very many have not yet responded to the appeal for immediate payment of pledges. It should not be necessary to further remind delinquents that the publicity committee needs the money pledged to them for the carrying on of the campaign. Progress is made only in proportion to the funds available, and unless sufficient money is in hand to cover advertising contracts at bers of the publicity committee, cutting out the jokes—they read the Sunday papers for themselves—and get right down to brass tacks, and say what he thinks would better the advertising of the florists. He knows well enough, as we all know, that what the florists need, are contributions to make up a real advertising appropriation.

Mr. Stumpp need not fear that the publicity committee will let advertising go out that wont ring the cash register bell. But don't criticise, Mr. Stumpp, if the bell doesn't ring when you do your best to stop others from contributing towards a fund that will pay for advertising on a broad enough scale to make it ring right merrily.

Sweet Peas Outdoors.

Charles Elliott, Park Ridge, a suburb of Chicago, has for some time made a specialty of out door sweet peas with which flowers he has been very successful. He has also succeeded in crossing and has raised a number of new varieties of considerable merit. Vases of fine flowers of six of his new sorts were exhibited at the June meeting of the Chicago Florists Club, each of which received the club's certificate. They were Highland Mary, rose pink; Miss Winifred Jones, cream pink; Miss Myra Valentine, light blue; June Bride, white; Mrs. David Lloyd George, oleander pink; and Mrs. Charles Elliott, blush.

These plants were raised from seed sown in pots last November in cold frames, and transplanted into the open on April 15. The accompanying photos taken on May 30, and June 10, give an idea of the methods of training, and show by the profusion of bloom, the strength and vigor of the vines.

hall is located at the corner of 13th street and Central avenue. The building is replete with all conveniences, and will provide for both meeting and trade exhibition.

Railroad Arrangements.

As previously announced, all members will be able to travel to Kansas City with the advantage of a rate of one fare and a half for the round trip on the certificate plan. To add still the time they should be made, the committee is sadly handicapped, and much of their work goes for nothing.

Among the subscriptions recorded at this time, it is pleasing to note one of $500 from Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, who have the success of the campaign very much at heart; another of $200 from J. F. Wilcox & Sons, Council Bluffs, Ia.; and still others of $100 each from A. Washburn & Sons, Bloomington, Ill., and Jackson & Perkins Co., Newark, N. Y.

And two we find before.
We stand behind before we find
What the two behind be for.

All flowers of spring are not May's own;
The crocus cannot often kiss her;
The snowdrop ere she comes, has flown—
The earliest violets always miss her.

American Peony Society.

NINETEENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The American Peony Society held its nineteenth annual meeting and exhibition at London, Ont., June 16-17, in co-operation with the Ontario Peony Society and the London Horticultural Society, with headquarters at the Hotel Tecumseh.

The exhibition was held at the armory which proved to be the largest and best exhibition hall ever provided the society as a place for the exhibition of peony blooms.

This is the first time the society has met in a Canadian city and the attending members have nothing but praise for the efficient management and accommodations provided by the local committee.

The number of blooms shown was large and the quality averaged high, while the large number of varieties represented made the exhibition a very instructive one.

A. H. Fewkes, Newton, Mass.
President American Peony Society.

The business meeting was held at the Hotel Tecumseh on the evening of June 16, preceded by a banquet.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Upjohn, Kalamazoo, Mich., treasurer; James Boyd, Haverford, Pa., director for three years.

In the absence of Prof. Saunders, who will be in Europe during the next year, W. E. Saunders of London, Ont., will act as recording secretary.

At the meeting, nearly 90 were added to the membership roll, this being the largest number admitted in any one year.

The next annual meeting and exhibition will be at St. Paul, Minn.

THE PRIZE WINNERS.

The principal prize, the society's gold medal and $50.00 was awarded to Thos. Thurlow & Sons, West Newbury, Mass., for collection of not more than 100 named varieties, double, one bloom of each. Other prize winners were F. L. Green, Greenwood, Mass.; T. H. Hill, Texas State Florists' Association.

CONVENTION PROGRAMME.

All indications point to a banner attendance at the eighth annual convention of the Texas State Florists' Association, which will be held at Dallas, July 5-7. An excellent programme has been arranged for the occasion, among the features being papers and addresses by men well known in the industry and numerous hospitalities provided for entertainment of the visitors.

The convention will be called to order at 2:30 p. m., July 5, by Vice-President Henry Greve, of Dallas, followed by the invocation by Dr. William M. Anderson, Jr., and an address of welcome by Mayor Sawnie Aldredge, responded to, on behalf of the association, by James Begbie, of Shreveport, La. Verner J. Davis, of Fort Worth, president of the association, will deliver his address at this session, after which there will be an introduction of guests, and the session will close following the reading of the reports of Secretary-Treasurer L. J. Tackett, of Fort Worth, and the appointment of committees. In the evening, there will be a reception and ball on the roof garden of the Jefferson hotel.

When the convention reconvenes at 9:30 the following morning, the standing committees will make their reports. The addresses announced for this session include: "How May a Florist Establish Better Credit as a Borrower?", by Roscoe Smith, manager of the Fort Worth Clearing House; "The Florists' Telegraph Delivery," by Otto Lang, Dallas, district representative of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association; also an address, topic to be announced later, by Walter Armacost, Los Angeles, Calif. At the afternoon session, John Furrow, of Oklahoma City, will speak on "Carnations and Carnation Diseases"; J. C. Vaughan, of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago and New York, will deliver an address, and A. S. Gray, president of the Oklahoma State Florists' Association, will take for his topic, "How I Rolled Up 80 Members for the Society of American Florists in Oklahoma." In the evening, the convention will be entertained at the Jefferson hotel by the representatives of the allied trades.

Robert C. Kerr, of Houston, will open the morning session of the third day with an address: "What is Texas Doing Toward the Society of American Florists and Its Allied Societies," followed by an address by J. F. Amman, of Edwardsville, Ill., and Charles Heacock, of Austin, will speak on "My Observations of Growing Under Lath and Cheese Cloth in California; To What Extent can Texas Use This Method." The principal address of the afternoon will be that of T. J. Noll, president of the Kansas City Florists' Club, whose talk will be on "The Society of American Florists' Convention."

The convention will close with the election of officers and the banquet which will follow in the evening at the Jefferson hotel.

Kansas State Florists' Association.

SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION, AUG. 3-4.

The second annual convention of the Kansas State Florists' Association, to be held in Fredonia, August 3-4 has every prospect of a very successful meeting. Practically all the original space allotted to trade exhibits has been taken by representative firms. This feature alone should justify a good attendance because of the opportunity for comparison and seeing the latest in the various lines.

The accommodations for meeting and exhibition rooms are adequate and very convenient. The programme promises to be very interesting, and at the same time ample opportunity for social features are provided.

The florists of Fredonia are anxious to be of service in helping to make the visitors enjoy their stay with them and do all in their power to make the convention a success. It is hoped there will be a representative attendance of the florists of the state and members of the association which is a vital point in all such gatherings.

Wisconsin State Florists' Association.

SUMMER MEETING, OSHKOSH, JULY 25-26.

Elaborate preparations are under way to make the summer meeting of the Wisconsin State Florists' Association at Oshkosh this year, a huge success. Indications point to a record attendance and hotel reservations should be sent in early to Jas. E. Taylor, 76 Frankfort street, Oshkosh.

HENRY R. WELKE, Sec'y.

Boston Notes.

BUSINESS GOOD WITH LIMITED SUPPLY.

Business was good during the past week. The supply of stock was not heavy and it is not expected to be particularly good at this time of year, but some fair roses came in and wholesaled at good prices considering their quality. There has been a fair demand for cattleyas at 75 cents to $1.25 each, wholesale rates. Not much can be said for carnations, as they are small and poor, but quantities of them have been selling. Reliable citizens state that for five days previous to June 21 there was almost continuous rain. It seems to have almost drowned the sweet peas as no good stock has been seen in the markets or retail stores. A moderate supply of sweet william, gypsophila and other outdoor stock has been arriving. As a matter of course the retailers must have been doing something and we find that weddings, commencements and the inevitable funeral work have all been a part of their week's business.

June 26.—The market is fairly active and roses move freely.

NOTES.

Edward J. Welch, son of the late Patrick Welch, opens a new wholesale florist and supply house July 1 at 288 Devonshire street, this city, under the firm name of Welch's, Inc. He is well known in the trade, having in the past traveled for Welch Bros. in New England and Canada. He is also well known on the Pacific coast, where he worked for a time for MacRorie & MacLaren. After leaving college in 1911 Mr. Welch received early training in greenhouse work at the Lakeview Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., under the supervision of the late Lawrence Cotter. He is a member of a number of florists' clubs and associations throughout the country.

Penn, 124 Tremont street, reports June business in wedding decorations and commencement bouquets up to the average for that month in the past. He is keeping up a fine stock of cut flowers, flowering and foliage plants and making attractive window displays with gladioli. Mr. and Mrs. Penn and two friends will start August 1 for a month's vacation in Maine.

The Rosary, James J. Casey's shop, 685 Boylston street, is always up to date and attractive. The interior has many interesting decorative effects. Along the front of the building a row of long boxes was noticed, filled with blue spruce of the uniform height of about three feet, and, so to speak, they form an attractive border.

Wm. E. Glidden, manager of the sales department of the Budlong Rose Co., 260 Devonshire street, has reported good business for the past week and since the hot wave passed. They are receiving a fair supply of good roses from their Auburn, R. I., range.

Caplan, who has been located at 144 Massachusetts avenue, has taken two nearby stores, 138 and 140, that are being connected, and Hitchings & Co., of Elizabeth, N. J., are erecting for him a neat conservatory in the rear.

In the Co-Operative market, Joseph E. O'Donnell, salesman for Thomas Roland, is handling good stock of the roses Columbia, Premier, Pilgrim, Crusader, Aaron Ward, Ophelia and Butterfly.

Although elsewhere, on June 24, peonies were gone, T. C. Thurlow's Sons, Inc., West Newbury, Mass., were sending in good stock. Some other growers and dealers wonder how they do it.

The business of Welch Bros. Co., 262 Devonshire street, is going on prosperously. Harold Welch, younger son of the late Patrick Welch, is now active in the business.

The Symphony Flower Shop, 240 Huntington, avenue, reports good business in wedding decorations and commencement bouquets, during the month of June.

The veteran, William Nicholson of Framingham, was a visitor to the flower show in Horticultural hall on June 24 and was as spry as the young fellows.

The John T. Cooke Co., 360 Commonwealth avenue, have an attractive store, opened a short time ago. Mr. Cooke feels much encouraged with his venture.

The Dolansky-McDonald Co., 5 Winthrop Square, reported good cleanups last week on their roses, orchids and carnations.

Sidney Hoffman, Commonwealth and Massachusetts avenues, reports good business in wedding and commencement work.

OBITUARY.

Dr. J. C. Whitten.

Dr. J. C. Whitten, for 26 years instructor in horticulture at the University of Missouri, died recently at Washington, D. C., from a complication of diseases resulting from an attack of influenza. Dr. Whitten was called from his home at Berkeley, Calif., about two weeks previous to his death to attend to some important matters at the United States department of agriculture at the capital and was taken ill shortly after his arrival in that city.

Dr. Whitten was 56 years old, and was a native of Augusta, Me. He was recognized as an authority in horticulture and his services were in demand. During the time that he lived in Columbia, he had calls from Cornell, Illinois and other universities, finally accepting the call to California.

The news of the death of Dr. Whitten will be received with the greatest sorrow by all who knew him, for he had many friends all over Missouri. During the time that he lived in Columbia, he not only proved himself to be a most faithful and energetic teacher, but also a man who made himself a part of the community and a loyal citizen.

Dr. Whitten's remains were taken to Columbia for burial, interment being in Columbia cemetery. A profusion of beautiful floral offerings followed him to his last resting place, services being held at the home of President J. C. Jones of the university. Honorary pallbearers were: President Jones, Dean F. B. Mumford, Dr. J. W. Conaway, and Professors M. F. Miller, E. W. Stephens, and Charles B. Bowling.

Dr. Whitten is survived by his wife, Mrs. Nora Todd Whitten and three children, Robert T. Whitten of the United States navy and Sylvester and Miss Martha Whitten of Berkeley, Calif.

John M. Butz.

John M. Butz, New Castle, Pa., one of this country's most prominent and successful orchid growers died Tuesday, June 20, 1922, in his 67th year. He was a son or the late Paul Butz and wife, and was born at New Castle, Pa., March 1, 1855.

Mr. Butz since early in life was associated with the firm of Paul Butz & Son, florists and nurserymen and after the organization of the firm of Butz Bros., florists in 1896, he had been connected with them as their orchid specialist.

Mr. Butz had been very successful the past 20 years in growing the beautiful orchids for which the Butz Bros. have become famous in western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio.

Mr. Butz was married March 22, 1887 to Annie Loy Morris, who survives him, as also three brothers and six sisters.

Governor Small’s Trial.

JULY FOURTH.

On account of the holiday next week, advertisers and correspondents are requested to mail copy for next week’s issue as early as possible.

Brunswick-Kroeschell Consolidation.

Kroeschell Bros. Co., well known greenhouse boiler manufacturers, Chicago, also Kroeschell Bros., Ice Machine Co., of the same city, have consolidated with the Brunswick Refrigerating Company of New Brunswick, N. J., and have been incorporated under the name Brunswick-Kroeschell Co.

The new company will maintain the present offices and factories in New Brunswick and Chicago with the various branch offices, and will combine the facilities and personnel of the former companies so that it may assure to its customers the most efficient service.

Advertise it With Flowers.

The Lehon Company of Chicago, manufacturers of mule-hide roofing and shingles, used flowers to feature and advertise their product at the convention of the Advertising Clubs of the World, held recently at Milwaukee, Wis.

In a structure showing the use of their shingles in roof covering, 3,600 carnation flowers were placed in concealed vases of water to form their trade mark. The novelty of using fresh flowers in featuring and calling attention to building materials not only created enthusiastic comment but resulted in considerable business for the enterprising exhibitors.

Here is a tip for florists who make decorative work a specialty. “Advertise It With Flowers” being a good slogan to work up business at all trade conventions as they occur.

Florida Asparagus Express Rating.

While the Florida State Florists’ Association is still young in years—not celebrating their first birthday till next November—at least one very important benefit has already been realized from their organization and one which will save the growers of cut asparagus sprays, for florist use, many thousand dollars each year.

In a recent communication from N. A. Reasoner, Oneco, Fla., the secretary-treasurer of the association, he states that pursuant to the instructions given him at the Lakeland convention he has taken up the matter of the express rate on asparagus shipments with the express officials and with the state railroad commission and while he has not yet succeeded in obtaining a reclassification of this subject in the second class rating as he hopes to be able to do, he has at least succeeded in obtaining a concession from the express company with regard to a proper allowance when ice is used for refrigeration. The following letter from the traffic manager of the American Railway Express Co. will be of interest:

“We have given this phase of the matter further consideration, and while we cannot see our way clear at this time to restore the second class rating, we are arranging in our new classification which will be effective July 15, to make an allowance of 25 per cent from gross weight on these shipments where ice is necessarily used for preservation. The weight charged for under this rule must not, of course, be less than the weight of the shipment without ice.”

Too much credit cannot be given also to S. S. Pennock, president of the Society of American Florists, and W. H. Schulz, Jr., second vice-president, representing the asparagus growers in the Florida association for their valiant assistance in furnishing information and co-operation in correspondence with the express officials.

While this allowance will be a great boon to the industry, it is felt by all growers that the old second class rating should be restored as it was formerly, and there seems to be many reasons to support their claim.

Chicago to Kansas City.

The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad has been chosen for the trip of the Chicago Florists’ Club members and friends to the annual convention of the Society of American Florists to be held at Kansas City, Mo., August 15-17, 1922. The party will leave the Union station, Canal and Adams streets at 6 p. m., standard time (7 p. m. Chicago time) Monday, August 14, due Kansas City the following morning at 8 o’clock.

The regular one-way fare is $16.54. Pullman fares are: Lower berth, $4.50; upper, $3.60; drawing room, $16.50; compartment, $12.75.

Make reservations early, as a special train will be provided with all the splendid equipment for which this road is famous, if the size of the party warrants.

For reservations, etc., address S. J. Owens, city passenger agent, C. B. & Q. Railroad, 179 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Telephone Wabash 4600.

Delegations from the north and east are invited to join the party at Chicago.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Those who wish to stop off at this important floral center can do so on the C. B. & Q. going or returning without making a special journey. To do this on the outward trip, it will only be necessary to make reservations in the St. Joseph sleeper on the same train due St. Joseph 7:20 Tuesday morning and proceed from St. Joseph to Kansas City by local train, reversing this arrangement on the return trip.

REDUCED CERTIFICATE PLAN RATES.

Members and delegates, and dependent members of their families, journeying to Kansas City, will be able to purchase round trip tickets at the rate of one fare and one-half on the identification certificate plan, good via the same route in both directions only. Return tickets must be validated at Kansas City by ticket agents at the regular ticket offices of the lines for which they are issued, on any date to and including final return limit, providing a train selected reaches the original starting point prior to midnight of the date limit. Certificates will be furnished on application to the secretary of the Society of American Florists, John Young, 43 West 18th street, New York City. One certificate will suffice for each member, and includes the dependent members of his or her family. These certificates should be properly filled out before presentation to the ticket agent.

The certificates will be in effect from Chicago, going August 11-17, the return limit being August 23.

Bribing Gardeners.

The British Nurserymen and Seedsmen reports that 32 seedsmen and nurserymen are members of the Bribery and Secret Commissions Prevention League, which organization is pledged to give no bribes to gardeners or other agricultural employees. A recent issue of the above journal gives a column of interesting details on the fight now being made in England against bribery of the above character.

BUSINESS IS MUCH BETTER.

Business is much better at this writing and the demand the past week was surprisingly good compared to the early part of June. There was a strong demand for wedding flowers and the market was well cleaned up on some items toward the end of the week. Peonies are in strong demand and command good prices. Some of the wholesalers have already sold out their supply of peonies that were in storage but several houses will have plenty to take care of the demand for a few more weeks. Gladioli are good property and cleaning up better at this writing than they have for sometime. Roses are having a good call especially fancy stock. Crusader, Mrs. Chas. Russell, Milady, Columbia, Premier, Sunburst, Golden Rule, Butterfly, Ophelia, Hoosier Beauty, Angelus, Montrose, Double White Killarney, Francis Scott Key, Hearst, Dunlop, Golden Ophelia, Nesbit and Cecile Brunner are included in the offerings. Carnations are still arriving and in some instances the quality is good considering the lateness of the season. Lily of the valley and orchids are obtainable at all times and sweet peas are in good supply. Delphiniums, larkspur, phlox, Easter lilies, candidum lilies, daisies, calendulas, candytuft, feverfew, pansies, statice, gypsophila, gaillardia, coreopsis, cornflowers and other miscellaneous indoor and outdoor stock is included in the shipments and offer the buyer a great variety to select from.

by thousands of friends for there was only one "Carnation Dan." They call him "Carnation Dan," because of the red flower that he wore near his heart. It was as much a part of his every day attire as his hat and its fresh petals was his most cherished memory—the memory of his dead sister. On the day, twenty years ago that she was laid to rest, he plucked a carnation from theasket floral piece. "I'll wear one every day and she will always be with me," he told a group of fellow newspapermen. "I'll keep her always near my heart." The love and esteem in which he lived among his fellow men is shown in a telegram from one of his friends to a local daily which read: "A sunbeam died when Dan O'Leary went west on his last assignment." The floral offerings were many and beautiful and his favorite flower was conspicuous in the designs.

W. J. Kidwell spent the week end at his home at Eagle Lake, Mich., where his family always enjoys the summer. Mr. Kidwell's youngest daughter graduated this month.

A. Miller, wife and daughter Suzanne acted as hosts to their many employees, June 25, at the A. B. C. farm at Hazel Crest, about 30 miles southwest of the city. After a tour of the gladioli fields where several hundred thousand bulbs are planted, a real old-fashioned chicken dinner was served followed by dancing and other pastimes. Vincent Neil was injured when chased by a bull but was able to enjoy the festivities, after a successful operation performed by Dr. Monblatt, one of the traveling representatives. Mr. Miller now spends his spare moments at the farm and enjoys placing into practice the technical knowledge obtained years ago at the National Farm School in Pennsylvania and the famous Philadelphia establishment of the W. Atlee Burpee Co.

The employees of Schiller's west side store held their annual party on the evening of June 22, when the big Madison street establishment was turned into a dance hall and handsomely decorated for the occasion. The employees from both stores with their families and friends to the number of 75 were present. Everyone had a most enjoyable time and it was at a late hour when the happy crowd dispersed.

Zech & Mann will be able to take care of their customers for some time to come with peonies, judging from the supply in storage. Gladioli are in good supply at this house not to mention all other stock in season. Walter Blackman, of the Wm. Blackman Floral Co., Evansville, Ind., was a visitor at this house, June 24, returning from the Shriners' convention at San Francisco, Calif.

The Cook County Fair Grounds Association, Inc., Palatine, has been organized, with a capital of $5,000. The incorporators are W. P. Gersline, C. De Witt Taylor, Frank F. Danielson, Ralph L. Peck, Harry H. Schoppe, Henry Brahms and H. H. Devermann.

John Poehlmann reports that Poehlmann Bros. Co. will cut its first outdoor gladioli this week with the initial shipments consisting principally of Halcy. Roses are in good supply at this establishment and the quality throughout is splendid for this season.

At A. L. Vaughan & Co.'s store the receipts of gladioli are much heavier and include outdoor stock from the immediate vicinity. Peonies are also quite a factor at this establishment and are in strong demand.

The J. A. Budlong Co. is moving a large supply of choice gladioli which are good property this week. Good summer roses are seen in quantity here with choice Hearst attracting the attention of the city buyers.

Swanson & Hagerman, proprietors of the Madison Floral Co., 2813 Fifth avenue, have dissolved partnership. F. Hagerman bought out S. Swanson who is in the market for a new place or an established store.

The Foley Greenhouse Manufacturing Co., notwithstanding the big fire at its plant January last, has been doing considerable business, recently shipping the last car of lumber on an Ohio contract for 14 houses, 30x420 feet each, all redwood material with galvanized pipe supports and fittings throughout. The firm's new factory and offices are making rapid progress.

All that remained of the personal estate of Harlow-Niles Higinbotham, formerly head of the Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet and one of Chicago's oldest and best known citizens, was sold at auction June 29. He was president of the World's Columbian Exposition and of the Field Museum of Natural History from 1897 to 1909.

The Alpha Floral Co. had a big wedding dinner decoration at the Green Mill Gardens when the proprietor's niece was married last week, which called for a large quantity of stock. The order also included the bridal bouquet, eight bridesmaids' bouquets and maid-of-honor bouquets besides the home decorations.

A. Henderson, of A. Henderson & Co., reports good demand for fall bulbs.

STRONG DEMAND FOR FUNERAL FLOWERS.

Local flower shops report very satisfactory demand during the past two weeks. The funerals of two very prominent citizens brought quite a volume of business to all of the downtown florists. The rose supply is of excellent quality and prices are holding firm. On the other hand, carnations are getting smaller and poorer in quality each week. Garden flowers are plentiful. Lily of the valley is good and prices balance in proportion. There is a good demand for this stock. Peonies are now at their end. Due to rainy weather, sweet peas have suffered considerably. Of cattleyas, there is a fine summer crop coming in. There is a big shortage in ferns, due to the unusual demand during graduation week.

NOTES.

George Havill will leave for New York, July 3, and Fred Kennedy is now making plans for his vacation at Hartford, Conn.

Horace J. Head, of George B. Hart's store, is now recovering from a serious operation at the Park Avenue hospital.

J. B. Keller's Sons had some very large orders placed with them for funerals during the past week.

Herman Zahn, of H. E. Wilson's staff, is recovering from injuries received in a recent automobile accident.

Charles Gow, formerly connected with the Rochester Floral Company, is now employed in Utica, N. Y.

John Vollmer is busy with the June weddings this month.

BUSINESS EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD.

Business this week has been exceptionally good. There has not been much variety of stock arriving as the weather has been against all outdoor flowers but everything cleaned up good at fine prices. Roses and carnations have been the features, the prices being about triple over those of a week or ten days ago. Red and white roses have been in demand away in excess of the supply and consequently brought any price asked for them. Carnations also improved greatly in price and sold readily from day to day, no surplus being carried over. Gladioli and larkspur sold very well and they also fell far short of the demand. Lily of the valley and orchids still hold at the same prices and are in good demand every day. Orchids are not so plentiful and Cattleya gigas are about done for this year. Graduations and weddings have been the prop for business this month, but next week will likely see the finish of these and stock will very probably go begging again.

The directors of the markets voted on Tuesday, June 20, to buy the Cyclorama building. The voting was not unanimous and considerable dissension was manifested, so it would not be surprising if the markets did not consolidate.

HUDSON, N. Y.—The violent hail storm here last month caused no greenhouse damage.

MID-SUMMER BUSINESS ABOVE COMPLAINT.

While the mid-summer quietude has taken possession of the florist shops in this city and central Ohio, there is still a considerable volume of business in many respects. Retailers as well as growers are generally satisfied with conditions, and believe that the usual dull period will not be pronounced. At least, there are many indications of a good demand for certain lines of flowers during the summer months. Funeral work has been quite good, and there has also been some demand for commencement and school closing exercises and social affairs. Pot plants are about over for the season. There is only a small amount of landscape work on hands now. The staple lines in the market now are roses, carnations, gladioli and dahlias. Roses are of good quality and sell from $3 to $6 per dozen. Carnations are selling at the usual figures. Gladioli are just coming in, and retail at about $4, but prices are expected to drop shortly. Dahlias are offered at $1.50 to $2.50. Some garden flowers are selling fairly well, and the supply is good as a rule, stimulated by the excellent growing weather.

NOTES.

S. L. Stephens & Son, at Greenlawn cemetery, are having a good demand for roses, carnations and sweet peas. The call for pot plants is about over for the time being. Demand is excellent for the time of the year, however. Walter Stephens, of this firm, president of the Ohio Association of Flower Growers, returned recently from attending a meeting at Cincinnati.

Miss J. C. Martin is having considerable success in operating the greenhouse on North Broadway, under the name of J. C. Martin. Recently, she acquired the property at receivers sale and started out to grow flowers for the summer and fall.

McKellar, the florist on West Broad street, is having a good run of business on roses, gladioli and sweet peas. The latter are now coming from the gardens and are of good quality. The salmon pink gladioli are also of excellent quality.

The Brust Florist Co., 891 West Broad street, located close to Mt. Carmel hospital, is having a good trade in cut flowers from that source. Mostly in demand are gladioli, carnations, roses and sweet peas.

TRADE MUCH IMPROVED.

Business the past week was somewhat better than the previous period with a stronger demand and a shortened supply which caused prices to hold firm and enabled the wholesale houses to effect a clean-up on Saturday, with the exception of some delphinium and coreopsis. Weddings and commencements seemed to form the bulk of the business with a funeral now and then. The supply has shortened up considerably especially roses and carnations, both of which are of very good quality for this season of the year and both are cleaning up daily. Delphinium is a big factor in the market at present and is being used extensively by the retailers in all kinds of work. Lilies are scarce and are bringing more money than they have at any time since Easter. The supply of gladioli is increasing and it will not be long until this popular flower will be the backbone of the market. Lily of the valley has had quite a call and at times there was not enough to supply the demand. Baby breath, gailardia, coreopsis, larkspur, and achillea are being received in quantity and find a place in most retailers' ice boxes. Outdoor sweet peas are to be had at reasonable prices.

NOTES.

It is with regret that we report the death of Chas. Peterson of East Liverpool, O. He was one of the pioneers of the business and has been located at East Liverpool for a great many years. He has been ailing for a long time and has been practically bed-ridden for several years, so that his death was not unexpected by his family and close friends.

The McCallum Co. is installing a new refrigeration plant at their greenhouses at Evans City, Pa., and when completed will give them one of the most up-to-date grading and cold storage rooms in the country.

J. H. McCauslin, of Huscroft's flower store, Steubenville, O., was a recent visitor. He states that business has been very good and that they are adding to their already large area of glass this season.

A severe hail storm visited the North Boroughs on June 17, but with the exception of the Blind Floral Co., who lost about 1,000 lights of glass, very little damage was done.

This section came near having frost on Thursday night. The official report was 49 degrees, but some reports came in as low as 34 degrees.

The Florists' and Gardeners' Club are making arrangements for their annual picnic some time in August. Place not determined as yet.

WEDDINGS HELP BUSINESS.

There have been a number of important June weddings during the past week and these called for an unusual amount of flowers, helping materially in moving stock. The weather has been typical of June and all stock of a seasonable nature is plentiful and of excellent quality. Roses are very abundant and the market cannot absorb them all. There are great quantities of outdoor stock such as Shasta daisies, larkspur, bachelor buttons, etc., and more of these are being used than ever before. On the whole business is good and shows daily signs of the improved industrial conditions.

FLORISTS' CLUB MEETING.

A splendid and enthusiastic attendance marked the meeting of the Florists' Club, held Friday evening at Feniger's Superior street store. The advertising committee made a report showing how business on Mothers' Day, was aided by the publicity and urged all to make prompt payments so that the advertising could be continued. The question of establishing a commission house in this city was brought up by Mr. Barr and was discussed at length. The idea will be given some further thought, although the consensus of opinion was that the time was not ripe for such a venture.

NOTES.

A. A. Suder is working hard as president of the Florists' Club to promote co-operation. He has a fine array of bedding stock which has cleaned out nicely at fair prices.

Schramm Bros. had one of the largest wedding decorations placed here in some time when they took care of the Baker-Rorick wedding at the Country Club.

Metz Bros. shop has been humming with activity. Funeral work has been active here and the call for wedding bouquets good.

The Helmer Flower Shop has been busy with a number of fine wedding decorations and reports business as very encouraging.

The table decorations of outdoor roses and other flowers for which Mrs. J. C. Ayer had offered special prizes, were splendidly arranged. Mrs. R. C. Bedford, Glen Cove, won first prize in this class.

In the cut rose competition Mrs. H. L. Pratt won six firsts, also six firsts for cut annuals and perennials, as well as several prizes for fruits and vegetables. Mrs. Harold I. STOCK SHORTENING UP.

The past week has seen a shortening of the supply in several lines. With peonies out of the way, rambler roses, and a number of items in the spring flowering out-door stock together with snapdragon, carnations and callas done for the season, the only surplus worth considering is short roses, and these clean up fairly well to the street men. Greenhouse gladioli which have been especially plentiful and of exceptionally high grade this season, are almost over and are being succeeded by the first of the field grown stock. In spite of the high prices of giganteum lily bulbs, quite a number of growers appear to be taking a chance and the market continues to be over supplied. The quality is fine but competition keeps prices down. All high grade roses find a ready sale at good prices, the great majority of the stock however, grades low as many of the plants are being dried off and rested, yet flowers from these are cut and sent in with the hope of getting something out of them. Orchids are not any too plentiful, yet some dealers say they can fill orders for any reasonable quantity. The cattleyas gigas and gaskelliana are particularly fine. There is plenty of high grade lily of the valley. Out door sweet peas are a quantity product, some of them very good, the result of careful culture. Green and variegated privet sprays are in demand for funeral clusters spray and decorative work, as are green oak boughs. Southern asparagus carries poorly while the home grown meets with good demand.

GROWERS' BY-PRODUCTS.

There are various ways of turning surplus stocks and others that have outlived their usefulness, such as bench roses that have to give way to new varieties or younger stock. The first signs of a surplus in bedding plants should be met by filling small baskets with stock out of pots which after a week in the house will present a very good article for stores to run as a special. These should be gotten on the market before the season gets too old, there being as much money in them as when sold in the usual way. Bench roses which have had a good sale the past year or two as dormant stock can if there is any surplus be planted out and grown on through the summer, making splendid plants for potting up in the fall for forcing for Easter or later spring sales.

BASEBALL.

The season is on, the preliminary preparations have all been made and the first games will be played at the Belmont plateau, Lansdowne and Norwood, on July 6. It was hoped to make it an eight club league but so far only seven organizations have entered. All look forward to a good time, however, playing their best, with the hope of getting their club name inscribed on the handsome A. M. Campbell trophy.

NOTES.

Thomas Potts who has been an expert in growing high class out-door cut flowers and greens that were of special value to the stores, is about to erect a greenhouse 28x100. This is to be built by the King Construction Co. and will, William Muth says, be one of their best. Mr. Potts hopes to add another of the same size in the fall.

John Habermehl reports the decorations for the recent convention of the Car Builders' Association in Atlantic City were the most elaborate they have had for this association. They were well satisfied with results on this job, as some 700 window boxes used in the decorations were afterwards sold to decorate the porches of hotel and cottages of this wonderful seaside resort.

Jack Neidenger, Jr., who is in Germany looking up stock for the Jos. G. Neidenger Co. reports from Hamburg that there is so much demand for German goods that manufacturers are loth to quote prices for quantity lots for future delivery. The factory has a full force working getting up stock for the fall.

Jos. M. Kennedy is now manager of the Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market. Mr. Kennedy associated with the company for some time, has had quite an experience in handling flowers in wholesale houses and should make a success in his new position. A very good stock of roses is seen here.

The trade are glad to hear of the good progress towards the health of George Aeugle who has been in St. Luke's hospital since June 12. His many friends hope he will soon be about again. Cheery Sam Parker keeps things on the go during his absence.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. will make quite an elaborate display at the Texas State Florists' Association convention to be held at Dallas, Tex., July 5-7. The trade at the New York branch store of the company, recently opened is very satisfactory.

High grade roses are the special feature of the Edward Reid stock at this time. Gladioli, Easter lilies and lily of the valley are also quantity items. Mr. Reid reports a very good shipping trade.

Cornelius Van, manager of the Robert Craig Co.'s greenhouses, Norwood, Pa., has with his family taken a trip to his old home in Holland, visiting his parents. He will return in the early fall.

The Leo Niessen Co. report a good demand for high grade stock, particularly in roses. Russell is favored by out of town buyers. Some exceptionally fine Cattleyas gigas are seen here.

Berger Bros. are handling high grade Easter lilies, gladioli, sweet peas, and choice roses. An abundance of outdoor stock is also a feature.

COOLER WEATHER HELPS.

There has been little change in the condition of the cut flower market since our last notes were published. The cool weather of the week ending June 17 held the roses in better shape and some good stock for the season has been arriving. There has been considerable demand for such stock to fill steamer orders, but there is always a surplus and the best does not keep long. The carnation season is about over but some of the growers do not seem to think so. They persist in flooding the market with stock that cannot be sold to the retail stores on account of its poor quality, it goes to the street men and they trade it about and the spectacle of so many of them tends to make the whole business look cheap.

Local peonies are done but some good ones have been coming in from the North, with these exceptions the peony season is over as what are in cold storage do not count for much. There are more than enough orchids and lily of the valley in sight to supply all demands. A considerable stock of the white bouvardia is on the market and by some of the buyers it is preferred to valley. The outdoor sweet peas are short and as yet, no first class stock arriving. The greenhouse gladioli are about cut out, but outdoor stock, from Long Island, is beginning to come in and doubtless there will soon be a heavy supply. Cut rambler roses and the many varieties of seasonable garden flowers continue to come in, and as such stock sells cheap a good many bunches are sold. Relating to carnations that while there is some good stock for the season, it is the exception, not the rule. An unusually heavy supply of all kinds of stock reached the market in June; that with the early hot weather and the great exodus to Europe made it a rather disastrous month for business.

NOTES.

The Massas Floral Co., Lenox avenue and 126th street, own the five-story building in which their store is located. On both fronts they are making fine displays of large ferns or tripods, with well filled boxes in all the windows of the building.

Nicholas Stathes of Stathes Brothers, retailers of Columbus avenue and 104th street, started on June 26 for a three months tour of the Pacific coast. He will visit leading cities of California, Oregon, Washington and British Columbia.

The Plaza Floral Co., 698 Lexington avenue, announce that they will close July 1, to reopen September 1 in a finer store in the new Hotel Allerton building which is under construction near their present location.

Sullivan, Dolan & Co., 112 West 28th street, who recently were inconvenienced by a fire over their store, have had their shop thoroughly renovated and redecorated and are now better than ever prepared for business.

McKenney of 5th avenue and 42nd street, arranged a fine decoration in the Palace Theatre on the occasion of the memorial services for the late Lillian Russell that were held on June 18.

Max Schling, with a number of assistants, gave a series of illustrated lectures at the Hotel Netherland this week, on floral designing and landscape gardening.

All reports from the Post-Graduate Hospital indicate that Alfred T. Bunyard is rapidly recovering from the effects of the recent operation.

Andrew Eckrich, 924 Madison avenue, who has a fine store, is quite cheerful about business as he has been having numerous wedding decorations.

Hugo H. Jahn, 710 Norstrand avenue, Brooklyn, whose shop is always attractive, reports satisfactory business for the season.

Wm. H. Long, 412 Columbus avenue, states that he has been keeping quite busy with weddings, funeral work and steamer orders.

Although local peonies are gone, the United Cut Flower Co. has been receiving good ones from far upstate.

A. F. F.

New London, Conn.

When we visited this city on June 22, the advance guard of visitors for the Yale-Harvard boat race on the River Thames was already arriving, the race being scheduled for June 23. These races, we believe, although not well up in sporting matters, are annual events on the Thames, and they are gala days, bringing some profit to tradesmen, including the florists.

If there was any question about this city having reached a venerable age, as the age of cities are reckoned in this country, strong corroboration to the claim can be found in its magnificent old trees. A much lamented young man, before he was cut down by the Great Reaper, wrote a poem on trees in which this line occurs: "Only God can make a tree." Viewing these great trees of New London we were powerfully impressed by that sentiment. Credit of course must be given the early settlers who planted and their successors that have through the centuries cared for the trees. But some of these trees are so large, over four feet in diameter at the base of the trunks, that one is inclined to believe that they are survivors of the virgin forest.

This city is a thoroughly American one, and with its near neighbor, Groton, possesses relics and monuments that prove that the memory of the brave pioneers is revered. Near the railway station stands a stately memorial monument for men who fell in battle on sea and land. This was erected by descendants of that Lawrence, whose dying words were, "Don't give up the ship." Over in Groton there stands an older monument commemorating an event of the Revolutionary war and nearby is a museum of most interesting revolutionary relics.

NOTES.

We seem to have wandered from strictly horticultural and floricultural matters, but have not forgotten the florist. We are not indulging in flattery in stating that a prettier and better arranged shop than Fisher's, 104 State street, cannot be found in these eastern states. Good selections in flowering and foliage plants, a fine stock of cut flowers and excellent taste in arrangement are outstanding features.

It appears that the residents of Groton do most of their flower buying in New London, but Groton can boast of one splendid private estate, the landscape features having been largely created by Vincent W. Head for the late Morton F. Plant.

Karl Samuelson, 34 Mercer street, has a neat range largely devoted to plant growing. Here we may add that one of the largest trees in the city stands in front of his residence.

Fellman, another retail florist also keeps an interesting store and in addition to a good stock of cut flowers keeps quite a stock of novelties.

A. F. F.

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.—John Marsden, who has long been ill, died June 21.

SALEM, ORE.—The flower shop formerly conducted by C. E. Clancey, has been purchased by the Salem Greenhouses and will be reopened for business under the management of C. S. Breithaupt of that firm. The store will be supplied from the company's range.

Indiana State Florists' Association.

The annual meeting of the Indiana State Florists' Association, was held at New Albany, Ind., on June 20-21. There was a representative attendance of about 40 members from all parts of the state. One of the social features was a visit to the greenhouses of Anders Rasmussen, where after an inspection of this large, well managed establishment, they were royally entertained.

On the evening of the first day they were the guests of the Kentucky Society of Florists at a dinner in their honor, held at the Fountain Ferry park, Louisville, Ky., which in the fine menu and the flow of wit and good fellowship in the after dinner speeches, made an occasion long to be remembered.

On June 21, the feature was an automobile run by the members of the association and the Kentucky society, to Wyandotte cave, near Corydon, Ind. This subterranean cavern with its irregular formations, proved a very interesting place to the visitors. The management declared the party to be the largest that had ever passed through the cave at any one time.

The Seed Trade

It is reported that in the United States district court, Chicago, June 28, Everette R. Peacock and Peter Peerbolte bought all the available assets of the bankrupt Everette R. Peacock Co. for $30,000.

CHICAGO CONVENTION, JUNE 21-23.

The second session on Wednesday began shortly after 2 p. m. when President Olds introduced Leonard H. Vaughan of Chicago, chairman of the special advertising committee, to make a report on the publicity campaign conducted by the National Garden Bureau. Mr. Vaughan's report was followed by another on cooperative advertising by Denver, Colo., seedsmen in connection with the material distributed by the National Garden Bureau. R. E. Patterson of the Western Seed Co., Denver, Colo., was the author of the report which was read by James H. Burdett, director of the National Garden Bureau. Mr. Burdett then commented upon the opportunity which offered for entering the moving picture field with garden propaganda.

"Visual education through moving picture films is now being developed to a remarkable extent," he said. "Nearly all high schools and many grammar schools are provided with moving picture machines and agencies exist for distributing to them educational films. No such films exist giving instruction in home gardening. It is possible to manufacture them and obtain national distribution."

To show what was being done in giving instruction by moving pictures Mr. Burdett had arranged for the exhibition of one reel of a film on dairy management, which was shown at this point to the assembly and much enjoyed. The clear photography, brief and explicit subtitles and graphic illustration of the points made showed how great was the recent advance in this field and enabled the seedsmen present to visualize the possibilities for a home garden film.

Following the brief movie exhibition G. F. Bradley of Cleveland offered the following resolution which had been drafted by the special advertising committee and moved its adoption:

Resolved, That the American Seed Trade Association accept and approve the report of the special advertising committee dealing with the publicity campaign for home gardens conducted by the National Garden Bureau and that the president is hereby directed to appoint a committee of five members to continue this work; and be it further

Resolved, That the special advertising committee is authorized in the name of this association to request from each member of this association a contribution of fifty dollars to the work of the National Garden Bureau; and that the special advertising committee is further authorized to request additional amounts from members whose volume of business, in the judgment of the committee, justifies such action, the additional amount to be fixed by the committee and approved by the executive committee of this association; the whole sum to be collected not to exceed $25,000 for the year 1922-23; and the programme and budget of expenditures from this fund to be subject to approval by the executive committee.

The secretary is instructed to inform each member of the association of the adoption of this resolution and the names of the special advertising committee when appointed.

There was a brief discussion, all favorable to the proposition after which President Olds put the vote and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

Lester L. Morse of San Francisco read a highly instructive paper on "The Growing of Vegetable Seed in California." He went into detail concerning the problems of the seed grower, told what varieties were being grown for sale on the Pacific coast only and what were being marketed elsewhere. The extent of this industry, Mr. Morse said, had been much exaggerated in some optimistic press reports, and the profits made by the growers had been difficult to find. But he advanced hope that the time was on the way when the business would be developed to a basis where it would be a profitable, and an important source of American supply.

Thursday's Proceedings.

The second day opened with an executive session, when the American Seed Tape Co., Madison, N. J., Southern Seedsmen's Association, New Orleans, La.; Southern California Seed Co., Los Angeles, Calif.; Wetzel Seed Co., Harrisonburg, Va.; Tobin Seed Co., Kansas City, Mo.; and Wedge Seed Co., Albert Lea, Minn., were elected to membership.

Report of the legislative committee presented through its chairman, Charles D. Boyles, Chicago, related to the laws and enactments that affected the seedsmen, passed by the various states during the past year. Curtis Nye Smith, Boston, counsel for the association, also presented his report.

Afternoon Session.

This was a joint meeting with the Association of Official Seed Analysts. President Olds, in opening, introduced President F. W. Taylor, dean of New Hampshire Agriculture College and president of the Official Seed Analysts' Association, as chairman.

President Taylor after thanking the seed association for this opportunity to meet in joint session, introduced Dr. C. R. Orton, secretary of "Crop Protection Institute," and "Professor of Plant Pathology," Pennsylvania State College, whose paper "Seed Borne Diseases" gave a startling account of losses incurred by diseases disseminated through unclean seeds. In corn over 550,000,000 bushels were lost in this country the past three years due to this cause alone.

Dr. E. H. Toole, United States Department of Agriculture, read a paper on "Research and Seed Testing" in which he urged the practical seedsmen to work together with the scientific analysts to improve types in vegetables, grasses and other seeds. New methods of analysis would be found to be of the greatest benefit, particularly in seed generation.

"Problems of a Commercial Seed Analyst" was the title of a paper read by W. C. Pfander, of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago. The difficulties of interstate commerce in seeds on account of legislative barriers, was emphasized. Thirty-nine state laws, all different, some barring 40 noxious weeds and others only 15, all percentages having to be written out on tags, made this work very laborious.

Leonard H. Vaughan's recital of "Safeguards in the Seed Business" was a carefully prepared paper that gave the life of a seed from sowing to harvesting, and its handling through the various trade channels until the final distribution. The contractor, farmer-grower, wholesaler and retailer were each taken up and their methods good and bad minutely pointed out. Necessity for better selection of stock seeds, and keeping up the standard, acquired at great expense by long years of application, was emphasized. There should be intelligent planting and isolation in order to prevent mixture of seed, and constant roguing to keep varieties true to name. The proper machinery and storage facilities for the quick handling and safe keeping of the crops when ready for harvesting was considered most essential. Safeguards in the hands of the wholesale and retail seedsmen, were inspection of the crops under contract, laboratory seed tests and trial grounds. Carryover stock should be tested in fall and again four months later. Careful checking was a great factor. Flower seed had not been given the attention it demanded, the work being very complex, there was much to be done along this line.

"Some of the Difficulties Field Seedsmen Encounter in Securing Clean Seed" was described by George S. Green, Chicago, in which he stated that low prices were mainly the reason for low grade seeds, as it did not pay the grower to give such crops the proper attention. All farmer-grown seeds should be reclaimed by the aid of modern machinery.

"Practical Co-operation Between the Seed Trade and Seed Analyst Associations" was ably handled by W. S. Oswald, Chicago, in which he urged that the commercial seed analysts form an association, which with their practical knowledge would be of great benefit to the trade.

Friday's Proceedings.

This the final meeting was called "Field Seed Session" as most of the papers scheduled pertained to seeds of this character. H. H. Miller, Bloomington, Ill., chairman of the committee on experiment stations, presented a very interesting report of the work being carried on at state experiment stations in all parts of the country, in selections of strains best suited for various localities, it being shown that environs in various sections of the same state often differed very materially. Varieties non-resistant to diseases to which such plants were subject, were also carefully sought out. near the larger cities. A section of the country formerly a barren waste, which was crossed by railroads, was now valuable farming land owing to accidental seeding of the ground with alfalfa, which ran out through crevices in freight cars from bursted bags of seed, and was scattered broadcast by the wind. This took root in the barren soil and going down nine feet to water soon spread and turned the desert land into an oasis of green. The speaker advised that humus be encouraged in the soil and that some form of irrigation was indispensable.

C. C. Massey, chairman of committee on "Seed Testing Apparatus and Publicity" reported that much of the legislation declaring hard seeds to be non-germinating was illegal, and when the matter was taken up with the proper authorities, a rating for shipments showing 20 per cent hard seed, was given a germinating percentage of 95. Seed laboratory work was in some instances very unsatisfactory and he advocated an examination of the people in charge during 1923, and the issuing of diplomas to those found capable, and that only their ratings should be taken in the future.

H. G. Hastings, Atlanta, Ga., brought up the subject of state appropriations for free advertising to benefit farmers. In Georgia the annual appropriation was $200,000 with which a paper was issued containing almost entirely classified advertising of farmers' products, including seeds. This had a circulation of 200,000 and was mailed as second class matter at pound rates, which was clearly a violation of the postal laws. Similar conditions existed in several other states. A resolution was adopted to bring this matter through counsel to the attention of the Agricultural Publishers' Association.

A feature of the session was the address of James R. Howard, president American Farm Bureau Federation. Mr. Howard prided himself on being a farmer. He believed in organization, as in getting together people become acquainted and find they like one another. The farm bureau had had a remarkable growth in its 12 years of existence. It is an offshoot of the Chamber of Commerce in which farmers were members. As the work increased it was divided into counties with an agent in charge, hence the name "county agent." State federations were formed which grew into the American Farm Bureau Federation. Of all the national trade bodies, the farmers were the last to organize. They were first educated as to the benefits of organization, then in getting together became acquainted and worked collectively along economic lines for betterment of their business.

S. F. Leonard, Chicago.

Vice-Pres.-Elect American Seed Trade Ass'n.

He placed quality in standard seeds above great variety and that germination should always be up to the percentage claimed for it. County agents had, he thought, outlived their usefulness, as seeds could now be obtained through regular trade channels, the function of the federation in handling them being only introductory. The greatest problem in agriculture was the conservation of the fertility of the soil. He gave an example of bringing up a sterile field that only yielded 30 bushels of corn to the acre, but which in two years after being planted with sweet clover produced a crop of 90 bushels. Farmers wanted standardized varieties and were willing to pay for the service necessary to get them. In conclusion he declared that the people of the country must acknowledge their inter-dependence with one another.

Election of Officers.

There were no contests in the election of officers to serve for the ensuing year, all being elected by ballot cast by the secretary except in his own case, which was made unanimous by standing vote. The officers are Alexander Forbes, Newark, N. J., president; S. F. Leonard, Chicago, first vice-president; Louis B. Rueter, New Orleans, La., second vice-president; C. E. Kendel, Cleveland, O., secretary-treasurer; Clifford Cornelli, St. Louis, Mo., assistant secretary.

Members comprising the executive committee to serve for the ensuing year are L. L. Olds, Kirby B. White, C. C. Massey, John L. Hunt, and Leonard H. Vaughan. The membership committee comprises H. G. Hastings, F. F. Mangelsdorf, Geo. S. Green, Burnet Landreth, Jr., and R. W. Palmer. On motion of J. C. Vaughan, S. F. Willard formerly secretary of the association for many years and also a past president was by a standing vote elected from active to honorary membership.

President Olds then turned the gavel over to his successor, but was again called to the front and presented by Watson S. Woodruff, on behalf of the Association, with a handsome gold watch and chain, inscribed "L. L. Olds, President, American Seed Trade Association, 1922."

Several telegrams were then read and invitations to visit the stockyards and the Albert Dickinson Co.'s establishment. Invitations for next year's place of meeting were received from the Southern Seedsmen's Association to meet at Knoxville, Tenn. Omaha Chamber of Commerce, and Rockford, Ill. which latter invitation, was personally presented by the H. W. Buckbee Co. These invitations were turned over to the executive committee whose province it is to select the convention city. The convention then adjourned.

The Banquet.

The association banquet in the Crystal room of the Hotel Sherman June 22, was well attended and very enjoyable, nearly 300 participating. President Olds appointed Clifford Cornelli of St. Louis, Mo., toastmaster. Dr. H. G. Moulton, professor of political economy at the University of Chicago, gave a highly informing address on German reparations and allied debts, showing that all countries, including our own, are gradually coming to the point where these will be greatly reduced if not entirely annulled. A. E. Bruner, president of the Liquid Carbonic Co., spoke of the urgent duty of citizens in compelling respect for the law under the present reconstruction conditions in commerce, and the necessity of legislative bodies, local as well as national, which will stamp out public and commercial ex-

Growing Vegetable Seeds in California.

Address by Lester L. Morse, of C. C. Morse & Co., San Francisco, Calif., before the American Seed Trade Association at Chicago, June 21-23, 1922.

As a California industry, seed growing suffers considerably in volume by comparison with other horticultural lines, such as citrus fruits, almonds, walnuts, raisins, prunes and apricots, the general fruit canning business, and even vegetable shipping. As compared to other seed growing districts in Europe, it is, however of large proportions. California is a long state and one of a great variety of climates, and elevations and soils. The oldest seed growing district is the Santa Clara valley in and about the town of Santa Clara, a city of some 5,000 inhabitants, 50 miles south of San Francisco.

None of the old locations are now used for seed growing but there are some seed farms in the Santa Clara valley. Most of the growers have gone about 35 to 50 miles south of Santa Clara to Gilroy, San Juan, San Felipe and Hollister. Here is grown most of the lettuce, radish, parsley, salsify and about 50 per cent of the onion. This district is what we designate as part of the coast valleys, since the district lies to the west of the coast range of mountains. Farther over and nearer the ocean are now grown sweet peas and culinary peas, and still farther south and along the coast are the large flower seed farms at Arroyo Grande, Guadalupe and Lompoc. Here are also grown large areas of sweet peas. Still farther south, and along the coast is the lima and pole bean district at Carpinteria and Ventura, while farther south near Los Angeles are other large flower seed growing districts and tomato seed farms.

An entirely different district, both in climate and soil, is what we call the river district or locally referred to as "up river." This is a territory near Sacramento, a city of about 50,000 people, the capital of the state, and Stockton, a city of about 40,000 inhabitants. Flowing down to Stockton from the south is the great San Joaquin river and from the north to Sacramento is the great Sacramento river. These two rivers turn west to a pass through the coast range to San Francisco bay and thence to the ocean. Where the rivers meet are large tracts of tule islands which have practically all been reclaimed with high levees and fine drainage system. While the soil varies from almost pure muck or peat to heavier loam or silt, it is all rich, moist soil and is nearly all under a high state of cultivation. The moisture is easily controlled by huge drainage systems for pumping out the water or for pumping in from the rivers and their tributaries (called sloughs) when too dry.

Lying east of the mountains, this delta section, as it is coming to be called by the newer settlers, does not get the cool summer winds that blow from the ocean along the coast country and is much better and drier in the summer, and crops ripen earlier.

Occasionally there is an unusually hot dry wind in June when seed crops are in bloom and we experience a bad burn on the seed head whether carrot, leek, or onion and sometimes the crop is seriously damaged. In the delta there is practically no fog in summer and the morning dews are usually evaporated before 8 o'clock so that when crops are ripe they are best harvested early, and cure or dry on the sheets within a few days and can then be threshed by being rolled with a roller drawn by horses. Practically all the seed crops are threshed in this simple manner and the method is preferable to threshing with a machine since there is no cleaning of a machine necessary when moving from one variety to another and in the case of carrot, the beards or spines are nicely rubbed off by the roller. Such seeds as carrot, celery, beet, parsnip, etc. are run through a fanning mill and given a rough cleaning and then shipped to the seed grower who cleans the seed to a merchantable sample. Onion and leek are rolled and fanned, then washed, or sunk in water, then dried and milled once, after er. To my mind we should designate them hereafter as seed grower and farmer-grower.

To one unfamiliar with the work of producing seed crops he might think it an easy matter to get direct to the farmer-grower and eliminate the margin that seems to exist between him and the seed grower. It would only be because he was unfamiliar, however, with the organization and system required to breed stock seeds, to secure intelligent farmer growers, to arrange biennial crops and to get the crops properly planted, and he would doubtless underestimate the cost of equipment that must be loaned the farmer and the cash advances that so frequently must be made.

COAST VALLEY CROPS.

Such crops as lettuce, radish, parsley, onion, sweet peas, culinary peas, and seed beans are grown in the coast valleys. The first mentioned small seeds are produced by the seed growers who to a large extent are farmers themselves and operate their own seed farms and on rather a large scale.

As the weather is cooler and fog and heavy dews frequent, harvesting is conducted on a somewhat different plan than in the river or delta district. Such crops as lettuce, onion and sweet peas are dried on sheets on account of their shelling so easily but radish and other crops are laid in windrows in the field and hauled to the threshing machines in cloth lined wagons. Onion, radish and sweet peas require specially constructed threshers, but lettuce is best threshed by simply rolling with a big roller drawn by horses. River crops, which mean carrot, celery, parsnip, beet, spinach and onion are all rolled out and it does not pay to thresh these crops in that section with machines since the farmer-grower usually plant only small acreages for the seed growers and to move from one island to another on steamers or barges requires a lot of time, trouble and expense. Intelligent seed grower. On the other hand California is the home of lettuce and we all prefer to handle our own strains and carry on our own development work with it.

The list of items just named are what we call California specialties, or carrot, celery, endive, leek, lettuce, garden mustard, onion, parsnip, parsley, radish, and salsify. Such crops as beet and spinach are usually grown in more moderate quantities. All of these you will observe are what some call small seeds.

Flower seed growing is quite another industry except that most of the vegetable seed growers, grow sweet peas. Culinary or garden peas are grown very successfully in California and in 1920 there was about 30,000 acres put in. The quality of these varies considerably with the location.

California has pretty much a monopoly of the seed production of pole and lima beans. The former can spread naturally on the ground and our dry summers gives the pod a fine chance to ripen without discoloration. Many other kinds of seeds can be grown successfully and my own firm grows more or less of its own sweet corn, melons, squashes and cucumbers, but these usually for our own coast markets.

The cost of these crops is usually considerably more than the prices charged by the regular middle western grower and this branch of seed growing is not likely to develop to any great proportions although one middle west grower is reported to have 500 or 600 acres of watermelon out this year in the San Joaquin valley.

On account of the unusual conditions developed by the war and the great surplus produced by unusually heavy crops and unwarranted acreage, it is difficult to estimate the extent of California seed growing. My own estimate, however, which is little better which it is sent to the grower who finishes the work of cleaning.

These river crops are usually grown on small areas by gardeners or farmers who work on fixed prices for certain work, as for instance, in the case of growing onion seed, the grower supplies the onion bulbs and in the case of roots the farmers may or may not grow these for the grower but the price is determined by the work he performs. All sheets, sacks, etc. are supplied or loaned by the grower and he is usually called upon to supply money for crop advances. The growers must do all the superintending of the work and must have their representatives on the job the year round.

The California seed grower used to be one who either owned or leased his own farm and owned all his stock and equipment and operated his farm with day labor. Much of this has now been changed and while he still owns or leases a large part of his land and works it himself, he places more or less of his acreage with various farmers who grow for him. This is now done both along the coast and in the delta district. Many acres of peas, beans and vine seeds are now grown by the grower himself. There is a demand now for two distinctive titles, one the seed grower who gets the seed for the seedman or dealer and the other the farmer grower or producer, who plants small acreage for the seed grow-

The individual petals are very broad and cover each other in such a manner as to make the flowers appear almost double, the border of every petal being conspicuously curled. The plants are of a robust growth and form compact bushes of a round shape. Tr. pkt., 40c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., 90c; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$1.65; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.10; 1 oz., \$6.00; 4 ozs., \$21.50.
39. GIANT BATH'S EMPRESS. The finest of fancy English Pansies. Flowers are very large, mostly frilled and blotched and of great substance and the colors are brilliant and varied. Tr. pkt., 45c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., \$1.10; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$2.00; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.80; 1 oz., \$7.50.

No. 12. KENILWORTH GIANT PRIZE. I have improved this strain by selecting and saving seed from the best shaped flowers of the most gorgeous color for many years. It is of the blocked Masterpiece type. The plants distinguish themselves by their robust growth and healthy-looking foliage; they are deep rooted and stand the hot, dry weather better than most other varieties. The large flowers on long, thick stems are carried well above the foliage in the most graceful manner, are of enormous size and of good substance. The petals are exceedingly broad and cover each other in such a manner as to make the flowers appear almost double. The border of each petal being conspicuously undulated and curled, the gorgeous and varied colored blossoms of velvety texture, perfect form and giant size, frequently measuring $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter; the ground color such as yellow, white, deep orange, mahogany brown, bronze blue, and endless variations. Most petals are beautifully marked with a large blotch, a few are self-colored. They are specially fine for planting under glass or outside for cut flowers at all seasons. Tr. pkt., 60c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., \$1.35; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$2.60; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$5.00; 1 oz., \$10.00; 4 ozs., \$35.00.

19. KENILWORTH GIANT EXHIBITION is the very finest complete mixture ever sent out. Seed carefully saved only from marked plants of the best varieties, with the largest and best shaped flowers and richest coloring. It is impossible to convey an adequate idea of the delightful variations in color and markings of this unrivaled mixture. Tr. pkt., 60c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., \$1.35; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$2.60; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$5.00; 1 oz., \$10.00; 4 ozs., \$35.00.

19. TRIMARDEAU GIANT PANSY, improved; it is far superior to the ordinary run of Trimardeau that is sold. It is a very showy class of vigorous, compact growth. Flowers of enormous size in all the self colors, blocked, striped, margined, etc. It is very doubtful if any other Pansy will give as good satisfaction as the improved Trimardeau for all general purposes. Tr. pkt., 35c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., 75c; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$1.35; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$2.60; 1 oz., \$5.00; 4 ozs., \$18.00.

20. PRINCESS, the New Upright Pansy. This strain is entirely distinct from all others. It is absolutely compact, upright growing. The flowers are mostly blotched and frilled like the Masterpiece, of good form and heavy velvety texture, on heavy stems, carried well above the foliage. Attractive by the brilliancy of its colors. Tr. pkt., 40c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., 90c; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$1.65; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.10; 1 oz., \$6.00.

22. GIANT KENILWORTH STRAIN. The flowers are of perfect form and substance; many of the immense flowers are 3-inch. It is a striking collection of beautiful colors and markings, rich with shades of red, brown, bronze, mahogany and many others too numerous to mention. Light, medium or dark mixtures. Tr. pkt., 40c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., 90c; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$1.65; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.10; 1 oz., \$6.00; 4 ozs., \$21.50.

21. GIANT KENILWORTH SHOW is undoubtedly the largest flowered Pansy in the world; the immense flowers are of circular form. A beautiful collection of colors and markings. Tr. pkt., 45c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., \$1.10; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$2.00; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.80; 1 oz., \$7.50; 4 ozs., \$27.00.

26. GIANT KENILWORTH CUT FLOWER MIXTURE. Is a distinct class by itself, surpassing all other strains as a cut flower for inside or outside growing; the large flowers are carried erect above the foliage on heavy stems, 6 or 7 inches long, in the most graceful manner, and stand the hot, dry weather well. Tr. pkt., 45c; $\frac{1}{4}$ oz., \$1.10; $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., \$2.00; $\frac{3}{4}$ oz., \$3.80; 1 oz., \$7.50; 4 ozs., \$27.00.

Kenilworth, N. J.

than a guess is that 10,000 acres cover all the small seeds in a normal year but of course the past three years it has been very much under this figure. A normal year for garden or culinary peas is about 6,000 acres and for pole, dwarf and lima beans about 10,000 acres; for tomatoes for seed about 600 to 700 acres and for other miscellaneous vegetable seed crops about 1,500 to 2,000 acres. Flower seeds without sweet peas probably total 1,000 acres and sweet peas alone about 1,200 acres.

Of the small garden seeds, I would estimate as normal about 3,000 acres in onion, 2,000 in lettuce, 2,000 in radish, about 2,000 in carrot, and 1,000 acres each in parsnip, parsley, salsify, beet and miscellaneous vegetable seed crops.

DETROIT CONVENTION JUNE 28-30.

Members of the American Association of Nurserymen assembled for the annual convention in the Hotel Wolverine, Detroit, Mich., June 28 at 9 a. m., with a large attendance. President Cashman occupied the chair. J. W. Hill made the invocation in the absence of W. H. Wyman, who was delayed by an accident. Henry W. Busch made the address of welcome in the absence of Mayor Couzens, who is ill, the programme following in regular order. The weather and all other local conditions favor a successful meeting.

The programme includes many instructive addresses, as follows: "The Establishment and Progress of the Nursery Training Course at the Massachusetts College of Agriculture, Amherst, by Richard M. Wyman, Framingham, Mass.; "Are We Fooling Ourselves," by A. F. Lake, Shenandoah, Ia.; "State, Sectional and National Associations," by Paul C. Lindley, Pomona, N. C.; "Advertising," by Major P. F. O'Keefe, of Boston, Mass.; "Organizing Sectional Florists' Associations and Their Relation to the National Publicity Campaign," J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill.; "Publicity," by Philip Breitmeyer, of Detroit; "Progress in Propagating American Fruit Seedlings by the Bureau of Plant Industry," by Prof. L. B. Scott, of the United States Department of Agriculture; "The Development of the Horticultural and Pomological Work of the Department of Agriculture," by Dr. L. C. Corbett, Washington, D. C.; "Federal Control Restrictions—Their Application and Effect—Present and Future," by Dr. C. L. Marlatt, of the Federal Horticultural Board; "Standardization," by E. S. Welch, Shenandoah, Ia.; "What's Around the Corner," by Henry B. Chase, Chase, Ala., and "The Nurserymen's Mission in the Landscape Field," by Walter E. Campbell, New Haven, Conn.

President Cashman's Address.

One year ago our good friends at Chicago honored us with the highest office that it could bestow on any of its members, and we were congratulated with well-wishes and assurances of support on every side, by, as it seemed, every member of this association. We were very much encouraged by these assurances of support, and we entered upon our administration with the utmost confidence that there would be no hesitancy on the part of members to co-operate with us in all that we undertook for the good of the organization. In this, we have not been disappointed and we are happy to state that the best of feeling and cooperation has been accorded us throughout the past year, and our message to this convention is a report of material progress, a declaration of unusual unity, and an apparent flourishing condition existing among the nurserymen in all sections.

The American Association of Nurserymen has shown itself to be a remarkable organization of tradesmen and growers, in so far as it has been able to institute or abandon, without injury to its membership, any undertaking or policy that a majority of its members has deemed advisable. I believe that those who have considered the results of the various undertakings and so-called experiments of this association during the past six years, will agree with me that we have been well repaid for every investment made, and that our progress has been steadily forward. I repeat that regardless of the wisdom of a change in policy or the abandonment of certain defined plans, that this organization has proven itself to be in a most healthy condition as to unity and organization.

M. R. Cashman, Owatonna, Minn.
President American Ass'n of Nurserymen.

When we met at Chicago a year ago, we united on a policy that had for its first precept the holding together of the organization. This policy was in keeping with the times, and we started in to economize by discontinuing the executive-secretary's office in New Jersey, and saddling much of the work formerly taken care of by that office upon the various membership committees supported by our very efficient secretary, Dignified, Exclusive Profession not overrun with competitors. Crowded with opportunity for money-making and big fees. $5,000 to $10,000 incomes attained by experts. Easy to master under our correspondence methods. Diploma awarded. We assist students and graduates in getting started and developing their businesses. Established 1916. 'Bulb Importers and Quantity growers of Gladiolus, Cannas, Etc.

Mr. Sizemore. The wisdom of this move can best be judged by the final action of this convention assembled at Detroit, but if my observations are correct, I venture the statement that there are very few dissatisfied members, and that our new policy will receive the endorsement of a large majority of the attending nurserymen.

I do not wish to be understood as feeling that we have accomplished as much as was possible during the past year, neither do I believe that we should be content with what we have done, but I do think that the new policy adopted one year ago has been sufficiently tested to convince every careful thinking nurseryman that this organization must make the best of the funds that it is able to raise on the present basis of assessment. We are in hopes that the time will soon arrive, however, when the nurserymen will have reached that degree of plentitude that the dues can be enlarged, and even then, there should be no material change in the policy of expenditures or the present conduct of affairs.

Our association is in a remarkable flourishing condition, both as to funds and membership. We have taken care of the year's business, paid all of our bills, and find our treasury between $5,000 and $6,000 richer than it was a year ago. We have a surplus of over $21,000 against $16,000 on July 1 one year ago. We have a small increase in membership with the prospect of a considerable increase during the coming year. We have a most efficient collection bureau and railroad claim office built up under the supervision of Secretary Sizemore at Louisiana, Mo. His report will show a heavy increase in claims and collections placed with him during the year just past. There is every prospect of a big increase in this department during the coming year. Prospects are indeed most encouraging and our surplus funds will enable the incoming executive board to place at the disposal of the market development committee, a very materially increased appropriation for next year's work.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

Under our present arrangement, the new president each year must build up an entire new organization; he has the task confronting him immediately after his election of appointing committees to handle the various phases of the association's work. Your president is not always fortunate in securing the acceptance of appointments on committees. This is particularly true in the case of the chairman for that unfortunate individual recognizes at once that he will have to do nearly all of the work, and he, of course, attempts to sidestep, and sometimes does. This means delay and by the time the new administration has perfected its organization, two or three months have elapsed.

It requires some time for a new committee to familiarize itself with the work that it is expected to do, and before it gets to working properly almost one-half of the year has passed, and by the time the committee is in a position to render valuable services, the year has ended, and a new administration comes in and has to organize all over again. I believe this should be remedied and some plan should be inaugurated to continue throughout a term of years the chairmen of important committees who have proven their ability and willingness to serve the association. I also believe that the chairman of each committee should have the selection of those who are to work with him on the committee. This, no doubt, would promote greater efficiency, harmony and ease in carrying out the work.

We have ample funds in our treasury with which to pay the traveling expenses of committeemen, serving us at conferences or other gatherings where our interests are at stake, and it should be urged that we take advantage of being represented by prominent nurserymen whenever occasion arises. Our representatives are always accorded a hearing, and I believe that we need not fear vicious legislation or embarrassing regulations from any section of the country if we are prepared to present our objections properly through the official representatives of the American association. What we need is a better understanding of our problems by the authorities who are undertaking to protect their constituents. During the past year, special representatives and committeemen from this association have been present at various conferences, horticultural meetings and other gatherings where matters pertaining to our business were under discussion. We have secured most satisfactory results.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The work of the executive committee the past year has not been arduous for the reason that every member promptly took care of all business arising in his district, and I am pleased to state that a feeling of genuine confidence and co-operation has prevailed in all the work undertaken by the executive committee the past year. In the case of the two Washington conferences that interested the attention of the nurserymen throughout the country, the executive board found ready and willing support from every nurseryman called upon to help present our case. We have had genuine team work, and so far as I know, satisfactory results have been secured. Not only this, but our representatives have made a very favorable impression in Washington and we are now in the happy position of supporting our government officials in their commendable efforts to protect American agricultural and horticultural interests. There has never been a time in the history of American horticulture when we nurserymen could so truthfully say that the United States department of agriculture is fostering and protecting our industry, and there has never been a time when the nurserymen have had so many warm friends as they have today in the department of agriculture.

The executive board has held four meetings during the past year; the first at Chicago a year ago immediately following the convention; second at Kansas City in mid-winter during the meeting of the western association; third in Washington, D. C., preceding the conference on quarantine No. 37, and the fourth here at Detroit during the past two days. All matters have been disposed of and we believe there was no need for a larger number of meetings. Many matters were disposed of by correspondence and the expense of the executive board during the past year has not been heavy.

MARKET DEVELOPMENT.

The work of our market development committee under the leadership of F. F. Rockwell, who so kindly consented to give us a portion of his valuable time during the past year, has resulted in demonstrating the wonderful results that can be obtained from a small sum of money wisely expended. Few of us have forgotten the great benefits derived through the dissemination of reading articles on fruit and ornamental growing by Mr. Rockwell during the first year of our market development work. This last year your executive committee appropriated a sum not to exceed $5,000 to be expended under the direction of a market development committee consisting of F. F. Rockwell, E. E. May, and Albert F. Meehan. Mr. Rockwell agreed to take charge of the work and give it a portion of his time. I believe he has handled market development in a most proficient and productive manner. His report, which is available at this meeting, is not only illuminating but is suggestive of the wonderful possibilities if this work is further enlarged along the same line.

Every nurseryman has felt the influence of favorable publicity gained through reading articles by recognized horticultural writers and further by the impressions made upon the public mind in the movie theatres where scarcely a single reel is exhibited that does not show one or more beautiful homes fascinatingly set in a well-planted landscape or backed up by a beautiful formal garden. All of these things create a desire in the public mind for beautiful trees and flowers. People read about them in their magazines and papers, and then they see them in reality in their favorite movie theatre. There is no question that ornamental planting has been greatly stimulated through this sort of publicity, and the American association will do well to increase the appropriation for the market development committee's work from year to year. Mr. Rockwell's articles are becoming recognized by many leading journals as authoritative material on horticultural products. We should not fail to take advantage of the position we have already gained by enlarging the work along the lines already started.

THE BOOSTER.

A little experiment was suggested by Mr. Rockwell during the early part of the year which later materialized into a little pamphlet mailed out to the members under the name of "The Booster." We have not had facilities to make this little periodical a regular affair as yet, but we offer the suggestion that it is well worth its cost if made a monthly or bi-monthly issue. It could be the official medium for friendly discussion between members and through it announcements could be made on all matters considered confidential and pertaining to association business only. I bespeak for "The Booster" the serious consideration of the incoming executive board.

In this connection, I wish to state that your president has avoided public utterances through the trade papers to a marked degree during the past year, and I take this occasion to say to the editors of our very estimable trade journals that my failure to take advantage of the very kind offer of the columns of their papers was due not to the fact that I had nothing to say, nor to a personal desire to keep out of print, but remembering the discussions that appeared in the trade journals in 1920-21 and the comment and criticisms emanating from these discussions, I felt that the public expression of views on association matters could not be conducive at this time to the best interests of this organization. Constructive criticism is good and should be welcomed by every progressive nurseryman, and I do not wish to be understood as discouraging public expression of a nurseryman's views through the trade papers, however, in view of the change in policy inaugurated at Chicago last year, I was and am still of the opinion that it was best to proceed as quietly as possible and give our new plant at least one year's trial before subjecting it to public discussion through the press. I feel satisfied that our policy of indirect publicity and quiet procedure has at least given every member of our association an opportunity to observe both the weak and strong qualities of our present plan. My own personal opinion is that the place to thrash out our differences is on the floor of our convention hall and not in the public press, which is so apt to be misleading to the outsider.

VIGILANCE WORK.

Under the aggressive direction of the chairman of the vigilance committee, vigilance work has developed to a degree that makes it indispensable to the American association. Our vigilance committee is the traffic official that directs the nursery business in the proper course. Nurserymen like those engaged in all other lines are very anxious to improve and raise the standard of business ethics in the trade and it is to this end that associations are formed and meetings are held. The creation of a vigilance committee to assist in promoting the general welfare of nursery practices was a step forward and the work that the committee has done has resulted in making membership in the American Association of Nurserymen almost indispensable to good standing in the trade.

The present practice of scrutinizing and investigating every application for membership in this organization makes it practically impossible for any nursery firm or person to gain membership unless his methods and business ethics have been up to standard. Thus the executive board takes care of all new members joining the association, while the vigilance committee looks after those that are already members of the association. Our vigilance committee has not confined itself to investigating complaints made against members of the American Association of Nurserymen; in fact, so far as I know there has been very little complaint along that line, but other people have been addressed by Paul Lindley and his assistants. His report on these matters will no doubt be very illuminating. It is very evident that the nurseryman who does not practice his business according to our standard of ethics does not apply for membership in this organization, and while it is perhaps outside of our jurisdiction to look after him, I am pleased to state that the vigilance committee has been most active in giving many of these fellows their most careful attention. Complaints to the vigilance committee are just a little interesting from a nurseryman's viewpoint because so many of them arise from victims being caught by misleading advertisements appearing in various papers and periodicals. Would it be out of place to suggest that vigilance work be directed just a little to those papers and periodicals whose columns are apparently open to questionable advertising?

LEGISLATION.

The legislative committee will no doubt make a report of its activities during the past year. We have had less cause for apprehension over proposed adverse national legislation this year than for many years in the past. Some nurserymen are concerned over the new tariff bill increasing the duties on nursery imports to double its former figure, and the legislative committee are making an attempt to have the schedule reduced, and may succeed in doing so. There has been no horticultural bills of a serious nature introduced that I know of, and the legislative committee has devoted more time to quarantine and regulation matters during the past year than to legislation.

STATE AND SECTIONAL ASSOCIATIONS.

The past year has seen the organization of several new sectional associations, and it is noticeable that every state and sectional association has been particularly active throughout the past winter. These activities to my mind augur great benefits to the nursery industry and are also powerful contributing agencies to the strengthening of the national organization. The sectional associations, embracing as they do, many firms outside of the national body, very quickly manifest the need for co-operation and team work among nurserymen if they can hope to successfully combat abuses in the trade or defeat vicious legislation. You very seldom find a member of a state or sectional nursery association who would lose his membership for many times its cost. These men readily recognize the need of a national body, and it is only a question of time until their application is sent in.

I am firmly of the opinion that the future of the American Association will be greatly influenced by the activities of local and sectional bodies, and the stronger the local association becomes, so will the national body. We can not hope to take care of local matters but we can lend our strength and support through a local organization and thereby make our efforts more effective. No doubt vicious state legislation will arise from time to time, but if the personal influence of state members is called upon and backed up by a state organization, which in turn is supported by the national organization, I daresay we need not fear that our business rights will be encroached upon. At the present time, there is not the proper relationship existing between the national association and sectional associations, and I suggest that a plan be worked out whereby every sectional association in the United States will take out an auxiliary membership in this organization, and that a board of secretaries embracing the secretaries of every sectional association be formed and recognized as a unit of this national body. The chairman of the board of secretaries could be appointed by the president of the national association, and I believe some very effective work for the betterment of the industry could be brought about.

TRANSPORTATION.

Transportation matters will be presented by Mr. Sizemore in his report. We have been particularly active during the past year in our attempt to bring about a reduction in freight rates on nursery products. We have succeeded in securing a 10 per cent. general reduction in freight rates effective July 1, but this is not sufficient for we are still over-burdened with an excessive freight rate that is of course reflected in the price we are obliged to charge for our products. Express rates are even more burdensome than freight rates, and instead of the service improving as the rates increase, we find in our section of the country the opposite to be the general rule. Freight deliveries during the past year have been more prompt and expeditious than for many years prior, but I am sorry I can not say the same of express deliveries. The question of lower express rates and lower freight rates should demand the attention of this convention and a concerted effort should be made to secure a more acceptable classification for fruit and ornamental tree shipments.

NOMENCLATURE AND STANDARDIZATION.

Substantial assistance has been given the nomenclature and standardization committees by appropriations for the carrying on of their work. This association is deeply indebted to Harlan P. Kelsey of Boston and his committee for the vast amount of laborious work expended entirely gratis for the benefit of the American nurseryman. We can not repay Mr. Kelsey in dollars and cents for he would not accept it, furthermore, our debt to him can not be measured in a material way. We owe Mr. Kelsey a debt of gratitude that to my mind should be recognized by this association in a fitting manner. You will hear Mr. Kelsey's report, and I respectfully ask that every member attending this convention be in his seat when this report is read.

SLOGAN.

Much discussion has been heard during the past six years on an appropriate slogan for the nursery trade, and many fairly acceptable phrases have been proposed, but to my mind, none have made the impression that the simple and significant slogan adopted by the Illinois Nurserymen's Association has created. What could be more appropriate or impressive than these words "Plant Another Tree?" Every man who owns a square rod of land should plant another tree. The expression is a beautiful one and carries with it a vision of nature's greatest possibilities. Here is a trademark and slogan that every nurseryman can very profitably adopt. The three words are a whole lecture in themselves and indeed are most eloquent. I would like very much to see a member of the Illinois Nurserymen's Association propose the adoption of this slogan and trademark for the American Association of Nurserymen.

ARBOR DAY—WHY NOT ARBOR WEEK?

Practically every state through its governor, sets aside a day called Arbor Day and on this day public planting of trees takes place. It seems hardly sufficient that only one day be set aside for public tree planting. The nurserymen should agitate an arbor week instead of an Arbor Day. The florists put across Mothers' day—why can not the nurserymen put across buddies memorial tree day, a day which every good American citizen will celebrate by planting somewhere a memorial tree to the memory of a world war veteran? I suggest that this be considered by our publicity or market development committee.

EXPERIMENTAL WORK AT BELL.

I wish to call your attention to the very important work that is now being carried on at the governmental station at Bell under the direction of Prof. Scott. A number of nurserymen including myself recently had the opportunity of visiting the station and Prof. Scott showed us what he was doing.

I was particularly struck with his success with apple seedlings grown from root cuttings, also varieties of apples grown from root cuttings. Prof. Scott will make a report on his work for the past year, and I am sure you will all be glad to hear it.

The work at Bell is significant of the possibilities of further experimental work under government supervision. The appropriation at the present time does not permit of a very extensive plan of experimental work, but it seems to me that the nurserymen should interest themselves in securing for this work larger appropriation. There is just $20,000 at the disposal of Prof. Scott for his experimental work—he has made that go a long ways. I believe if he had $10,000 or $20,000 more, he could make a most satisfactory showing. I recommend that the nurserymen undertake to secure through congress this increased appropriation.

OUTLOOK.

In spite of market depression and general deflation of values, especially products of the soil, there has been no appreciable decline in prices of horticultural products known as nursery stocks. The general report coming from nursery centers this spring indicates an almost complete cleanup of all surplus fruit trees and ornamentals. The usual surplus has been greatly reduced, and if reports are correct, the old hoodoo brush-pile has been conspicuous by its absence this past spring. Many lines of stock were extremely scarce, and on these, prices were abnormally high, nevertheless, the demand seemed to increase as prices advanced. All of this indicates a promising market for the coming year and should afford no small degree of encouragement to the American grower. Conditions now prevailing in the United States place the task of production squarely in the hands of the American nurseryman, and I feel confident that the American nurseryman can and will rise to the situation and supply every need of the planting public with high quality stock produced by American labor and branded "Made in America." Yes, I believe the future of the nursery business never was brighter than at the present time, and I take consolation in the fact that there is every good reason for the nurserymen to bring up their sons in the business from now on instead of sending them into other professions.

J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Iowa.
Treas. American Association of Nurserymen.

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, I wish to thank the members of the executive board for the support and co-operation which they afforded me in carrying out the work of the association during the past year. I wish also to convey to the committee members and nurserymen who served as special representatives to various conferences, my appreciation of the splendid service they rendered for the good of our industry. There has been team work all around throughout the entire year. I have heard no criticism and I have found every member ready and willing to do his share when called upon. It has not been a one man's job this year and I believe everyone has enjoyed doing his bit. I would like to see a continuation of this team work for it surely gets results. We are on the right track with a good clear road ahead. We can carry a larger load and put on more speed. Let's go!

Secretary's Financial Report.

Secretary Sizemore's financial report shows receipts during the year, added to balance in treasury, July 1, 1921, of $16,748.61, amounted to a total of $43,772.41. Receipts from this year's dues were $17,128.20. Disbursements totaled to $22,393.88. The secretary and traffic manager's office expense amounted to $6,992.50.

In nurserymen's railroad claim and collection bureau accounts, there were collected, $26,258.34. About one-third of the membership have availed themselves of this service.

King GREENHOUSES

"—of course we will have King Construction."

Six years ago a King Iron Pipe Frame house 42x200 feet, was built for a prominent New England florist. That florist watched every detail of construction, the quality of material and was so pleased that in January, 1917, he wrote: "We are naturally proud of this house and pleased with the treatment accorded us by your firm and we thoroughly appreciate the care exercised in all the details of construction. We hope to have this house continued sometime and, of course, we will have King Construction."

In January, 1922, he wrote: "Enclosed is signed contract for one King Iron Pipe Frame Greenhouse 42x150 feet. In 1916 you erected the same style house. It has proved so satisfactory that I will extend same to 350 feet."

You, too, can be just as well pleased if your next house is of "King Construction."

Be fair to yourself—get the facts about King houses.

When you think of good greenhouses think of King.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PLANT GROWERS.

Cyclamens.

The plants of cyclamen should now be growing rapidly, especially those which were grown from seed sown last fall. These plants should now be in four or five-inch pots and the foliage growing full and strong. If the plants are plunged in a frame, they should be lifted out of the soil occasionally to see that the drainage is not stopped up. There is nothing that will ruin a young growing cyclamen more quickly than to have the drainage get closed and have the soil become sodden with water. Angle worms will often cause this and, if they are detected, should be removed. It is very easy to find whether they are in the pots. If the soil on the top of the pot is rolled in to small lumps, it is a sure sign that there are worms in the soil. If there are but a few, the plants can be knocked out of the pots and the worms removed; if there are many, a watering of limewater will soon rid the soil of the worms. The plants that are in small pots should be potted up as fast as they require it, that they may be as large as possible for the holiday season, but do not go to the other extreme and pot in too large pots. As soon as the roots get around the side of the pot, shift them into the next size larger. If the plants are in the greenhouse a close watch for thrips must be kept during the summer. If the foliage is twisted when the leaf begins to unfold, it is sure to be caused by insects, and the plants should be sprayed with a nicotine solution. To have good plants for the holidays in full bloom they must be constantly watched and well grown.

Fancy Leaved Caladiums.

It will soon be found difficult to obtain the quantity of flowers necessary to maintain a fine window display, so attractive plants will be required, and the show houses leading from the store or office will need something with bright color to attract attention. The fancy-leaved caladiums are beautiful plants for this purpose, and should now be good plants in four or five-inch pots. Nice plants can be grown in these sizes and they are easily arranged in a bed of green sheet moss and are very attractive. For the young stock now coming on, a very light house is an absolute necessity to obtain the highly colored leaves, and almost a full exposure to the rays of the sun. While the plants delight in a moist atmosphere, this must not be obtained by heavy shading, but by frequent syringing and damping down the walks and under the benches. The temperature should be kept warm and close, never dropping below 60 degrees at night, even if a little fire heat is needed. They will require copious watering to keep the beautiful leaves in good condition, and considerable feeding to bring the high colors and large, full leaves. Should flower buds form they should be immediately removed, for they will check the growth of the leaves.

Asparagus Plumosus and Sprengeri.

It is a good time now to plant, reset or renew the soil of asparagus beds, either plumosus or Sprengeri. If the beds are to be set out with young stock preparation should be started at once. Asparagus plumosus does better in solid beds, well drained, with a good rich compost about two feet deep. The plants should be set 12 to 15 inches apart and the shoots given strings upon which to climb as soon as they begin to grow. But little cutting should be done the first year, as it is necessary that the plants become well established. The old beds should be given a good mulch of half-decayed manure, and if possible, without injury to the roots, remove the top soil. Asparagus Sprengeri can be successfully grown in the bench, but it also requires a good, rich soil. The young stock the first year should be planted 10 to 12 inches apart, and will produce many stems that can be cut. The beds that have produced this year will require a renewal of the soil. It is better to replant them than to try to renew the soil in the bench. The plants are great feeders and the bench is generally full of roots after a year's growth, and it will be found difficult to keep the bench watered during the spring of the second year. If the plants are too close together, they can be given more space in resetting. Good large plants will do better if set about 15 inches apart. If a mulch is attempted, care should be taken to use no fresh manure, but manure that is well rotted. The ammonia that arises from fresh manure will affect the plants, turning the foliage light and in severe cases the foliage will become nearly white, making it worthless.

Pot Grown Roses.

The hybrid perpetual or rambler roses after blooming, if desired to force another year, in order to bloom them early should be grown in pots during the summer. They can be pruned back after blooming and lifted, or if in pots should be repotted. This will require a good, strong soil, composed of two-thirds loam and one-third manure. When potting be sure to give good drainage and pot firmly, ramming the soil down hard. It is impossible to grow roses successfully in a loose soil. The plants should be plunged to rim of the pot outside where they can be freely watered. Avoid, if possible, placing them against the greenhouse or other building or against a fence, but plant them where they will have a free circulation of air and can be sprayed from either side. If planted against a building or in close quarters, they frequently become infested with red spider during the hot weather and it is nearly impossible to get rid of them.

Mignonette.

To be able to cut fine spikes of mignonette in early winter will require an early start, and although it demands care and attention to germinate small seeds during hot weather, yet it will be necessary to sow seed early in July in order to have a cut in by the holiday season. A north propagating house is one of the best locations for the sowing of seeds in summer. Mignonette does not transplant from the seed flats successfully, so it is better to sow it in 2½-inch pots, five or six seeds to a pot, which can be thinned out to one to two plants as soon as they are large enough to select the strongest. Some growers prefer to sow the seed in hills in the bench, but to grow the large spikes of this flower requires a soil very heavily manured, and the constant watering often sours the soil before the plants have pushed out roots enough to absorb the water. As soon as the plants have attained a height of two or more inches the tip should be pinched or rubbed out, in order that the plant will branch, and again later these branches will have to be pinched off, until there are six or eight good strong shoots. The plants will grow in most any kind of good soil, but to get the best the compost should be about one-half partly decayed manure well mixed in the soil, and this will produce splendid spikes of bloom. After the plants begin to form their leaves, a careful watch must be kept for the cabbage worm; these worms are very fond of mignonette, are voracious eaters, and soon denude the plant. They are a little difficult to find, being of the same color as the leaf, but are generally found along the midrib of the leaf or on the stem. Growers who cultivate large quantities of this crop screen their ventilation with mosquito netting to keep out the moth which lays the eggs. The plants should be set about one foot apart in the bench and staked or tied in some suitable manner to keep the stems straight and erect.

Sam Pearce Retires.

Samuel J., much better known as "Sam," Pearce, the well known Chicago grower, laid down the hose, sold his greenhouses and retired from business July 1. The greenhouses on Higgins avenue, with storage and other service buildings covering some 50,000 square feet, and four acres of ground, were purchased by the E. C. Amling Co., at a reported price of $50,000, Mr. Pearce retaining the dwelling and remaining ground. The immediate cause of this action was his serious attack of illness last spring, and to more fully restore his health. Mr. Pearce will start with his two sons, Samuel A. and George E., on an European tour this week, sailing for England on the S. S. Baltic, July 8.

Samuel J. Pearce, Chicago.

Mr. Pearce is a Cornishman, though most of his early years were spent in Scotland. He served his apprenticeship at Dupplin castle, residence of Sir J. A. Dewar, Bart., in Perthshire, and later worked as a journeyman in Ayrshire. He came to the United States at the age of 21, locating at Philadelphia, where he was employed at the Graham establishment. In 1883 he moved to Chicago and was engaged by the late August Dressel on Clybourn avenue, taking over that place when Mr. Dressel engaged in the brick-making business in 1887. Selling out in 1913, he built the new place on Higgins avenue, Jefferson.

Mr. Pearce is a thorough, all-around plantsman and for many years has made a specialty of growing lilies and Dutch bulbous stock, with which he has been highly successful. He is held in the highest esteem by all who know him, and his entire place and large fund of practical information on plant growing always have been open and free to everyone in the trade. On his return from Europe, he proposes to devote his time to his banking interests, being a director of the Jefferson Park National bank, and to caring for his property in the rapidly improving vicinity of the greenhouses.

THE RETAIL TRADE

Conducted by Robt. Kift, Phila., Pa.

One of the largest pieces for the funeral of the wife of Governor Small was arranged by A. Lange, Chicago. This was a map of the state of Illinois, made of white carnations on a panel of bronze galax leaves, 3x5 feet. Cornflowers formed the background while red carnations located the cities of Kankakee and Springfield and the boundary lines and rivers. Large clusters of choice roses at the top and bottom of the panel gave an artistic finish. This was sent by the Illinois Waterways Commission, which inscription was placed on a wide ribbon bow, falling from the upper cluster of roses. The design was very well arranged and much admired.

Flowers at the Late Mrs. Small's Funeral

That the sending of flowers to funerals is an established custom is seen in the great number of floral tributes at the funeral June 28 of the wife of Governor Small of Illinois. It is estimated that over 1,700 different pieces were sent, while two express car loads from distant points, arriving late, were sent to the cemetery. As giving an idea of how the public taste runs in the selection of such offerings, a tabulation of the earlier deliveries shows the proportion to be as follows: Wreaths, 56; baskets, 23; sprays, 19; harps, three; pillows, three; broken columns, two; broken wheels, two, and gates ajar, two. Many of these pieces were large and quite elaborate. The principal flowers used were roses, carnations, gladioli, snapdragon, Easter lilies, peonies, larkspur, sweet peas, orchids and lily of the valley.

Next Week in the Flower Shop.

Although this is not the season when prepared and painted weed seed sprays, pods and grasses, lily leaves and pods and other like material is being used, such stock is now being featured by some retail florists in window decorations because of its lasting character and that it has been found, when well made up in various sized baskets and bouquets for vases, these bizarre looking arrangements attract considerable attention and can be occasionally sold at a good profit. As there must always be something novel and attractive in the window, this prepared and highly colored material, which has a natural form and foundation, is good stock to use once in a while, but not so often as to make it common. If kept clean and carefully laid away when not in use, it will remain in presentable condition until sold.

While on this subject, the bridal shower bunch of artificial lily of the valley, combined with cattleyas, gardenias or roses of the same character, all of which in high-grade stock are made to look very natural, is a good publicity feature for the windows. A well-arranged shower bouquet, with the necessary broad and narrow ribbons, can be made an attractive feature for the window when placed in a gilt frame large enough to show it to advantage. A floral muff of the same material, tied with the necessary ribbons in semi-shower effect, will be sure to find admirers. An old-fashioned, round, compact bouquet, with a silk fringe and tufted lace paper, is another style that was for many years the bride's delight.

The middle of summer is hardly the time to use these for the window, but they can find a place in one of the inside cases and be brought out occasionally in the early autumn and spring and other wedding seasons.

Gilt picture frames of various styles and sizes, one quite large enough to show a shower bunch or large basket to advantage, are good window accessories, as they always feature and call especial attention to the articles displayed. A concrete or terra cotta garden seat or bench, low pedestals that will give gradations of height when covered with velvet window cloths, is effective, of which latter there should also be a good assortment in various colors. Tables of different diameters with short legs are great helps for the decorator in varying his window displays.

Narrow pans of lycopodium or Selaginella denticulata and also the golden aurea make a fine border for the floor of the window next the glass. Tin or galvanized boxes three inches in width and depth and the length of the window, will, when filled keep a green border all through the summer. If anything, lycopodium will grow too luxuriantly, but is easily held back by trimming. It is just as good in winter, as when it freezes up with the window in severe weather it thaws out without apparent damage.

Some retailers with high show windows make good use of the common hardy ivy, planted in narrow boxes that are placed on brackets near the top of the glass. This in its light position makes a good growth, which, with its pendant vines, gives a very pretty effect. It should be one person's duty to see that it is watered.

The show window should always be such as in your opinion it is as good as it can be made at this season, and in its appeal likely to attract and bring people into the store. When in such condition, keep the lights on at night until 11 p. m., the cost for which each week will be trifling. There is nothing more attractive than a brilliantly lighted window. Even street car passengers are impressed, as the hasty glance, seen time after time, fixes the store in their minds as a place to visit when anything is wanted in the florist line.

Self-watering or reservoir window boxes are making headway. These have been so perfected in all their essential features that they are now quite practical. Their use is almost universal in the decoration of many of the large central city buildings in Chicago, where they are entirely satisfactory.

When a rush of funerals for early morning delivery compels that much of the work must be made up the afternoon or night before, the various pieces must be placed in the ice box or cool cellar and protected from drafts with a layer of tissue paper, which after being in place is well sprinkled and covered with wax paper, which will stick to the tissue and prevent its drying out. Without this protection it will be found dry in the morning and the fragile stemmed flowers wilted.

Some florists do quite a business through country or small town agents, most of the demand being for funeral flowers. Such orders are particularly good during the summer season, when there is as a rule plenty of time to give to the work. A line of reliable agents should be worked up, mostly storekeepers, who if supplied with good display cards announcing that orders would be taken and prompt deliveries made of flowers for funerals and other occasions, together with design books showing only such arrangements as wreaths and sprays or other pieces as will transport easily, will collectively turn in a volume of business that is well worth while. Their percentage of $1 in every $5 worth of orders taken will make the live ones very alert for such business and open a new line for the shop's activities that will be a source of considerable profit.

Have you made up your mind to attend the Society of American Florists' convention in Kansas City, August 15-17? Don't be one of the last minute fellows, but decide now and then plan your trip intelligently so as to make the most out of it. Indications point to one of the best conventions in the matter of attendance the society has ever had. President S. S. Pennock and his co-workers have prepared an excellent programme, with a live subject as the feature of every session, while in the trade exhibition the space has almost entirely been taken up by representative firms in all lines of the industry. With all in the business the slogan should be "Let's Go."

Lily Points Pistol.

Our friend Kenelm Digby says he begins to think that Capt. Fitzurse is a bit too quarrelsome. He says the captain, visiting Digby's garden out at Obesity, N. J., suddenly flushed and swore that one of the lilies had pointed a pistol at him.

SIoux FALLS, S. D.—M. M. Strong will add three new houses to his range, giving 400 feet more bench room and increasing glass approximately 10,000 feet.

Federal Horticultural Board Conference.

SEC'Y WALLACE RECEIVES COMMITTEE REPORT.

Washington, D. C., July 5.—Need for safeguarding the United States against the entry of foreign plant pests and diseases is emphasized in the report made to Secretary of Agriculture Wallace by the special advisory committee appointed by him to follow the proceedings of the plant quarantine conference, held here in May. The belief was expressed that no material changes are necessary either in Quarantine No. 37, or in the regulations of the Federal Horticultural Board for its enforcement.

The report commends the idea of committees representing the various interests affected by the quarantine regulations. Frequent conferences between the committees and the board, the committee said, would bring about a clearer understanding on the part of all and secure the beneficial results sought by the act.

The committee pointed out the losses now suffered by American agriculture from pests accidentally imported before Quarantine No. 37 went into effect. In view of the danger of other destructive pests being brought here, the committee declared that much greater care than formerly must be exercised to keep them out. The belief was expressed that the measure of the Federal Horticultural Board is wisely directed to this end. The difficulties complained of in the administration of the quarantine, said the committee, are due to the unknown factors that have to be dealt with.

The report is signed by the late Prof. J. C. Whitten, horticulturist of the University of California; Dr. A. F. Woods, president of the University of Maryland, and M. R. Cashman, president of the American Association of Nurserymen. The conference was attended by leading florists and nurserymen from practically all parts of the country, as well as many state officials and other interested persons, including representatives of foreign countries.

The text of the report is as follows: "In response to your request of May 12, 1922, we attended on May 15 and 16 the plant quarantine conference called by you to consider particularly the classes of plants which should be permitted unlimited entry under Regulation 3 of Quarantine No. 37 and other questions connected with the administration of this quarantine.

"The conference was well attended by representatives of the various interests involved, and each and every one was given a full and impartial hearing. The subject was discussed from every angle, both by representatives of groups, such as the nurserymen, florists and ornamental horticulturists, orchid growers, rose growers, etc., and by individuals. Every one was encouraged to make constructive criticism and suggestions. After every one who desired to be heard had spoken, often several times, including the representatives of foreign countries, each group was asked to form a committee to submit further recommendations and hold further conference. We are impressed all through with the efforts made by the secretary of agriculture and the Federal Horticultural Board to give a full, fair and unprejudiced hearing to every one.

"In our opinion the board is properly constituted as to membership and exercises unusual care to get expert opinion and advice. There is every evidence that the board intends to render every possible assistance to the trade and to individuals in making introductions.

"To those familiar with the losses now being suffered by the United States from pests accidentally imported before Quarantine No. 37 was effective, and knowing the dangers of further introductions, it must be clear to any unprejudiced mind that much greater care than formerly must be exercised to prevent introduction of organisms that may become pests. We believe that the measures adopted by the board are wisely directed to this end. It is clearly apparent to us that the difficulties complained of in the administration of the act (Quarantine No. 37) are due to the necessity inherent in the work of dealing frequently with unknown factors. As the difficulties and dangers become clearer adjustments will be made to more perfectly meet the situations.

"It is evident that the board wishes to do everything in its power consistent with safety to assist in securing desired importations.

"We commend the idea of committees representing the various interests involved. Frequent conferences between such committees and the board will bring about a clear understanding on the part of all and secure the beneficial results that the act was intended to give.

"With reference to the Quarantine No. 37 itself and the regulations under it, we believe no material changes are necessary."

Ole Knew.

A school story comes from McPherson county, Kansas, where there has been a shortage of rain this season and as a result the farmers are feeling especially blue. The geography class was reciting and the teacher asked Ole Jensen, "Ole, what is the shape of the world?" "It bane in purty blamed bad shape yust now," answered Ole, who had listened to the talk of his father about things in general and conditions around that neighborhood in particular.

Nurserymen in the Landscape Field.

Address By Walter E. Campbell, of the Elm City Nursery Co., New Haven, Conn., Before the American Association of Nurserymen, at Detroit, Mich., June 28-30, 1922.

Within the last half score of years two powerful social organizations have developed throughout the United States. One has for its motto, "We Build," and the other, "He Is Greatest Who Serves Most."

During the short space of these few years the influence of Kiwanis and Rotary has been a powerful factor in the upbuilding of every community fortunate enough to be represented by one or both of these clubs. The wonderful work which they have undertaken and accomplished is the result of their having a mission to perform and then going at that mission with a kick and a punch born of a thorough knowledge of what has to be done and a determination to see the work finished.

Every nurseryman engaged in growing ornamental plants can be and should be a missionary in the landscape field. We can take a cue from the mottoes of these two clubs and conduct our business with a sincere desire to build and to serve. Because we grow all manner of plants in straight rows in our field we must not believe that we are landscape gardeners and know all there is to learn about our product.

Landscape gardening is one of the liberal arts and is a life-long study in itself. While it is not expected that every nurseryman should completely master the subject, we should at least familiarize ourselves with the basic principles and be quite sure when we do give information it is correct as far as we are able to furnish it.

There are plants in all of our nurseries which are especially suited to sunny places, plants for shady places, plants for dry places, plants for wet places and plants which will adjust themselves to most any manner and character of soil, and many of these grow together under practically the same conditions in our nurseries. It is our duty to ourselves and customers that all the various characteristics of our plants be carefully studied and known so that we can properly inform purchasers of the special conditions under which any plant will best grow and develop. Our desire to serve must be grounded by a knowledge and sincerity, and we must always be willing to miss a sale rather than to suggest an improper plant for any particular location or condition.

How is the busy nurseryman to acquire this knowledge, some one might ask. That's easy. No nurseryman can take a walk through the fields or in the woods without coming in contact with nature ready and willing to teach him a lesson, and any lesson copied from nature can be relied upon, for nature makes no mistakes. Look how she has massed the fence row along the field. There are quantities of gray twiggid dogwood growing against the stone wall, with now and then a grouping of sheepberry coming out into prominence.

She has lavishly used bayberry and sweet fern in the foreground. A strong growth of bitter-sweet half hides the rugged stones of the old wall, and goldenrod, daisies, potentillas and asters blossom in the outer fringe. Here and there a group of wild cherries rises out of the mass and then an elm tree stretches forth its stately arms. On each side of the pasture gate a sturdy hickory stands on guard. Then comes the meadow, rich in its carpet of grasses and flowers, stretching across the plain to the base of the hill, where it is cut by a little stream. In the moist ground along the banks we find groups of cottonwood, willows, oziers, buttonball and alders, and in the open places lobelias, forget-me-nots and gentians love to grow.

The sloping hillside is studded with red cedars interspersed with laurel and spreading jumpers, and white birches form a foreground for the forest beyond. Then the eye is lost in a barrier of green foliage. Walk through the parks and you will find only an adoption of nature's methods, and see how the landscape architect, by his skill and art, has transplanted the environment and made it possible for nature to serve his purpose.

Then there are a great many useful books to be had, in which the principles of landscape gardening are thoroughly explained. It is the duty of every one of us to study nature, to observe carefully the work of good gardeners, and to read good books, so that each of us may become a conscientious and well-informed horticultural adviser in our immediate territory.

There is too much highly colored foliage being offered today, such as golden-leaved elder, variegated weigelia, red-leaved plants and other examples of gaudy foliage which appeal to the eye of the novice, who knows nothing about the correct methods of plant grouping. Most every community has its man who calls himself a landscape architect, landscape gardener, or the least excusable of all terms, a landscape artist, who is absolutely ignorant of the most simple principles in landscape gardening and is getting by on pure bunk. These are the men who plant a round bed or make a star, anchor, diamond, or some other geometrical pattern in the center of a small lawn and call it landscape gardening. The man who is familiar with the finer points of landscape gardening knows that gaudy foliage is taboo except in rare instances where it can occasionally be used to advantage, and that correct design in gardening consists in maintaining broad and open centers and massing the boundaries and foundations. He also knows that geometrical patterns can only be used in formal work and that carpet bedding and scroll work are only intended to show what can be done with plants, and are as much out of place on the average home grounds as is a tapestry in a log cabin.

Many of us are too careless in instructing our customers regarding the method of preparing soil. Most nurseries are located where there is deep and plentiful loam. We all know that in most building operations contractors are very careless about back filling around the foundation of the house with poor material and that the lawn rarely ever receives a sufficient amount of loam to maintain a luxuriant growth of grass.

When we are passing the home of a customer and see that he is engaged in building operations it is well enough to stop and have a friendly chat with him or write him a letter calling these matters to his attention. If he takes your advice he will thank you for it; if he does not, later on he will wish he had.

There is a separate and distinct field in which nurserymen may operate without conflicting with the interests of the professional landscape architect. Many people have an idea that there is a vast competition between the nursery interests and the professional interests, but as a matter of fact the margin of conflict is a very narrow one. Like the trolley lines are feeders to and not competitors of the great railway systems of the country, so are well-organized landscape nurseries feeders to the business of the professional landscape architects.

After all, the building of fine homes, the laying out of vast estates or even the planting of the simple home grounds is only a manifestation of one's desires to score a point in the race of vanity. The desire for attractive home grounds is contagious. Give me a commission on half a dozen houses in a new section and I will guarantee that the majority of homes in that vicinity will be developed within two years.

The nurseryman's field lies in serving the modest home. As his customer becomes more prosperous he moves into the suburbs and buys a larger estate. Having already acquired a love for beautiful home grounds, he now, with ample means for development, becomes a patron of the landscape architect.

I do not believe that the broad-minded professional man fears any encroachment from the landscape nurserymen, but looks upon them as missionaries who are blazing the way for him to follow. There are landscape architects and there are landscape architectlets, the latter rarely ever securing a commission of any proportion and is always willing to snatch a little job away from the nurseryman and complain if he does a single piece of planting. This type of man is not broad enough or well educated enough to go after a big commission. In this connection the point arises as to what the nurseryman engaged in the landscape business shall call himself. I do not believe that anyone not a graduate of a reputable landscape school has a right to call himself a landscape architect. This term is reserved for those who are making a profession of the business and have educated themselves along professional lines. The practical man must seek another term. Nurserymen may call themselves landscape gardeners or landscape contractors, and under these two terms will be able to include all the work which they are competent to handle.

A few of the larger nurseries throughout the country are employing graduate landscape men in their business and are doing a very high-class grade of work. The field for the well-equipped nurseryman along this line is unlimited. Today the surface is merely being scratched. One has only to travel around the well-developed nursery centers of the country to see how the home builder has welcomed and utilized this service. Then as he travels in the remoter districts he notices that practically nothing has been accomplished, that the well-designed house, carefully planned and modernly equipped, has had little done towards the development of its grounds; possibly a few choice shrubs which appealed to the owner's liking have been bought and set either in straight rows or planted promiscuously through the lawn.

A vast army of American home owners is only waiting for well-equipped nurserymen to produce a landscape service and show how the small home may be developed along artistic and logical lines and is willing to spend a reasonable sum for attractive surroundings.

The problem before the nurserymen today is one of presenting this service to the waiting buyer. After a great deal of experimenting I am convinced that the best method of placing a good landscape service before the public is by the use of good sales advertising in the leading horticultural and local papers as a means of securing leads. This advertising must be well illustrated and carefully worded so as to attract attention, create desire for the service and lead to inquiries for further information. After you have received an inquiry the possibility of an order depends upon how this request is treated. It should be followed up with a good, snappy catalogue full of sales talk and argument, one which will show the customer how and where to use plants. In addition, there must be broadsides of the landscape department, showing what has been done for others and describing in detail the method in which landscape problems are handled. Correspondence must be handled quickly and accurately; all questions carefully answered and the customer shown that we are on the job ready and willing to serve him.

Any advertising campaign must be backed by an organization that can deliver the goods. It is folly to get out good advertising matter which brings requests and then either falls down in correspondence, personal calls or planting service. If we are to advertise that we are well equipped to take care of landscape propositions we must be sure that we have enough good, well-trained men to take care of the business as fast as it comes in.

It has often occurred to me that it might be well for all engaged in high-class landscape work to form an association, prepare a strict code of ethics and adopt a name which might seem a little more applicable to our special line. The name, "landscapers," or some similar name might be used to advantage. This name should be registered and the qualifications of all applicants thoroughly investigated. Each member's work from time to time should be examined carefully by a competent committee, and it should be the duty of every individual in the organization to see that the code of ethics is strictly adhered to and that every member is conducting his business in a manner creditable to the organization.

Under expert supervision offers many advantages to the nurseryman. In the first place it is a means for greatly increasing our sales.

A well-informed salesman, calling on a customer, may sell him a $25 or even a $50 order, but a well-trained landscape designer, who is prepared to draw a snappy sketch and show his customer how and where to use his plants, will sell $200 to $1,000 worth of plants with as little effort, and at the same time by his knowledge of landscape principles, increase the value of the property many times the cost of the sale. The former, however, with haphazard methods of making a sale often perpetrates a rank injustice on his customer.

It is an outlet for a great amount of large and oversized stock, as many customers are anxious for immediate results, and when one is equipped to transport and plant large material he finds a ready market for it. In doing an agency or catalogue business it is always very hard to co-ordinate the production and sales departments. Shortages and surpluses are bound to occur.

In designing the general framework of a planting scheme, it often matters little what one of a half dozen varieties of any one plant are used, and the designer with a large stock at his command can more or less make his lists conform to material at hand and at the same time serve his customer's interest. It is the general arrangement and not the individual plants that count. A good landscape department is broadening and instructive, bringing us daily in contact with a splendid type of people. It makes us study and keep alert, for in order to sensibly answer the questions asked we must continually refer to our horticultural encyclopedias and other authorities, and with this information at our command we soon breed confidence in our community and are able to send the bunk artist to the backwoods, where he belongs.

Last but not least, the landscape field gives us an opportunity to become a powerful factor in the making of a more beautiful and more fruitful America by the creating of a healthy rivalry for better home grounds among individuals and better civic conditions among communities.

The Philadelphus.

Philadelphus, unfortunately called syringa in popular language for syringa is the scientific name of the lilacs, is flowering rather earlier than usual this year. There is a good collection of these plants in the Arboretum, and the group is the largest here of the shrubs which flower in June. Philadelphus is a widely distributed genus with representatives in North America in the southern states, the southern Rocky Mountain region and the Pacific states, in Japan, Korea, China, on the Himalayas and in eastern Europe. The white and usually fragrant flowers are the only attraction of these plants; they are not interesting in habit; the leaves fall in the autumn without change in color, and the fruit, which is a dry capsule, is smaller than that of the lilac. During the last twenty years several new species of this genus have been introduced into gardens from eastern Asia, and plant breeders have made more valuable contributions to few groups of garden plants than to Philadelphus. Most syringas bloom freely every year; they require rich well drained soil, and the presence of lime in it has no bad effects on them. Better than most shrubs they can grow and flower in shade, and are therefore valuable for undergrowth in border plantations of trees. There are now in the collection some thirty species with a few varieties and several hybrids.

The mock orange of all old gardens is Syringa coronarius, the eastern European species. The plant was first cultivated in England before the end of the sixteenth century and was probably one of the first garden shrubs brought to America by the English settlers. It is a medium-sized species often as broad as high. The flowers, too, are of medium size and faintly tinged with yellow. This shrub has been somewhat neglected since species and hybrids with larger and showier flowers have found their way into gardens. This is unfortunate, for no other syringa equals the old-fashioned mock orange in the delicate perfume of its flowers. Varieties of this plant with yellow leaves, with double flowers, and with narrow willow-like leaves can be seen in the Arboretum collection, but none of them have any particular decorative value. Among the American species which should find a place in all gardens are P. inodorus, P. pubescens, and P. microphyllus. The first is a native of the Appalachian mountain region and grows to the height of six feet; it has arching branches and large, solitary, pure white, cup-shaped, scentless flowers. By some persons it is considered the most beautiful of all syringas. P. pubescens, often called P. grandiflorus or P. latifolius, is also a plant of the southern Appalachian region. It often grows to the height of twenty feet; the branches are stout and erect; the leaves are broad, and the slightly fragrant flowers are arranged in erect, from five- to ten-flowered racemes. This plant is more common in gardens than the last and when it is in bloom it makes a great show. P. microphyllus, which rarely grows more than three feet tall, has slender stems, and leaves and flowers smaller than those of any Philadelphus in cultivation. What the flowers lack in size, however, is made up in fragrance which is stronger than that of any other syringa and perfumes the air for a long distance. Unfortunately this shrub, which is one of the most attractive plants of the genus, is not always entirely hardy and was killed to the ground last winter in the Arboretum.

The most distinct and perhaps the handsomest of the Asiatic species in the Arboretum is Philadelphus purpureus, discovered by Wilson in western China. It is a large shrub with long arching stems from which rise numerous branchlets from four to six inches long and spreading at right angles; on these branchlets the flowers are borne on drooping stalks; they are an inch and a half long, with a bright purple calyx and pure white petals which do not spread as they do on most of the small flowers tinged with yellow. Another interesting garden plant, P. Falconeri, which is certainly Asiatic and probably Japanese, has narrow lanceolate leaves and fragrant flowers in from one- to six-flowered racemes, and is distinct in the shape of its leaves and in its long narrow petals. The origin and history of this plant is not known, species but form a bell-shaped corolla and are exceedingly fragrant. This is one of the handsomest of the shrubs brought from western China to the Arboretum. Philadelphus Magdalenae is another Chinese species well worth cultivation. It is a tall broad shrub with arching stems, small dark green leaves and pure white fragrant flowers an inch and a quarter in diameter and arranged in drooping, leafy, many-flowered clusters from six to ten inches in length. Philadelphus pekinensis from northern China and Mongolia is a stout bush rather broader than high which every year produces great quantities of

HYBRID PHILADELPHUS.

The first hybrid Philadelphus which attracted attention was raised in France before 1870 by a Monsieur Billard, and is sometimes called in gardens Souvenir de Billard, although the correct name for it is Philadelphus insignis. This hybrid is one of the handsomest of all the tall-growing syringas, and its value is increased by the fact that it is one of the latest of them all to flower. In a few old gardens in the neighborhood of Boston great syringa bushes occasionally thirty feet high and correspondingly broad are sometimes found. These plants are believed to be hybrids between P. coronarius and some unrecognized species. They are called Philadelphus maximus. Another hybrid, P. splendens, sprang up in the Arboretum several years ago and is supposed to be a hybrid between two American species, P. inodorus and P. pubescens. It is a large and shapely shrub with pure white only slightly fragrant flowers an inch and three-quarters in diameter and borne in erect clusters. Philadelphus splendens usually flowers very freely and when the flowers are open it is the showiest plant in the syringa group. It is not, however, as thickly covered with flowers this year as usual.

LEMOINE HYBRID.

These are among the most beautiful and interesting additions to summer-flowering shrubs, due to the intelligence and skill of the great French plant breeder. The first of these hybrids, Philadelphus Lemoinei, was obtained by crossing the European P. coronarius and the Rocky Mountain P. microphyllus. This plant is intermediate between its parents in size and in size of the flowers. The flowers are pure white, very fragrant and produced in the greatest profusion. Lemoine then crossed his P. Lemoinei with other species and obtained remarkable results. By using P. pubescens or some related species as the other parent he obtained a race to which the name P. cymosus has been given. The plant named "Conquete" may be considered the type of this race. It is a vigorous, hardy plant with flowers from two to two and a half inches in diameter, and only surpassed in size by those of "Rosace" of this race, and a beautiful and desirable garden ornament. There is a good specimen in the shrub collection. Other plants of this race are "Mer de Glace," "Norma," "Nuée Blanche," "Rosace," "Voie Lactée" and "Perle Blanche." By crossing P. Lemoinei with the hybrid P. insignis Lemoine obtained the race to which the general name of P. polyanthus has been given. Well known forms of this race are "Gerbe de Nieve" and "Pavillon Blanc." Another of these hybrid races created by Lemoine is called "P. virginalis"; of doubtful origin it is distinguished by double racemose flowers. The type of this group is "Virginal," and other varieties referred to it are "Argentina," "Glacier," and "Bouquet Blanc."—Arnold Arboretum Bulletin, June 14, 1922.

Federal Quarantine Widened.

Extension of the federal quarantine in New England to prevent the spread of the gipsy moth, effective July 1, was announced by the federal horticultural board of the United States department of agriculture, June 22. At the same time, more than 2,300 square miles in the part of this area that is quarantined against the brown-tail moth will be freed from quarantine, making a total reduction of more than 50 per cent since 1914.

Under the new regulation of the board, the quarantine against the gipsy moth is extended to include the whole of Massachusetts, and 13 towns in Maine, two in New Hampshire, 11 in Vermont, and 67 in Connecticut are added to the territory in those states already under quarantine. Seven towns are removed from the quarantine—Argyle, Roxbury, and Riley, in Maine; Lancaster and Northumberland, in New Hampshire; and Plainfield and Barnard, in Vermont.

The towns now added to the area quarantined against the gipsy moth are: In Maine—Steuben, Unionville, Cherryfield, Franklin, Debois, Dover, Foxcroft, Brighton, Madrid, VIII, 9, 10, and 16. In New Hampshire—Carroll and Jefferson. In Vermont—Washington, Tunbridge, Plymouth, Reading, Stratton, Guilford, Halifax, Whitingham, Readsboro, Stamford, and Pownal. In Connecticut—Salisbury, North Canaan, Canaan, Norfolk, Colebrook, Winchester, Torrington, Harwinton, Thomaston, Waterbury, Plymouth, Wolcott, Hartland, Barkhamsted, New Hartford, Burlington, Bristol, Southington, Plainfield, Farmington, Avon, Canton, Granby, Simsbury, Suffield, East Granby, Windsor Locks, Windsor, Bloomfield, Hartford, West Hartford, Newington, Wetherfield, Rocky Hill, New Britain, Berlin, Cromwell, Middletown, Enfield, East Windsor, South Windsor, Ellington, Tolland, Willington, Ashford, Vernon, East Hartford, Manchester, Bolton, Coventry, Glastonbury, Andover, Columbia, Hebron, Marlboro, Portland, Chatham, Colchester, Lebanon, Franklin, Sprague, Lisbon, Salem, Montville, East Lyme, Waterford and New London. In Massachusetts—All towns, not hitherto quarantined.

Under the federal regulations, Christmas greens, nursery stock, forest products, and stone and quarry products are required to be inspected before shipment to places outside the area. During the last year, careful scouting of the territory immediately outside the area known to be infested by the gipsy moth, showed that only a slight spread of the pest took place in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. In Massachusetts and Connecticut, the westward spread of the insect has been greater than heretofore. Indications are that favorable winds were responsible for this.

A limited amount of work was done during the last year to determine the area infested by the brown-tail moth. As a result, it was possible to reduce the size of the area. Conditions during the winter, unfavorable to the pest, together with the effective work of imported parasites, combined in some sections with thorough hand methods of control, were responsible for holding the insect in check.

Chicago Parks.

The glory of a city is its parks and boulevards, and Chicago is particularly fortunate in this respect, having extensive and well-kept pleasure grounds that are convenient to every section of the city. A feature in several of these are commodious conservatories, in which palms and ferns are seen in all their tropical splendor. There are also exhibits of seasonable flowering plants the year round, being exceptionally fine at Christmas and Easter. At this season, with their splendid trees, shrubbery, well-kept lawns, borders of herbaceous plants and extensive beds of foliage and flowering plants, they are one of the city's greatest assets, being visited daily by tens of thousands of her citizens.

Garfield Park, on the west border, has in its conservatory a summer decoration of flowering plants, comprising nicotiana, fuchsias, salpiglossis, hymenocallis or spider lily, which, arranged before banks of palms, give a very decorative effect. The nicotiana, in full flower in a range of color from white to red, is very showy. In banks, either side of the entrance to the palm house, are well-flowered orchids and gloxinias. In the flower garden section, at Madison street, the cannas of the large beds, containing the varieties President and Winter's Colossus, are just coming into flower. The largest bed contains 700 Joan of Arc. This is bordered with

Gen. Worcester and Md. Barney geraniums, centaurea and sweet alyssum, found as effective in bedding as geraniums. Beds of roses planted rather closely are umis. A low bed of Gruss An Teplitz had been a mass of color since it first opened, and by keeping it cut back will continue throughout the season. Richmond was another kind that gave almost continuous bloom. Penstemon, in its bright red flowers, fills the centers of several large beds and blooms continuously until frost. Zinnias and gladioli are planted together in long border beds and will make a good showing. All the beds are well bordered with low-growing flowering and foliage plants, sweet alyssum being a favorite. Well-filled, large concrete vases, four feet in diameter, make fine ornaments at intersections of walks and driveways. The large lily ponds will soon be an added and beautiful feature.

Lincoln park, on the north side, in a fine residential section, with its luxurious and stately trees, shrubbery and extensive lawns and large central lake, bordered with weeping willows, is a model pleasure ground. The conservaories here are filled with well-flowered fuchsias, nicotiana and pelargoniums, all well arranged on the broad plateau in front of the conservatory. Extensive flower beds surround the central fountain. There are four beds 30x100 feet carpeted with sweet alyssum, from which rise standard heliotropes. The color effect is striking. Bordering these, with large spaces of lawn between, are extensive beds of cannas, in which the varieties President and Uncle Sam are prominent. These are edged with Md. Barney and S. A. Nutt geraniums. The extensive lawns in which these beds are placed—there are no gravel paths—brings out the brilliant colors of the flowers with splendid effect.

Washington park, in the southern section, has a great wealth of broad lawns, stately trees and quantities of shrubbery. The flowering banks in the conservatory contained tall plants of hibiscus, before which were Lilium roseum and auratum, Clerodendron balfouri, fuchsias and well-flowered gloxinias. The large, depressed plateau the full length of the conservatories, with its broad entrance steps and showy balustrade, on the corner posts of which were huge, handsomely filled vases, gave a fine formal effect. Beds of heliotrope, bordered with dwarf lantana and sweet alyssum, ornamented the lawn in front of the Administration building, which latter was elaborately decorated with large vases of flowering plants on the roof and boxes of geraniums and vines at the windows. The rose garden, containing mostly hybrid perpetuals, had added to the beds petunias to give color and decorative effect during the summer.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Robert Craig.

Mrs. Margaret Mayne Craig, nee Patterson, wife of Robert Craig, the well-known Philadelphia plantsman and authority in all matters horticultural, died June 27, at her summer home in Ocean Grove, N. J. Mrs. Craig had been in feeble health for some time from heart trouble, but always benefited during her summer sojourn at the shore. They opened their house for the summer on June 23, and Mrs. Craig was stricken and passed away four days later. The funeral service was held at her late city residence on Saturday, July 1, at which the great quantities of flowers received showed the esteem in which she was held. Her husband and four children, William P., Robert A., Edna and Mary, survive her.

Mrs. Craig was well known to many older members of the trade throughout the country, who had met her at festive gatherings connected with conventions and other trade affairs, in which her husband had always taken such an active part. Mrs. Craig was a charming hostess and took great delight in the many social gatherings at her home in which members of the craft and their families took part. It was only on October 27, 1920, that Mr. and Mrs. Craig celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, which notable event was largely attended by their many friends in the business.

Alexander Whittet.

Alexander Whittet, for many years a well-known florist and gardener of Lowell, Mass., died of pneumonia at his home in that city, June 9, aged 79 years. Mr. Whittet was born in Perthshire, Scotland, and came to this country when quite young. We believe that for some years he was in charge of a fine private estate in Lowell. Eventually he established the firm of Whittet & Co., florists and landscape gardeners, which is now conducted by his son, William D. Whittet.

The late Mr. Whittet was well known to the writer as a skillful designer, and in landscape features he had a wide knowledge of trees and plants. Although a great worker, he was never too busy to be courteous and cheerful. He came to his grave in a full age, "like as a shock of corn cometh in its season."

POMONA, CALIF.—A. W. Pooley, florist at 253 West Second street, is planning to move to a new location on South Thomas street in the near future.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The Washelli Floral Co. has been chartered with a capital of $20,000. The directors are W. H. Hawkins, Wm. C. Viehmann and J. J. Martial.

TWIN FALLS, IDA.—Henry Jacky, of Walla Walla, Wash., is planning to open a flower shop in this city. He may buy an established business, or if a suitable location is not available, may purchase ground and erect a range.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.—The new Davis concern, in this section, is at Glendale, and is known as the Davis-Glendale Co. Cucumbers will be a leading crop in their plant, but in addition to this, they will probably force gladiolus and other bulbs.

AUTOMOBILE tire prices are demoralized.

A BROOKLYN man has a new patent for the use of fuel oil in greenhouse boilers. Electricity is used to run the blowers which spray the oil. It is claimed to save 50 per cent in heating cost.

CHILEAN government engineers have located beds of nitrate underlying 2,000 square kilometers where no nitrate was formerly known to exist. Deposits range from two to three feet in depth and contain 20 to 40 per cent of nitrate of soda.

"THERE is no honest business," says the venerable Dr. Lyman Abbott in his Outlook magazine, "in which a man can engage without serving the community." While serving his own interests the business man cannot avoid serving his community as well, for his business prospers according to the service he gives. Dr. Abbott adds: "This age is rightly called a commercial age, and commerce is an interchange of services."

THE Pittsburgh Despatch says striking coal miners, in desperate straits, are warning their leaders they will return to work if not provided with money, food and clothing for themselves and families.

Tariff Notes.

The senate, without debate on Saturday, July 1, adopted the rates of duty on horticultural products that had previously been recommended by the senate finance committee. These rates are considerably lower than those that had been previously adopted by the house of representatives. The paragraphs in question are as follows:

"Paragraph No. 751.—Tulip, lily and narcissus bulbs and lily of the valley pips, $2 per 1,000; hyacinth bulbs, $4 per 1,000; crocus bulbs, $1 per 1,000; all other bulbs and roots, root stocks, clumps, corms, tubers and herbaceous perennials, imported for horticultural purposes, 30 per centum ad valorem; cut flowers, fresh or preserved, 40 per centum ad valorem.

"Paragraph No. 752.—Seedlings and cuttings of manetti, multiflora, brier, rugosa and other rose stock, all the foregoing not more than three years old, $2 per 1,000; rose plants, budded, grafted or grown on their own roots, four cents; cuttings, seedlings and grafted or budded plants of other deciduous or evergreen ornamental trees, shrubs or vines, and all nursery or greenhouse stock, not specially provided for, 30 per centum ad valorem.

"Paragraph No. 753.—Seedlings, layers and cuttings of apple, cherry, pear, plum, quince and other fruit stocks, $2 per 1,000; grafted or budded fruit trees, cuttings and seedlings of grapes, currants, gooseberries or other fruit vines, plants or bushes, 30 per centum ad valorem.

"Paragraph No. 761.—Grass seeds: Alfalfa, four cents per pound; alsike clover, four cents per pound; crimson clover, one cent per pound; red clover, four cents per pound; white clover, three cents per pound; clover, not specially provided for, two cents per pound; millet, one cent per pound; timothy, two cents per pound; hairy vetch, two cents per pound; spring vetch, one cent per pound; all other grass seeds, not specially provided for, two cents per pound; Provided, That no allowance shall be made for dirt or other impurities in seed provided for in this paragraph."

On Saturday it was decided to postpone action on paragraph 762 of the tariff bill covering other garden and field seeds.

The seed rates are materially higher than the rates adopted by the house of representatives. Whether or not these rates will prevail when the bill is sent to conference, as it is called at the capitol, when representatives of the senate and of the house meet to iron out the differences that will have arisen as a result of the changes made by the senate in the rates previously adopted by the house, cannot be foretold.

I have learned that the prospects for the passage of the tariff bill by August 15 are good. It will take several weeks to bring about an agreement between the two branches of congress, but the bill should reach the president for his signature some time in September. This information is based on statements made to me by prominent senators.

Plant Imports by Mail.

SPECIAL PERMIT AUTHORIZED.

Decision to permit the use of the mails in the importation of plants and seeds under special permits, Regulation 14, Quarantine No. 37, has been reached by the federal horticultural board of the United States Department of Agriculture. Heretofore, importations of plants for propagation, except field, vegetable and flower seeds, and importations made by the department were permitted only by express or freight.

Importations made under special permit necessarily are addressed to the board either at Washington or at San Francisco, and pass through the inspection offices of the board at these points, where they are inspected and safeguarded. In view of this, it was believed to be safe and desirable to extend the privilege of importation through the mails to such shipments.

Permission for using the mails in this way will hereafter be authorized on request, when warranted by the nature and quantity of the proposed shipment. The importer will be obliged to provide merely for customs clearance either at Washington or San Francisco, in addition to obtaining the permission of the board.

As hitherto, the use of the mails is not authorized for the commercial or other importation under ordinary permits of plants and seeds provided for in Regulations 3 and 15 of the quarantine.

Growing Fruits for Table Decorations.

A report from Paris states that serving fruit at dinner on miniature trees on which it is grown has made its debut. French growers are now offering these trees two feet in height, each bearing 24 plums or pears.

These and other forced fruits in pots and tubs, may find a place as an added feature of elaborate dinner table decorations in this country. Pineapples in fruit, and well trained grape vines, bearing luscious bunches of fruit, have for years past been features of dinner and luncheon table decorations, by Samuel Murray, the well-known florist of Kansas City, Mo., and vice-president of the Society of American Florists. Ripe pineapples, in addition to their decorative effect, fill the room with a most delightful fragrance. Both fruits are served as dessert in the last course.

Wm. K. Harris, of Philadelphia, Pa., has for many years made a specialty of fruiting pineapples and orange trees for decorative work.

STOCK IN BETTER SUPPLY.

Generally fair days, with moderately cool nights, following the heavy rains previously reported, brought in a much larger and we might say better supply of stock for the last week of June. The supply of roses kept increasing, and there were good flowers, considering the season. Carnations, too, although they get smaller, when seen in a mass show up well, as the pinks have good color. The sweet peas had somewhat recovered from the pounding they got from the heavy rains, and a limited supply of fair stock came in. But with the advantage of a better supply of stock the demand fell off and lower prices were inevitable. What may be called the wedding and commencement season is about ended for this year.

ABOUT THE CITY.

Frank Edgar, a son of the late W. W. Edgar, started for himself in plant growing about 12 years ago. Calling recently at his range that comprises 35,000 square feet of glass and is located on the Trapelo road, Waltham, we found an excellent stock of plants being grown. Particularly noteworthy was a fine lot of cyclamens in large and medium sized pots. Rose plants, hydrangeas, rubber plants and ferns were also in quantity. Houses that have been cleared of plants are now planted with chrysanthemums. Mr. Edgar is a young man of pleasing personality and address and has many friends in the trade.

Over in Somerville they have been celebrating their fiftieth anniversary, and many homes and places of business were gaily decorated with the national colors. Of course everybody knows or ought to know that Somerville is much older than that. On one of its hills there stands a great stone castle or fort that bears the marks of age. This celebration is on account of Somerville having become an independent city.

Nixon Waterman writes in the Boston Traveler as follows: "Another reason why some of our good people are opposed to making the Ox-Eye daisy our national flower is the information that it is not a native American at all, but is from Europe. The fact that it has become naturalized as a weed under the high sounding name of Chrysanthemum leucanthemum doesn't make it a whit nearer to being a full-blooded Yankee."

An attractive and interesting piece of work is to be seen in the Public garden at the front of the Washington statue. It is a representation of the seal of the city of Boston, arranged with the various well-known plants that are used for such purposes. The bed is oval shaped and its greatest diameter is nearly 25 feet. It was arranged in honor of the National Educational Association, which holds its convention here at this writing.

Alfred R. Hudson, salesman for the W. H. Elliott & Sons Co., in the Co-operative Market, is receiving good Columbia, Premier, Butterfly and Pilgrim roses from the company's range at Medbury, N. H. The Brighton range is making a heavy cut of Asparagus plumosus nanus and Sprengeri.

H. H. Bartsch, manager for the W. W. Edgar Company, of Waverly, is showing many good features in plants. He states that their shipping trade has been good.

The Montgomery Company, of Haddley, is sending to their salesmen in the Flower Exchange fine stocks of Premier, Columbia and Pilgrim roses.

The Copley Florist (N. Fishelson, Inc.) is showing good decorative work in boxes of flowering plants arranged along the front and at the entrance of the shop. There are also fine window decorations, with orchids, gladioli and other flowers on a background of palms and ferns.

Wax Brothers, 44 Temple court, are showing exceptionally fine window decorations in water lilies and a great variety of other seasonal flowers and plants. Excellent gladioli and delphinium were included in the display.

Mrs. Jennie W. Rogers, who is active in the retail business at 141 Summer street, states that they have had a good season. Being near the South station, they secure considerable out-of-town trade.

Lester F. Comley, son of Henry R. Comley, who has been with Ratcliffe & Tanner, Richmond, Va., for the past year, is expected to spend his vacation at home.

Pierce Brothers, of Waltham, recently had some glass broken by a hailstorm, but at that they came off fortunately. They are now making a good cut of Columbia roses.

At the Houghton-Young Co.'s store, Park and Tremont streets, we noticed good features and evidence of activity.

Visitors: Roman J. Irwin and H. Langjahr, New York.

At John H. Gartland's, 21 Union square, Somerville, we recently noticed excellent design work.

R. C. Harris has a neat retail store at 309 Somerville avenue, Somerville.

Coal Warning.

Central and northwestern states face an almost certain coal car famine this fall and winter.

This message, emanating from various sources, was broadcast to coal consumers June 26 with the added warning that the longer the strike lasts the greater the car famine would be and the greater the chance that coal prices would advance.

These predictions, made by Chicago coal retailers and railway authorities, are based on the small tonnage of coal now moving on the railroads and the fact that comparatively little of next winter's coal supply has been binned.

Retailers and railway men pointed to figures disclosing that the movement of coal to Chicago this May and June was from 50,000 to 100,000 carloads a week less than for the corresponding period last year. This is less than 50 per cent of normal.

It was pointed out that immediately the strike shall have been concluded, there would ensue demand for coal. Railway tonnage would jump 100,000 carloads a week, bringing with it traffic congestion and a certain shortage of cars.

Coupled with the prediction of a car famine was the announcement by Marshall E. Keig, vice-president of the Consumers' Coal Co., the largest buyer of retail coal in Chicago, that the company's prices for certain grades of soft coal would be advanced July 1 and that all chances for cheaper coal for this year had departed.

The basis on which coal retailers were doing business as the result of their negotiations with Secretary Hoover also was made public yesterday for the first time. This included the agreement by which the retailers are to sell all coal at a cost plus a reasonable handling charge. It also allows coal dealers to base their retail prices on the average cost of coal produced.

"The strike has continued longer than any one predicted," Mr. Keig said in his statement. "On April 1 the retailer advised the public to put in half the winter's supply of fuel. Little coal was sold and as a result of the strike the price has gone up $1 a ton. Had it not been for the agreement many dealers would be charging more than $9 a ton for Pocahontas mine run coal.

Mention the American Florist when writing

"I do not want to give advice, but if I were a householder in the market for coal, I would buy all my winter's supply now. In the case of anthracite, there is so little chance of obtaining hard coal that I would buy substitutes immediately—Chicago Tribune, June 27.

STOCK IS IN GOOD SUPPLY.

Stock is in good supply, and there is no shortage in any line, although at times some items clean up completely. Roses are very plentiful but are selling well, and while there are more than enough to go around, there is no great surplus to speak of. Carnations are about done, but there are a few good flowers still available. Sweet peas are arriving in fair condition. Gladioli are more plentiful, but continue to clean up nicely at good prices, although the market is weaker at this writing than it was last week. They are selling all the way down from $4 to $10 per 100, with choice stock obtainable in some varieties. Peonies are quite a factor in the market and find ready buyers, with prices ranging from $5 to $8 per 100. Asters have made their appearance and are disposed of almost as soon as they are unpacked. Easter lilies are obtainable at a few of the stores, and there is a good supply of candidums being offered. Lily of the valley is in large enough supply to meet the demand, and the same holds true for orchids. Daisies, strawflowers, calendulas, delphiniums, candytuft, feverfew, statice, larkspur, gypsophila, gaillardia, phlox, coreopsis stocks, cornflowers and all other indoor and outdoor stock is obtainable. Greens are in good supply everywhere, including miscellaneous items the gatherers of wild flowers are bringing in. Business has been good the past week, with a strong demand for both wedding and funeral flowers. The Small funeral called for heavy offerings of stock in this market the early part of last week, when practically every one of the leading retailers had orders to fill.

NOTES.

Emil Reichling, formerly superintendent of the Peter Reinberg greenhouses, renewed old acquaintances here last week. He is located at Los Angeles, Calif., and his mission here was to deliver a car of goats, the second trip of the kind he has made within the past two years.

There were 32 automobile loads of flowers at the Small funeral at Kankakee, June 29, representing 1,700 designs at an estimated cost of not less than $25,000.

Roy A. Berg and wife leave July 8 with Dr. Klandt and wife in their new Cadillac for the Black Hills, where they will spend their vacation.

Henry Kruchten, who was formerly in the florist business on Lincoln avenue, died at Kankakee, July 3. The funeral will be held July 7 from his daughter's home, 2457 Ainslee street, at 9 a. m., to St. Mathias' church, with interment at St. Henry's cemetery. He is survived by his wife and three children, Mrs. Ida Bauer, Mayme and Ida Kruchten. He is a brother of Nic. Kruchten, well-known grower, and an uncle of John and Henry Kruchten, wholesalers.

John M. Weiland, son of the well known florist at Evanston, has purchased the Globe Greenhouses at 5315 West Madison street, taking possession July 1. The entire place will be remodeled and placed in tip-top shape. H. C. Wulbrand who sold out to Mr. Weiland has built a summer home at Twin Lakes and will spend the winters in Florida. The trade is sorry to lose the Wulbrands but its best wishes follow them where ever they go.

Sam Pearce has sold his greenhouse plant and four acres of land to the E. C. Amling Co., the price being reported at $50,000. Mr. Pearce will retire from business, the immediate cause of selling being his severe attack of illness last spring. With his two sons, Samuel A. and George E., he will make an extended European trip, sailing for England on the S. S. Baltic, July 8.

Joseph Kohout, of Libertyville, is incorporating his business for $100,000, and is building a power house to care for 250,000 feet of glass. Mr. Kohout grows exceptionally good roses, and the output of his range is sold through the Joseph Foerster Co. He just completed one Lord & Burnham house and is building another.

Mrs. C. E. De Wever, of Clayton, Mo., who with her daughter Rose was visiting relatives here, returned home last week. Mrs. De Wever was formerly with Vaughan's Seed Store, this city, and well known here as Miss Jessie Ludlow.

James Friedl, 3538 West Twenty-sixth street, is back from a fishing trip to Pistakee Bay. Mr. Friedl says the fish are not biting, due probably to the hot weather, which drove them into deeper water.

Percy Jones, Inc., probably never handled so many ferns in seven days as last week, when a heavy supply of choice stock was moved to both the local and out-of-town trade.

Bassett & Washburn are handling an unusually large quantity of ferns this year and have made arrangements with several pickers to supply them all through the season.

John Poehlmann left July 2 with H. M. Alexander and wife on a 10-day vacation trip in the east, including stops at Buffalo, N. Y., and other principal cities.

R. E. Kurowski, of the John C. Moninger Co., is back from a fishing trip in northern Wisconsin, where the brook trout abound in the Thunder river, near Peshtigo.

THE DEMAND SLACKENS.

The demand for flowers has been rather quiet during the final week in June. Buying of roses, carnations, gladioli and sweet peas constituted the larger part of the business. With commencements over and social affairs at a minimum, excepting weddings, the demand is always slack. Weddings have been rather numerous and florists have shared in a pretty fair business from that source. Funerals have been rather numerous also, and this business has been good. July 4 is expected to stimulate trade only to a limited degree and causes little stir in the market. Roses are now the staple, as carnations will soon be over for some time. Premier, Columbia, Sunburst and Butterfly varieties are the ones on the market. Prices are unchanged from the previous week. Gladioli are selling well and the quality of the flowers this season is very good. Prices range from $2.50 to $4.00 per dozen. Sweet peas, especially those grown outside, are also in the market. Garden flowers are also selling fairly well. Pot plants are over for the time being and shrubbery and vines are also rather quiet.

NOTES.

Owing to the fact that the first Tuesday of July falls on a holiday, the regular meeting of the Flower Growers and Dealers' Association has been postponed until July 11. At that time a luncheon will be served and plans for the coming flower show to be held under the auspices of the association in November will be discussed. There is much sentiment for the show.

William Metzmaier, of Emil Metzmaier, on South Fourth street, who operates a large place, reports a good demand for seasonable flowers, although not as good as earlier in June. Growing conditions have been exceedingly good during the past few weeks and the supply of flowers is of excellent quality.

Walter Stephens, of S. F. Stephens & Son, florists at Greenlawn cemetery, reports a good demand for funeral work, which has been rather active during the last two weeks of June. His company is also engaged in bedding work, which is somewhat later than usual this season.

The Wilson Seed & Floral Co., on East Town street, reports good business during the closing days of June, despite the fact that it is the start of the usual dull summer period. Seed business is still fairly good and cut flowers are selling especially well.

T. J. Ludwig, the florist at 82 North High street, is having a good trade in roses, gladioli, carnations, sweet peas and seasonable garden flowers. The window is attractively trimmed, calling attention to these flowers.

Franck C. Viereck, the florist at 150 East State street, has been having a nice business during June. Garden flowers have been one of the big features at this place, with a good demand for carnations and gladioli.

Underwood Bros., at Fair avenue and Twenty-first street, are having a good demand for ferns and similar plants, which are their specialty.

J. W. L.

Pittsburgh.

DECIDED DECLINE IN BUSINESS.

While the demand last week used up all the available supply of good stock, still the market shows evidence of having entered the usual mid-summer dullness and for some time now it will remain that way, with an occasional spurt for funeral work, but during the summer the box trade in this section does not amount to anything. Last summer and fall the business was good, due to the return of the bodies of the boys who died in Europe during the world war, but this year there will be nothing of that kind and we will find it hard to equal last summer's total volume. The supply of roses has shortened up considerably, but the quality is good, with the exception of those shipped from a distance and they arrive in an open condition, due to the extreme heat. Some fine carnations are still to be seen, but the most of them are showing the effect of the warm weather and should be discarded. Lilies are in demand but the supply is limited, with the result that they are bringing fairly high prices. The supply of gladioli is increasing daily with some first class stock to be had, prices running anywhere from $6 to $10 per 100, according to variety and quality. Delphinium is still moving freely, but the offering is top-heavy and some has gone to waste. Outdoor sweet peas are arriving in quantity but the quality is poor, due to recent heavy rains. Garden flowers, such as gaillardia, coreopsis, larkspur, achillea, baby breath and fox glove are seen in quantity, but move out slowly. From all reports from the retail and wholesale houses, June business compares well with last year and, in some cases, shows an increase. In laying plans for next season everyone in this section is preparing for a banner year.

NOTES.

Wm. Turner, the smiling florist from Wilkesburg is spending his spare time this summer backing a semi-professional baseball team known as the William Turners. The team is making a record for themselves and will enter the elimination contests this fall to represent this district in the world's semi-pro series.

E. J. McCallum, president of the McCallum Co., is making arrangements to sail for Europe July 20. Mr. McCallum expects to be gone for about eight weeks and will visit France, Switzerland and Germany, combining business with pleasure.

DeForest Ludwig, of the E. C. Ludwig Floral Co., has been ill for several weeks, but we are glad to report that he is on the road to recovery. He is at present at a camp a few miles from Bradford, Pa.

The Florists' and Gardeners' Club held their regular monthly meeting Thursday, July 5, at which time arrangements were completed for the annual picnic to take place some time in August.

Randolph & McClements report having filled several large wedding decorations last week, which has kept their large force on the jump. The largest job of the week was in Youngstown, O.

Chas. Ulmer, of Mrs. E. A. Williams, Inc., has been ill for some time, but will soon be on the job again. Wm. Wampler has been helping out at the store during his absence.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—A. F. Barbee is building a conservatory 35x122 feet, Lord & Burnham construction.

EUGENE, ORE.—Roy Woodruff is installing a pumping plant for irrigation purposes in a new building he recently erected on his property for that purpose.

PEORIA, ILL.—Bruno Juergens and party, who left this city June 5 on a motor tour of the far west and Pacific coast, write from Los Angeles June 25, that they are having a fine time and will later proceed to Oregon and Washington, returning by way of Montana, the Dakotas, Minnesota and Iowa.

FLORISTS' ANNUAL PICNIC.

Elitch Gardens park was the scene, June 27, of the annual picnic of the Colorado florists. It was perhaps the largest gathering of the trade in the state, as there were over 500 florists and their families present. The programme for the day started at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon, when a picked baseball team of local florists played a team from Colorado Springs. It was the classiest exhibition of amateur ball witnessed in Denver this year, in spite of the fact that many of both teams have not had a baseball in their hands for years. E. R. Ripley, of Colorado Springs, was the star of the game, having two three-base hits to his credit, while Smith, of the local team, gave a splendid exhibition of pitching when he replaced Harlow in the seventh inning. The game was close all the way through and excitement ran high in the seventh and eighth innings after this city brought in two runs in the last half of the sixth inning, tying the score at 3-3. Harlow retired from the box and was replaced by Smith, who retired Colorado Springs in one-two-three order for the next three innings. During the last half of the ninth it looked as if the game might have to go an extra inning, as this city had two outs, with three men on bases. Smith then came to bat and on the second ball laid out a nice little bunt that brought in the winning run for the home team, the final score being Colorado Springs 3, Denver 4.

As an interlude between the ball game and supper a number of foot races were on the programme. The races and winners were as follows: Married men's race, won by Scott J. Thomas, of Denver; single men's race, R. M. Frazier, Colorado Springs; boys' race, Steve Burry, of Denver; little boys' race, Francis Sargent, of Denver; married ladies' race, Mrs. Charles Wilmore; single ladies' race, Miss Elinor Greer, of Denver; girls' race, Helen Burry, of the same city.

Despite the fact that the last race on the programme had only four entries, it was the most interesting event of the day, as it was a bald-headed men's race. It was won by Herbert Clausen.

Immediately after the races every one was called to the garden outside of the cafe. Here six large tables decorated with roses and carnations were set out and a fine menu was served.

The final feature of the programme was the evening performance of the Elitch Stock Company, which presented the popular play, "Three Wise Fools." Quite a number of the younger folks also enjoyed the excellent music and dance floor.

During the morning many of the visitors who had arrived early made a tour of inspection of several of the local greenhouses. Among the visitors were delegations from Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Ft. Morgan, Loveland, Ft. Collins and Greeley. W. J. Baker, of Baker Bros., Ft. Worth, Tex., was also a visitor. The committee in charge consisted of N. A. Benson, Emil Glauber, Harry Harlow, L. D. Grimes, Charles Meyers and Ben Boldt.

Cleveland Horticultural Society.

The Cleveland Horticultural Society made its first monthly trip of the summer, June 22. The weather conditions were ideal, about 50 of the members making the trip in automobiles, starting from the estate of F. F. Prentice, Mayfield road, at 10 a. m.

R. P. Brydon, superintendent for F. F. Prentice, welcomed the guests and showed them over the extensively landscaped grounds. The wonderful masses of Japanese irises were much admired, as also were the formal gardens. The greenhouses were visited, where everything was found growing in perfect condition, the French hydrangeas and lilies being among the main attractions.

The estate of J. L. Severance was next visited. A. Brown, superintendent, led the members through the greenhouses, where some beautiful specimen ferns were seen. The other gardens on the estate were well worth viewing, all being in the best condition possible. The evergreen planting is beautifully done and caused a lot of admiration.

C. C. Bolton's estate was the next stop, where Superintendent Knapp showed the members the rose and formal gardens. F. E. Drury's estate at Gates Mills was next taken in, Mr. Francis, superintendent, conducting the way through the greenhouses, where all stock for fall was coming along in fine shape. A walk through the vegetable and terraced rose gardens was most enjoyable.

A drive was made along the river road to Chagrin Falls, O., to the estate of E. S. Burke, where Mr. Fisher welcomed the society, serving hot coffee and cold drinks to go with the lunches that had been brought along. The new range of glass was inspected, where the stock had gotten a good start and was growing nicely. A trip over the estate, covering almost five miles, was most interesting. The natural planting which has been done in the past few years looks as if it had always been there.

The last stop was W. T. White's estate, where the formal gardens were viewed with much interest. The members then departed their various ways, all well satisfied with what they had seen and heard during the day, and looking forward to next month's trip to the nurseries at Painesville, O.

ST. LOUIS DISTRICT MEETING, JULY 17-18.

The mid-summer meeting of the St. Louis District of the National Flower Growers' Association will be held at Rock Island, Ill., July 17-18, with headquarters at the Harper house. An excellent programme has been prepared for the occasion, including many entertainment features. The executive committee, of which W. A. Amling, Pana, Ill., is chairman, will hold a session Monday morning at 10 o'clock. At 11 a. m. the pot plant growers, cut flower growers, purchasing, auditing and membership committees will meet to prepare their reports for the general meeting in the afternoon.

The regular meeting will convene promptly at 2 p. m., when Mayor Schriver, of Rock Island, will welcome the delegates to the city, President W. A. Amling responding. Following the reports of Secretary J. J. Beneke, of St. Louis, Mo., and Treasurer W. A. Rowe, of Kirkwood, Mo., an address of unusual interest will be presented by Dr. P. A. Lehenbauer, of the University of Illinois, on "More About Fertilizers for Greenhouse Soils." After the reports of the executive, auditing and entertainment committees have been rendered the first session will adjourn.

The evening session will open promptly at 8 o'clock, with an address on "The Value of Pulling Together," by Oliver T. Davenport, Springfield, Ill. Reports and discussions of the pot plant, retail growers, purchasing and cut flower growers' committees will take place at this time. The concluding feature of the meeting will be a round table talk for the good of the district, led by J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, Ill.

Tuesday at 8 a. m. there will be a local meeting and conference of the Florists' Telegraph Delivery Association, in charge of Mr. Ammann, F. T. D. field manager, to which all are invited, as some very important facts concerning the association are to be brought out at this time. After adjournment the members will be the guests of the Tri-City Florists' Club and the district entertainment committee.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—Frank Harder will continue the business of Rienow & Harder, Mr. Rienow withdrawing.

Be sure that the name MEYER is on every spool of green Florists thread that you are buying, and you will get the original and best green Florists thread on the market. A great many of the salesmen on the road and the Florists' supply houses are substituting a cheap and inferior green Florists thread to take the place of the Meyer Green Silkline and Florists' thread.

Therefore, if you cannot get the real article send the goods back and order direct from the manufacturer and you will get the best. Guaranteed two ounces of actual thread to the spool, 16 ounces to the pound.

STOCK SHORTENING UP RAPIDLY.

A great change has come over the market; from one of great abundance it changed rapidly to a most scanty supply, owing partly to weather conditions, continuous rains beating down the outside stock and the greenhouse renewals that always shorten production at this time. With all the rose houses that have gone into their summer resting spell, there is still a fair supply in the smaller sizes but not nearly enough of high grade stock. As most of the call now is for funeral work, white roses are much in demand and any high class stock brings fancy prices. On account of the extremely hot weather early in June roses that were timed for this period have played out. The best kinds now are Mrs. Chas. Russell, Columbia, Double White Killarney, and Little Sweetheart which is always up to standard. There is still a limited supply of American Beauty which though not up to anything like quality still holds its own in the demand. Gladioli are plentiful and for outside stock, of splendid quality, the first selection bringing very good money. The first asters have made their appearance; it will be a couple of weeks yet before they become a factor. There has been a good supply of Easter lilies which are, so to speak, weather-proof and owing to the general scarcity have sold well. Fifteen dollars is now the price. There has for some reason been a big demand for lily of the valley the market cleaning up every day. While cattleyas are scarce some dealers appear to be able to supply their customers at prices from $1.25 to $1.50 each. Sweet peas that show summer quality are in good demand, but much of the stock grades very low. On the whole the market with its limited supply is in what might

A NEW VENTURE.

Joseph Goetter whom it was stated some time ago in these columns had purchased land at Willow Grove on which to erect a range of greenhouses has made a contract with the Metropolitan Material Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., for three houses, each 35x300 feet. These are now in course of construction and will be finished in time for planting with carnations of which Mr. Goetter has a fine stock coming on. He is one of the best growers sending stock to this market. For the past three years he has been using the Emil Lecker houses at Lansdowne, which he had leased and although in a run down condition, Mr. Goetter had produced stock with the best of them. His specialty is carnations with which plants he has always had wonderful success.

NOTES.

Mrs. Robert Craig died June 27 at Ocean Grove, N. J. The sympathy of the trade goes out to Robert Craig and family in their great bereavement. Mrs. Craig was always active in festive affairs connected with visiting bodies of florists and a most agreeable hostess at the frequent social gatherings in her own home, in which so many of the local craft participated. See obituary elsewhere in this issue.

Frederick Berger who is adding to his place at Arlington, has removed two houses from the Wm. Wunder range at Pittsville, which had to give way to city encroachment in laying out a new street. Although these structures had done duty for quite a while they were still in good condition, which proves that with good care frame greenhouses will give almost a lifetime service.

The Robert Craig Co. are preparing for an elaborate display of their quality stock at the Society of American Florists' trade exhibit. Their large houses filled with cyclamen are a picture, the plants being well advanced for the season. A large quantity are being grown in small pots to insure well budded plants with small balls of earth for basket work.

Emil F. Leiker, Lansdowne, who became discouraged with the business because of being frozen out during the war and who leased his place to Joseph Goetter for three years, is going to resume business at his old stand and home. Mr. Leiker's carnations were always first choice in the market and his friends all say he will be sure to come back.

The Leo Niessen Co. reports a strong call the past week owing to better business than usual for the season and a shortage of stock due mainly to weather conditions. Lily of the valley and cat-tleysas were the first items in many orders. Mrs. Chas. Russell, Columbia roses and Easter lilies are quantity stocks.

William Wunder whose greenhouse establishment was erected many years ago when he was some distance out in the country has in common with many in the trade had the city so encroach on him that a street is now to be run through the property, two houses having to be torn down to make way for it.

The baseball schedule of the Florists' League is out. The Leo Niessen Co. coming in makes a full eight club circuit. It will be much the most pretentious set of games ever played by the trade of this city and all concerned look forward to the opening, July 6, with much pleasure.

Manager Kennedy of the Philadelphia Growers' Cut Flower Market reports a strong demand for roses the past week. Double White Killarney, Columbia and Premier, and lily of the valley are leading stocks.

Charles H. Grakelow stopped off in Chicago on his return from the Shriner's trip to the coast and spent a few hours with Paul Klingsporn and other friends in that western flower market center.

Chas. H. Grakelow reports an unusual number of weddings since Easter. His telegraph business has grown so that it forms almost a department of itself.

George Aeugle is improving, having left the hospital to recuperate at his home. A good long rest and a trip to the sea shore is contemplated.

SLIGHT ADVANCE IN PRICES.

Most of the growers are off crop on many items, particularly roses and carnations, consequently prices have advanced somewhat. No. 1 roses are bringing 12 to 14 cents, especially Columbia, Butterfly, Ophelia and My Maryland. Other grades range from two to 12 cents. Lilies are holding their quality well and carnations are obtainable at $1 to $4 per 100. The first of the asters are of rather poor quality. The market is glutted with gladioli, which brings 50 cents to $1.25 per one dozen spikes. Other miscellaneous, seasonable offerings include feverfew, gypsophila, centaureas, smilax, gardenias and lily of the valley.

July 3.—The boomlet that inflated prices for a few days last week has subsided and the market is in a sluggish condition, with plenty of stock. Hot and humid weather is bringing in many open roses. The supply of gladioli has greatly increased. Cattelya offerings are light and prices have advanced. Easter lilies are not plentiful and prices firm. A heavy stock of lily of the valley is hard to move.

NOTES.

A headline on the last page of the Sun of June 28 announcing "Beauty is sold by brokers," did not refer to any race horse or oil stock of that name. Rather it was the simple tale of a newspaper scout who hunted through the wholesale flower market when gypsophila had an off day. "It was standing in buckets all over the place," he writes, but he did not say the "brokers" were booking any orders for it. On the contrary, "they were looking mournfully at it." He found out that the market was started a generation ago at the foot of East Thirty-fourth street and by the judicious use of the words, posies, bouquets, and floral horseshoe, the reporter preserves the simplicity of the market's humble beginning. He further states: "Perhaps an outsider can enlighten us; it seems that there is a florist on Staten Island who does a bigger business than anyone on Broadway or Fifth avenue. Also Brooklyn people will buy flowers so long as they are fresh and beautiful and fragrant." At present flowers in the Bronx mean just roses and carnations but he sees improvement and perhaps in time "the people of that borough may even buy gypsophila."

Along Tenth avenue on a recent June day between showers a little girl and a cat were playing hide and seek in the second story front of a tenement. The child would dash to a window clutching eagerly at the air where she expected to find the cat, but that wise animal had glided along the cornice and was posted at the other window, waiting for the next move. This natural bit of play was a relief to watch after looking at the flower shops along Tenth avenue, where even the sign of a cut flower company is contradicted by the window display of artificial flowers made up in pillows and other designs.

Max Schling gave a dinner to those attending his lectures on the artistic side of the florist business at the Great Northern hotel, Fifth avenue at 57th street, on the evening of June 30. As arrangements had not been made for more than 150 guests, many who would liked to have attended were disappointed. Chas. H. Grakelow, who is expected to be in the running for the next mayor of Philadelphia, Pa., and Roman J. Irwin, of the Florists' Club, were among those present. Nearly 40 states were represented at the gathering.

Flower shops on Eighth avenue are as far apart as milestones. There is one below Twenty-third street where fresh carnup is sold. Lovers of ferns and dracaenas can select from a well grown stock there. Tradescantia or Wandering Jew seems to be a favorite in this neighborhood. The plants seen in the window have not been in long enough to become overgrown.

The following are attending Max Schling's school of floral arrangement: M. Rhoades, of Williamsport, Pa.; H. L. Phillips and G. H. Dove, of Roanoke, Va., and E. E. White, Bluefield, Va., with O'Fallon, Florist, Roanoke, Va.

Visitors: H. A. Demeranville, vice-president of the Minge Floral Co., Inc., Mobile, Ala.; Obie F. Shelnutt, Columbus, Ga.; Mrs. C. Quadland, North Adams, Mass.

SUMMER DULLNESS DEPRESSING.

The usual summer depression, after the busy month of June, with its graduations and weddings, is upon us and business is practically at a standstill. The very high prices that prevailed for several weeks on all stock has taken a great slump, for roses especially the market having dropped out entirely. Stock that last week was at a premium, is now going begging. Carnations are poor and about done for this season. Gladioli are coming in and meet ready sale, what few good ones there are. Sweet peas are poor, and batchelor buttons for buttonholes sell well. Daisies, delphinium, gypsophila and other outdoor flowers are selling slowly. Peonies are all finished, the season being the shortest in several years, lasting only nine days. At their height, a very hot spell hit this section and they bloomed at least two weeks earlier than they should, although they were out at a very welcome time and were all used as fast as they could be marketed. Asters every where are looking well, and there should be a good crop this year, unless something unforeseen happens.

NOTES.

Page Potter and Archie Aitken of the Colonial Flower Shop, had as their guests recently, Ex-Governor Beekman and a party of Republican leaders at their homes in Georgiaville.

MacNair Florist has stocked his fountain in his two Broad street stores with some of the finest and largest gold fish ever seen here.

Gene Appleton, of the Westminster Greenhouses, reports this as a banner year for outside work.

Johnson Bros. on Dorrance street have added a new car to their equipment.

The Biltmore Florist has a very pretty store and finds business good.

Gloucester, Mass.

All along the road from Boston, Mass., to this city there are interesting views. One crosses great stretches of marsh, overgrown at this season with the salt sege grass and intersected with little creeks where the tides ebb and flow. Glimpses of the seacoast and little dots of islands are noteworthy. Passing through the thriving cities of Lynn and Salem, we reach Prides, Beverly Farms, Manchester and Magnolia, places that are noted for the summer residences of many people that are well known in the social, business and political life of this country. These towns have fine private estates, with good horticultural features.

ture is not neglected. S. Curtis' Sons have long been established here and maintain considerable glass area and an attractive garden, though as to the latter, the recent torrential rains gave them uneasiness as to its productiveness for this year, but on our visit the worst seemed to be over. They have a good local trade in plants and cut flowers.

William F. Barrington, 9 Procter street, near the heart of the city, has several good houses and makes a specialty of design work.

It was fish, not flowers, that put this city on the map of Massachusetts, and yet occasionally gets it on the front pages of the newspapers. Nevertheless this old place is not devoid of horticultural features. Like practically all the New England cities and towns, it has fine old trees, and in June one notes neat gardens and trellises of climbing roses.

The Sunset Flower Shop is a retail enterprise recently opened at 47 Main street, with Roy C. Peavey as manager. It seems to be doing a good business.

The Pulsifer Nurseries, C. F. Pulsifer, proprietor, 230 Washington street, does a landscape gardening business, cares for estates and furnishes fruit and ornamental trees.

BUSINESS IS SLUGGISH.

The market opened this week with a good show of strength which lasted a few days when prices tumbled down to real summer values. White roses, lily of the valley and orchids, which have been the leaders in price for the past month, followed on with other stock, and after midweek were selling proportionately as low as other flowers. The fact that the market was snappy at the beginning of the week was due solely to the demand from other markets, which were feeling a shortage. This situation was only temporary, as the demand fell off on Wednesday and the result was the local market immediately felt pressure and prices fell off from a half to three-quarters of what they were on Monday. The present outlook is for a poor week ahead. The supply will probably be away ahead of the demand, as business will be suspended to a great extent locally after July 4, which alone will force prices down as low as will be seen this summer, it is thought. Gladioli are coming in from the south and have fallen off in value from $1.50 to $2 per dozen to 50 and 75 cents per dozen.

French Bulbs.

French bulb jobbing importers in the United States have so far mainly failed to confirm their pending orders at the very high prices suggested by French exporters, varying from 300 to 350 francs. It is reported that if advances in values reported from those districts are maintained at present extravagant heights the United States will not use over 40 to 50 per cent of her needed supply. Only unscrupulous dealers, or those selling to cheap department store trade, will take on the 11-centimeter size, which is the one grade offered at low prices.

It is reported that certain Dutch dealers who are operating in the French district are accepting the very high prices, also buying some of the 11-centimeter grade and taking a gambler's risk of unloading their investment on this side at a profit. A larger number of exporting buyers on the ground are withholding their business, expecting the market must break. It is an even chance who makes the correct guess.

Safeguards in the Garden Seed Business.

Address By Leonard H. Vaughan, Chicago, Before the American Seed Trade Association, Chicago, June 21-23, 1922.

The last time I inflicted myself on the seed analysts and told you some of our many troubles, I didn't expect to appear again, anyway not so soon. A few week ago, however, Prof. Stone wrote me that President Olds, of the American Seed Trade Association had picked me out to try to tell you something of the inside workings and methods employed in the garden seed business, and I have promised Prof. Stone to keep the "troubles" end reduced to a minimum.

You can realize that in a few moments it would be impossible to give more than a mere general outline of methods and customs, and this I shall attempt to do, without much system or method, keeping under the subject of this paper, and basing my various remarks and illustrations on what I should consider conservative and safe lines of conducting the garden seed business in its different phases of original grower, contract grower, wholesaler and retailer.

The seedsman fulfills his duty and renders service for which he is entitled to recompense when he delivers to the seed consumer viable seeds that will produce under favorable conditions a merchantable crop of the specific variety which the consumer purchases—(repeat this). I will analyze this—by delivery of viable seeds. I distinguish between those seeds which have life only and those which have vitality enough to produce a crop. You will note then I say "produce under favorable conditions"—(I eliminate the word normal because normal is impossible to define. What would be normal environment unless favorable?) I use the word "merchantable crop," though this, perhaps, should be qualified by the words "on a good or favorable market," because on a glutted market sometimes no vegetable product is really merchantable. By "crop of the specific variety purchased," I mean an average uniform product of the particular variety sold such as might be expected from seed grown by or under the supervision of an experienced seed grower. Some varieties are known to be unfixed—hence this qualification. If the seed sold is purported to be select stock reselected, or stock seed for which an extra price over that for standard stock is paid, there is an added obligation on the seedsman's part to furnish a better than average uniformity and sometimes other qualities as earliness or precocity in season, size, shape, etc.

In the general routine of the seed business there may be four steps in distribution from the farm or plot on which seed is actually grown and saved until it reaches the hands of the consumer.

First is the actual grower.

Second is the contract grower who sells the large general seedsmen. The contract grower specializes in certain vegetables or flowers. He usually supplies farmers planting stocks (stock seeds) and contracts for the product generally at a fixed price for certain quality. The growing farmer is supposed, among other things, to return seed of good or satisfactory germination, free from weather damage and mechanical mixture in threshing.

Third is the wholesaler or jobbing seedsman. Such a seedsman renders a great service to the seed industry as a whole. Usually national in operation he acquires information on seed problems such as market demands, adaptability of varieties, methods of cultivation, etc., etc., much more quickly and thoroughly than is possible for growers with a limited area or territory for doing business. The jobber is also a pioneer in developing new seedsmen and outlets for the seed producers.

Fourth is the retailer, counter or mail order seedsmen. On the other hand, we have seedsmen who perform from one to all four of these various functions of distribution more or less efficiently and profitably.

STOCK SEED.

The first requisite for growing seed which will produce a "merchantable crop of a specific variety" is suitable stock seed. Stock seed is the extra selected mother seed, which is planted to produce commercial seed. The production of the proper kind of stock seed is expensive. To grow the highest type of stock seed a scientist is required—one who knows plant eugenics from the practical as well as scientific and theoretical side and he must also be a trained seedsmen who knows methods of both seed and crop production, and seed marketing. I am not going to attempt here even the smallest sort of a brochure on plant breeding. I deem it sufficient to say while, theoretically, the more of efficient skill and labor spent on selection of plant breeding, the better the stock seed. In actual production one soon strikes that inexorable economic law of "diminishing returns."

We have instances in seed growing of the "plant breeder gone wild" with thousands of small dabs of individual plant selections, scattered over acres that would take a large corps of skilled men to observe and tabulate. Nearly all the better seed growers are well acquainted with and practice "line breeding" and besides understand the many idiosyncrasies of their particular crops, a knowledge of which is acquired only after years of experience, and usually at big expense. Almost every crop requires special methods and practices to produce the better stock seed and in many cases this variation of selection method applies to different varieties of the same vegetable. Varieties differ as to their variability, some are better "fixed" than others. Those more variable require special care—environment of both stock seed and the commercial crop are important factors. The latest pathological work of producing disease resistant strains finds the up-to-date seed grower fully awake and cognizant of its possibilities.

THE SEED FARMER.

Seed farmers or actual growers make up two classes. The first furnishes his own stock seed, and sells the product of his farm to the seed trade under his own name. For the second, stock seed is furnished by someone else—the contract grower—who in turn sells his seed raised assuming what might in a very liberal sense be termed its parentage. The first class is usually individuals, firms or corporations of some means, properly prepared land at the right time and sufficiently isolated to prevent cross pollination through wind or insects, with other varieties. He properly tends and rogues the growing crops, pulls out the visible undesirables off plants and after ripening harvests the same with the minimum amount of weather damage as the season permits and with proper harvesting and threshing machinery and care so that any possible chance of mechanical mixture with other seeds is eliminated. In the case of biennials there is the selection of good plants or roots and the rejection of the rogues and the proper storing, pitting and planting out of the same, all of which sounds more or less simple in the saying but is very, very difficult in performance. If the original seed grower does not produce good seed, of course, it is impossible for the contract seed grower, the wholesaler, or the retailer, in turn, to function properly. I shall cite a number of the places where the grower sometimes falls down:

First, and most often, improper stock seed, poor stock seed, perhaps.

A—Off grade on selection. This may be due to carelessness and also ignorance as to proper methods of selection but in my limited experience is generally the result of taking a chance with untested commercial seed to raise certain crops for which there has arisen an extraordinary or expected demand. The beginner usually has to take this chance, and here is the reason the old conservative seedsman gives exceedingly few, if any orders to the new grower. Depending, of course, on the species and specific variety, a good uniform stock not reselected each year runs "off" rapidly and will show sports from a small percentage to one where the original sort can hardly be recognized. The extreme war demand for all kinds of seed resulted in the planting of thousands of acres with unselected stock seed as all seedsmen can tell from bitter experience.

B—Unsuited for the environment where planted. This applies to particular crops only and must be determined by experience. I cite a few examples. California growers tell us French radish seed much used for stock seed is undesirable except to produce their own stock seed. A good European strain of certain lettuce must also be grown a season or two before being marketed. American asters, of perfect type in the United States will show center grown in Germany. Cabbage stocks for Washington must be selected to a smaller type than for growth in Long Island. The damage of moving corn and the resulting change in the type and season is well recognized. It would seem that disease-resistant strains of plants must be bred in those sections or localities where such diseases are prevalent.

The second place where the grower falls down is on the proper land and proper preparation. Even when the right kind of stock seed is used the labor of the seed grower has only begun. Under this head I am going to include volunteer crops. Volunteer crops have

BURPEE'S ORANGE

Burpee's New Winter Flowering Sweet Pea

For many years we had this color in view in our hybridizing work; for long it eluded us but at last we were successful, BURPEE'S ORANGE even exceeding in beauty our most sanguine ambition.

BURPEE'S ORANGE is in every way distinct from other so-called orange varieties. There is no trace of pink or orange-pink in either standard or wings. It is a true glowing orange self, practically the shade of a bright ripe orange.

The rich glistening color compels attention in any light, but at night, under artificial light, it is indeed outstanding. BURPEE'S ORANGE has been proclaimed by experts and the press alike as being the greatest advance of many years in this type of Sweet Pea. In the opinion of many the vase of BURPEE'S ORANGE included in our Gold Medal Exhibit at The National Flower Show at Indianapolis, March 1922, was the finest and most outstanding vase of Sweet Peas in the exhibition.

BURPEE'S ORANGE is a free grower, with flowers of largest size produced in threes and fours on stems great length. The standard and wings are charmingly waved or crinkled. It is indeed a pleasure and also a privilege to be in a position to offer our friends and customers a variety of such merit—a variety of which we can all feel proud. BURPEE'S ORANGE was awarded certificate of Merit at the International Flower Show, New York, March, 1921.

Trade packet, \$1.00; oz., \$5.00; $\frac{1}{4}$ lb., \$15.00; lb., \$50.00.

Burpee's Orange was greatly admired when exhibited this spring at The International Flower Show in New York. Some of the largest Sweet Pea growers who have seen Burpee's Orange on exhibition share our belief and assure us that the demand for Burpee's Orange will be tremendous.

is seemingly obvious but we seedsmen are always learning. Not a year goes by but we have numerous examples of such mixtures. The small percentage of mixture of wild radish and off colors in California grown radish is always a reminder, as is, too, the spotted grains nearly always found in sweet corn—the off colored onion bulbs in many stocks. Necessity, lack of land and difference of opinion as to safe distances, lead the grower to take chances many times, with regret later. A very perfect dark red stock of table beet recently planted too close to mangel, lost its identity completely the following year. The mangel color evidently being dominant so marked the progeny that practically every specimen showed white rings and poor color as well as the mendalian percentage of mangels.

Fourth—Rogueing of the growing crop is always a benefit and many times essential. Many sorts can show as much as 10 per cent "offs" in the consumers crop when not rogued. Carelessness, false economy and too large acreages are causes for lack of rogueing. Rogueing or the lack of rogueing also occurs in the sorting of biennial roots, bulbs or plants, as beet, carrot, onion, parsnip, etc.

Fifth—The seed farmer often injures his crop at the last minute because he lacks proper machinery or equipment to harvest and take care of the ripened crop. Safeguards such as sheds, crates, sheets, a supply of special harvesting and threshing equipment are essential. Too often, for the lack of such, crops lie in the fields, exposed to bad and inclement weather and are damaged—irreparably in appearance and germination.

Sixth—Many times the seed farmer ruins good seed in cleaning and threshing operations. In the cleaning of melons and other vine seeds, tomato, pepper and the like, the same cleaning machinery is used for several varieties. If not watched with rigorous care these machines are fruitful sources of expensive and disastrous mixtures. The same chance for mixtures occurs in threshing machines used successively for several varieties of peas, beans, radish, etc.

These are a number of the examples of causes for poor seed against which the seed farmer must safeguard himself. We now pass on to contract growers.

CONTRACT GROWER.

After supplying the right kind of stock seed to his farmer growers the seedsmen should check up.

First—The type of farmer who is growing the seed. The contract grower who has a poor class of seed farmers, the chances are, is not delivering to his customers a good grade of seed.

Second—The ideal contractor knows the land on which his seed farmer is planting the crop and in case of crop liable to mixture from wind or insects, how the surrounding land is going to be planted so as to preserve isolation.

Third—The ideal contract farmer grower should inspect every one of his different contract fields and rogue them himself or check up the rogueing.

Fourth—The better contract grower has his farmers properly equipped with harvesting supplies and machinery to prevent loss from weather.

Fifth—The utmost care must be exercised to prevent mixture in cleaning and threshing. There are some very clever systems and methods of handling such cleaning and threshing machinery worked out after years of experience. There are, on the other hand, beginners and other seed contractors who, I might say, trust to luck. "It is better to be lucky than rich."

Sixth—Good storage facilities, dryers for use in off-seasons, latest cleaning machinery (cleaning in addition to the field cleaning about which I have spoken before); picking arrangements are nec-

Seventh — There are numerous chances for mechanical mixtures in storage, handling and cleaning. No novice can invent a semi-fool-proof system in a few months time. The system in vogue in the older establishments all vary somewhat but tend to accomplish the same double check throughout that many a severe bump has taught them is well worth the extra labor involved; and yet no one can claim a system that will absolutely prevent the damage from human error or carelessness.

With the wholesalers and retailers their most common acts which influence the quality of seed are:

A—Mechanical mixture or accidental substitution of one variety for another. The corrective method is, of course, a carefully worked out check system.

B—The blending of seed generally to bring up the germination test of a low lot by adding a quantity of higher test stock. (A conservative safeguard might be—Don't blend.)

C—The substitution of what the wholesaler or retailer considers identical to or similar to a variety ordered—he sometimes guesses wrong.

D—The taking of a chance on low germinating seed—much more of a seed business can realize—especially temptation than any one out of the E—The poor storing of seeds where rapid deterioration takes place and seed is sold before the facts are known.

Everyone of these general fall-downs of the seed farmer, contract grower, wholesaler and retailer mentioned, occur time and time again. The wholesaler cannot prevent the mistakes that happen in the seed farmer's and contract grower's hands and vice-versa. In the chain of distribution each has his own proper duties and functions to perform to the best of his ability. The wholesaler and retailer to give their trade the better grade of seeds must buy from the seed producers who furnish them such stock.

The producing end, on the other hand, is many times blamed for errors in the distributing end and then further the ultimate consumer especially the amateur, wrongly, in at least nine times out of 10, blames the seedsman and seed for all of his failures. I could talk on this one point I mention almost indefinitely. I wish some of you could analyze with me the usual run of complaints in a retail mail order or counter seed store and check up on how few are really justifiable. I am confining myself to the facts of inferior quality seeds, however, and amateur complaints come under the head of troubles which I am eliminating as much as possible.

SAFEGUARDS.

Now for the four great safeguards in the seed business:

1—A trial ground. A person selling seeds is a seed merchant; not until he runs some kind of a trial ground is he a seedsman. A trial ground can tell us what we sell, how our stock compares with what others sell; what growers deliver us the goods for our money; what growers to avoid and what new varieties we should list.

2—Inspections of growing crops, both seed and the actual market crops produced from seedsmen's products. Included in this might be visits to the other seedsmen and their trial grounds and institutions to study other methods and systems. The expense account involved in such traveling is returned manyfold in necessary information which can be had in no other way.

3—A careful and rapid double check system of keeping stock, filling and re-cording orders. Many seedsmen will argue the importance of this safeguard. I am convinced that no real successful seed business can be run without an efficient system for such records.

4—And last is the seed laboratory. Last only because I want to fit this part in with a section of this paper written by the seed analyst of our firm, Miss Leota Thurlimann. I thought that the problems of a commercial garden seed laboratory would be of especial interest to you analysts and under this head Miss Thurlimann has elaborated a little. At least 90 per cent of the seedsmen's complaints are on germination. The safeguard possibilities of the seed laboratory need no champion.

American Association of Nurserymen.

DETROIT CONVENTION, JUNE 28-30.

The forty-seventh annual convention of the American Association of Nurserymen, held at Detroit, Mich., June 28-30, a preliminary account of which appeared in last week's issue, page 1194, was regarded by many of the 250 members attending as probably the most noteworthy of all. The scheduled programme, with some variations in order, was carried out in full. The addresses presented covered the salient features of both the growers and dealers and were ably handled by their authors. President Cashman's address at the opening session, Wednesday morning, engaged the rapt attention of the members, and he was highly complimented for having so ably covered the subject that he as president was expected to handle.

Paul C. Lindley, as chairman of the vigilance committee, required portions of two sessions to fully present his exhaustive report, which was given the closest attention by the members present. He scathingly rebuked those nurserymen and dealers who use questionable methods of advertising, grading, etc., which met with hearty approval. He surprised the delegates by citing many examples of unethical practices throughout the country. The committee, he said, discourages the use of postal cards announcing nurserymen's prices to dealers. Harlan P. Kelsey's denunciation of the above practices was quite as vigorous.

The afternoon session was taken up entirely by committee reports. A. E. Nelson, of Chicago, chairman of the committee on nursery training in agricultural colleges, showed that considerable progress had been made. The University of Illinois had decided to establish a four-year course in nursery practice, and other colleges had signified their intention of giving greater scope to this branch of horticulture.

J. W. Hill, chairman of the obituary committee, announced the passing of the following: D. S. Lake, Shenandoah, Ia.; F. H. Stannard, Ottawa, Kans.; Peter Youngers, Geneva, Neb.; Samuel W. Crowell, Roseacres, Miss.; Clarence M. Wedge, Albert Lea, Minn., and H. J. Champion, Perry, O. A feeling tribute to each of the departed members was read by Mr. Hill, who asked for a resolution of condolence by standing and with bowed heads the members conveyed the respect of the convention.

THURSDAY MORNING SESSION.

At the opening of the Thursday morning session Prof. R. Kent Beattie, of the Federal Horticultural Board, presented a very able address on "Federal Control Restrictions; Their Application and Effect—Present and Future." His presentation of the work of his department was punctuated throughout by logical reasons for the activities of the federal board and a strong, unassailable defense of quarantine measure No. 37, which he stated operates to the direct benefit of nurserymen and protection of American grown products. He urged American nurserymen to have confidence in the department of the government that is making such successful efforts to protect their industry, declaring the enemies of the Federal Horticultural Board as actual enemies of nurserymen. He strongly appealed for the independence of American nurserymen and stated if novelties are required or desired from abroad, small quantities only should be imported and then grown here in sufficient quantities to meet the American demand. His address was received with marked respect, and it was evident that a favorable impression was made by his forceful and serious presentation of the operations of his department at Washington.

Harlan P. Kelsey's address was a vigorous contention for proper and universal trading and ethical practices by nurserymen and deplored the fact that there was good reason to complain of many of the reported evil practices of some in the trade.

Henry B. Chase, Chase, Ala., disclosed many apparent dangers in "What's Around the Corner?" and cautioned the trade to be prepared for a sharp decline in prices of trees far out of proportion to the cost of production.

Major P. F. O'Keefe, Boston, Mass., on "Advertising," commanded the closest interest by all present, covering the subject assigned to him with particular application to nurserymen and florists.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

James A. Young, of Aurora, Ill., author of the slogan, "Plan to Plant Another Tree," told of the difficulty, at the afternoon session, of the Illinois State Nurserymen's Association in searching for a suitable slogan. Five thousand suggestions were given the association's committee, and all of them rejected, and he and his committee finally coined the slogan that has become nation wide. Mr. Young enlisted the aid of the Kiwanis, Lion and Rotary Clubs, the Chicago Tribune later giving "Plan to Plant Another Tree" powerful support. Hundreds of daily and weekly newspapers have since given it publicity, and the benefits accruing to nurserymen are incalculable.

Prof. L. B. Scott, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, Washington, D. C., in speaking of the "Progress in Propagating American Fruit Seedlings by the Bureau of Plant Industry," stated that three different experiment stations in as many states, with a considerable acreage, had been established to make investigations. He found American-grown seedlings better than the foreign product. Roses, too, were being investigated to determine the best stocks for budding and grafting. Last year his bureau had been given an appropriation of $20,000, and Prof. Scott hoped that at least one-third more would be appropriated by congress for the ensuing year to better carry on the work.

Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, in a communication read at the session, asked for the appointment of a committee of three members to act in an advisory capacity with the Federal Horticultural Board. J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; M. R. Cashman, for his subject, "The Nurserymen's Mission in the Landscape Field," bringing out the great possibilities of profit to the trade in that line of endeavor. John Hall, of Detroit, a former secretary of the association, was presented to the convention by J. W. Hill, who spoke in high praise of Mr. Hall's many years of faithful and energetic work for the organization. Mr. Hall feelingly responded in appreciation of the applause he had received.

Owatonna, Minn., and Harlan P. Kelsey, Salem, Mass., were appointed for this important duty.

William Pitkin, Rochester, N. Y., complained of the operation of the quarantine against gooseberries and currants, which are not allowed to be shipped by the Federal Horticultural Board beyond a line just west of the Mississippi river, because of alleged danger to pine trees from blister rust. He hoped that the board would listen to reason in this matter, and a resolution was adopted in support of Mr. Pitkin's appeal.

The recommendation of the state vice presidents to hold the 1923 convention at Hot Springs, Ark., did not meet with the approval of the delegates. After much contention Chicago was finally decided upon as the next convention city. Robert Pyle, West Grove, Pa., who was elected vice president and declined the honor, invited the association to meet in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1926, when the Sesqui-Centennial Exposition will take place.

Lloyd C. Stark, Louisiana, Mo., made a strong appeal for the support of the American Pomological Society, asking for more members and encouragement in its great work beneficial to nurserymen.

A feeling of extreme optimism of the present and future of the business of nurserymen was freely expressed on all sides, and the formal proceedings seemed to distinctly maintain that sentiment. Seriousness marked the proceedings throughout, and even between sessions there appeared to be the total elimination of frivolity that so often obtains in similar gatherings, the banquet and dance Wednesday night being the only diversion till the work of the convention was completed on Friday at 2 o'clock, when the whole party was taken by auto to the Ford plant and other points of interest about the city.

The following officers will serve for the coming year: Paul C. Lindley, Pomona, N. C., president; Harlan P. Kelley, Salem, Mass., vice president; J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia., treasurer; Charles Sizemore, Louisiana, Mo., secretary; M. R. Cashman and William Flemmer, Jr., executive board.

American Plant Propagators' Association

DETROIT, MICH., MEETING, JUNE 29.

The annual meeting of the American Plant Propagators' Association was held in the Hotel Wolverine, Detroit, Mich., June 29. After routine business had been transacted the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

E. M. Sherman, president; J. A. Young, Aurora, Ill., vice-president; F. W. Van Oven, Naperville, Ill., secretary-treasurer; E. M. Jenkins, J. Cultra, O. E. Carr and Thos. W. MacBeth, executive committee.

Retail Nurserymen's Association.

DETROIT CONVENTION, JUNE 29.

The Retail Nurserymen's Association of the United States held its fourth annual meeting June 29. President E. M. Sherman, Charles City, Ia., in the chair. Considerable discussion relative to stock replacement took place, one firm stating that only 10 per cent of their output called for replacement which they considered a form of advertising.

Standardization was discussed in detail and a definite scale was recommended to the standardization committee of the American Association of Nurserymen. The method of tying bundles and labeling was also treated, the suggestions to be recommended to the above committee of the American association. There were 17 applicants for membership, all being received and elected. The salary of the secretary-treasurer was left to the board of directors to decide. Lloyd C. Stark, Louisiana, Mo., and J. Parker were appointed a committee to edit a booklet devoted to the education of all interested in the planting of trees.

All directors of last year were re-elected as follows: Geo. Marshall, L. J. Tucker, Madison, Wis.; E. M. Sherman, J. W. Pitkin, Rochester, N. Y., and Earl Needham, Highland, Mich. The meeting then adjourned.

Painesville Nurserymen's Picnic.

The annual nurserymen's community picnic was held at Township park, June 30, and was the largest and most successful ever held. Over 300 nurserymen and their families, with well filled baskets, began to gather at 1 p. m. at Storrs & Harrison Co. and the Farmly hotel, where ample conveyance was waiting to carry them to the park. Every hour until 6 o'clock this was repeated.

John H. Dayton, secretary of the Storrs & Harrison Co. gave the address of the day and welcomed the visitors who came from far and near. The main sport event was the baseball game between the married and single men which resulted in a victory for the former of 9 to 4. E. B. George was official umpire and strange as it may seem, not one disputed the umpire's decisions.

Other sports, such as the 100, 75 and 50 yard dash, 300 yard relay, clothes pin race, sun bonnet race, three legged race, ball throwing contest and the horse shoe pitching contest were features enjoyed by all. The Stop 4 chorus, which is composed of employees of the Storrs & Harrison Co. again showed their musical ability and sang many selections which kept the crowd in the very best of humor.

A bountiful supper was served at about 6:30 p. m. After supper, dancing was next on the programme, a special orchestra being on hand for the occasion. It was a reunion that will long be remembered by those who attended, everybody was care free and had the best time of their lives.
